Now, it said, U.S. authorities "hope to fool the American and world public, which is protesting against the serious violations of the Paris agreement on Vietnam by the U.S. and the Saigon administration, and demanding that they strictly respect and scrupulously implement all the provisions of the agreement.

"They also hope to whitewash the heinous crimes they and the Saigon administration have committed at the prisons in South Vietnam and to elude the return of civilian personnel under their illegal detention," Nhan Dan charged.

One Loud Boom

By BILL WINTER
Associated Press Writer

CINCINNATI, Ohio (AP)-"One loud boom, a scream and the building fell to pieces."

That was the description by Edward Cornett, a witness to an explosion Saturday night that left at least seven persons dead and destroyed three small buildings.

Firemen were still searching for possible victims on Sunday.

"We believe everyone is out," Fire Marshal Norman Wells said, "but we'll keep checking until we're sure."

The cause of the blast was not immediately determined, but Wells said it "probably was a natural gas explosion."

At least 15 persons were injured in the blast shortly before 9 p.m. in the low-income Over-the-Rhine section, about one mile north of downtown Cincinnati.

Three persons were hospitalized. Another 13 persons were treated and released.

Shattered were Clara & Al's Cafe and bar and apartments above it, a small apartment building behind the cafe, and a storefront church beside it.

Wells said one body was found on the sidewalk in front of the cafe; one was found in the rear apartment building; two others in the basement under the cafe; one behind a cold drink cooler in the cafe's bar area; and another in an apartment above the cafe.

Watergate Comm. Wants Haldeman

WASHINGTON—MEETS WITH SENATORS—Convicted Watergate conspirator James W. McCord, left, walks down a Capital corridor Wednesday as he arrived to answer questions by a special Senate investigation committee. WASHINGTON (AP)-Republican Sen. Lowell P. Weicker said Sunday he believes White House Chief of Staff H. R. Haldeman "knew what was going on" with the men and policies involved in the Watergate burglary.

He said it is "absolutely necessary" that Haldeman appear before the Senate Watergate investigating committee, of which Weicker is a member.

The Connecticut Republican also said one of the Watergate spies told him he had staked out offices of at least six senators, including Republicans Charles Percy and Jacob Javits.

And he said the same man, former FBI agent Alfred C. Baldwin, said the Watergate arrests last June 17 foiled plans by the bugging crew to break into the campaign headquarters of Sen. George McGovern and to tap the Miami convention telephones of Democratic Party Chairman Lawrence F. O'Brien and other top party officials.

DeVan L. Shumway, public affairs director for the Committee for the Re-election of the President, called Weicker's statements irresponsible and "inflammatory."

The answer is absolutely, categorically, undeniably no," Shumway said when asked if there was any truth to Weicker's assertion that Baldwin was ordered by the re-election committee to stake out the offices of members of Congress.

Baldwin was the man who listened to tapped telephone conversations of Democratic officials in their headquarters at the Watergate buildings, and who later testified against others in the case.

Weicker said Baldwin acted on orders of James W. McCord, convicted of burglary and wiretapping in the case. He said Baldwin watched comings and goings from the offices of Sens. Percy, R-Ill., Javits, R-N.Y., Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., Edmund Muskie, D-Maine, William Proxmire, D-Wis., Mike Gravel, D-Alaska; and Reps. Shirley Chisholm, D-N.Y. and Paul McCloskey, R-Calif.

Javits and Percy both said they were surprised to hear Nixon re-election agents had staked out their offices. Percy said his staff had suspected that someone had tapped his office telephone, but couldn't prove it.

Weicker spoke on the CBS television news program, "Face the Nation."

He said Haldeman was the key figure on both the White House staff and on the Committee for the Re-election of the President.

"I don't think its fair to point the finger at him and say, 'this is the man that's responsible,' Weicker said.

"All I'm saying is that when it came to personnel, he knew what was going on," Weicker said. "And there was nothing in the way of policies that was going on that he didn't know either."

Viet Clashes Continue

SAIGON (AP)-The siege of a South Vietnamese ranger camp ended its fifth week Sunday, several small clashes were reported in the Saigon region and seven civilians were killed in other attacks, government headquarters reported.

A communique said Communist gunners fired more than 300 rounds of artillery into the besieged Tong Le Chan ranger base 50 miles north of Saigon, wounding four South Vietnamese soldiers. The government said Communist sappers also attempted to break through the barbed wire perimeter of the base but were driven back without any Saigon casualties.

According to the Saigon command, the camp has been under siege since Feb. 26 and its defenders have suffered more than 100 casualties.

Government communiques have made no mention of Communist losses, although South Vietnamese bombers have been reported pounding their positions.

Up to 500 government soldiers are based at Tong Le Chan, which the government says sits astride infiltration and supply routes. The four-nation International Commission of Control and Supervision has been powerless to stop the fighting.

Three small clashes were reported 15 to 30 miles south of Saigon, with a half dozen Communists killed and one government soldier killed and seven wounded, the Saigon command said.

The heaviest civilian toll was reported in Chau Doc Province in the Mekong Delta, where six persons were killed and 22 wounded in rocket and mortar attacks on a district town and a village, the Saigon command said.

The command claimed 123 more violations of the cease-fire during the 24-hour period ending at 6 a.m. Sunday and claimed this raised the total to 9,319 since the truce went into effect Jan. 28.

Twisters Wreak Havoc In South

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Tornadoes left at least eight persons dead in South Carolina and Georgia over the weekend and the National Weather Service warned day of the possibility of additional twisters and flooding in a widespread section of the nation.

A tornado watch was issued for parts of Florida, Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, Pennsylvania and New Jersey. The weather bureau said heavy rains across Missouri and into Illinois posed "a serious flood situation," and rivers in North and South Carolina were reported already above flood stage.

The tornadoes in South Carolina and Georgia left hundreds injured and uprooted a motel and threw it across the highway.

Reports from Calhoun Falls, S.C., said 20 persons were in the motel that was destroyed, but officials declined to release immediately any information on whether there were deaths or injuries.

"It looks like some strong person picked it up and threw it across the road and splintered it up," said Ray Monroe, a Calhoun Falls resident.

Georgia Gov. Jimmy Carter said the tornadoes, which struck Saturday night and early Sunday, caused damage estimated at $50 million to $100 million. He said an estimated 5,000 persons were left homeless in the state and 250 were injured. Some 1,000 homes were damaged, he said.

Carter surveyed the stricken area from a helicopter Sunday and said he planned to seek emergency federal assistance. He said the storm was the worst natural disaster the state has suffered in terms of financial loss.

The tornadoes struck with capricious aim. One family's mobile home was overturned and destroyed; their car parked adjacent to the trailer was untouched.

The storms killed six persons in South Carolina-four from Abbeville and two from Calhoun Falls near the Georgia border.

Authorities said the two from Georgia were killed as tornadoes touched down in Monroe and Athens.

Meanwhile, the weather appeared about to deal another blow to Southern states as major flooding was developing on five North Carolina rivers and central Florida was under a tornado watch.

The rain-swollen Cape Fear River in North Carolina forced approximately 100 persons from thei homes in the Fayetteville, N.C. area, the American Red Cross said Sunday afternoon.

Meat Boycott Begins

The National Farmers Organization, however, has opposed both the ceiling and the boycott. NFO members withheld livestock from market for several days last week to counter temporarily declining prices.

NFO President Oren Lee Staley said a series of farmers' meetings had been called this week to "maintain a vigilant alert to any future tampering with the markets."

Dolly Cole, wife of the president of General Motors, was sympathetic to the farmers' complaints. "I'm not going to boycott meat," she said, "because I figure everyone has to make a living. Meat is not the only thing in the country that has gone up. So has labor. The farmer has his cross to bear also."

Mrs. Cole said she does her own shopping and cooking. Sunday dinner, she said, was leftover rump roast made into hash. "I like hash," she said.

Among the consumer organizations sponsoring the boycott was FIT-Fight Inflation Together started by two California women.

Dorothy Van Horn, a FIT leader in Minnesota, said her family of three was starting boycott week with walleye pike.

"We're also going to have some tuna dishes and I'm going to get out my cookbooks. This is going to be a re-education of my cooking methods."

Mrs. Van Horn said her son Rick, 14, was sympathetic to her plans. "At school, he even asked that they serve peanut butter and belly sandwiches instead of meat the coming week," she said.

Several schools and similar facilities reported plans to join the boycott out of sympathy for the housewife or out of financial necessity.

Officials of the Reading, Pa., school district said meatless meals would be served this week "as long as they fall within federal government nutrient requirements."

Also in Pennsylvania, the Lackawanna County commissioners ordered three county horses and the jail to plan meatless menus. "Rising costs are placing strains on the county's food budget as well as those of housewives," the commissioners said.

Oil Quotas Revised

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Interior Department announced Sunday that it is revising its oil import regulations to carry out the President's recent proclamation making additional oil available to hardship cases.

Department spokesmen said the revision is to be published and to take effect on Monday.

The general program of quotas limiting oil imports was not affected by the proclamation last March 23, but the President removed a 60,000-barrel-a-per day limit on the imports which could be permitted, over and above the regular quotas, by the Oil Import Appeals Board.

In line with the proclamation, Assistant Secretary Jack Horton has signed the revised regulation removing the limit from imports granted by the appeals board.

For many of us Spring Vacation was a welcomed break from academia. We found relaxation in such activities as tennis, baseball, or basketball. Others found the vacation full of hazards all its own, like retrieving runaway kites in trees.

A Trek To Loiyengalani

To observe an event of roughly five minutes duration, an astronomy team from the University of Massachusetts at Amherst will trek thousands of miles this June to a remote African village named Loiyengalani.

The event is the June 30 eclipse of the sun, with the path of totality running across Africa. Astronomers say it is among the best to come along in a thousand years from an observer's standpoint because of length of totality.

The UMass expedition, with all travel costs paid by grants from the National Science Foundation and coordinated with other U.S. groups by the National Center for Atmospheric Research, will observe the sun's corona during the period of totality, recording in the infrared region of the solar spectrum.

Their telescope will scan the corona from the sun's edge outwards and the variations in infrared radiation will be automatically recorded. The result will be data on the distribution of infrared radition in the corona and how that distribution varies with the angular distance from the sun.

The path of totality June 30 will cross Africa in a giant arc beginning at 1:40 p.m. local time in the western Sahara and ending on the Somali Coast shortly after 4 p.m. Scientists from all over the world will make observations at many points along the arc. The UMass crew will set up their telescope in Loiyengalani, a village on the east shore of Lake Rudolph in Kenya, because of atmospheric conditions there, even though the duration of totality will be greater at other points.

The period of greatest totality, seven minutes and four seconds, will be over the Sahara. Totality at the UMass observation point in Kenya will last about five minutes. Sky conditions over the Sahara, however, often include a smog-like pall of dust, while the Lake Rudolph area has sky conditions that have been compared to the Rocky Mountains of Colorado.

The trip is a project of Dr. John Streng's infrared astronomy program at UMass. It is directed by Research Associate William Dalton. Going to Africa with Dalton will be graduate student Raymond Smartt, making the observations for his Ph.D. thesis, and Research Engineer Ta-Chun Li. They will fly to Africa June 6 and return July 11. Their equipment--2500 pounds of it--will make the trip early in April, going by air freight to Nairobi and then by truck 350 miles north to the observation site. The June 30 observations will supplement earlier infrared probes of the sun's corona, made by three balloon-born telescope missions.

Hopes To Keep Freshman 'High'

Because that "all-together" feeling a high school senior has may disappear when he becomes a college freshman, a new psychology course was begun this year at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst.

Teaching freshmen to increase their self-awareness and self-direction are upperclassmen who've all gone through the same experience, not too long ago.

"Freshmen come in basically optimistic; so we asked ourselves 'How can we capitalize on this optimism?' We decided to use their peers," explains Dr. Theodore Slovin, director of the program and a community psychologist in the UMass counseling center.

Upperclassmen counselors get academic credit and payment for their part of the program called "Internship in Student Development," and freshmen get academic credit for their part, a course called "Elements of the College Experience: Learning, Relating, and Decision-Making."

At the end of last fall semester (the first semester of the new program), a student in the course, Gerry Johnson of Wellesley, made a film for his final project. Gerry was the star, going from carefree high school days—complete with school float, the prom, graduation—to a beginning at UMass—with football games, unfamiliar faces, and vastness of campus. He showed the abruptness of change by packing the family car for the trip to UMass, and leaving behind his sweatshirt which was lettered "Wellesley Seniors."

Dr. Slovin explains that the program is "an attempt to reach more freshmen than we've been able to reach on a one-to-one basis."

The freshmen educational program, a cooperative effort of the UMass counseling center and the psychology department, has had 175 freshmen participants and 10 upperclass interns in this its first year.

And, according to the upperclass counselors and the freshmen, the program has been a success. In the course evaluation 88 percent of the freshmen said that the course section on relating to people was "valuable" to them; 76 percent said the same of the section on "learning how to learn;" and 70 percent said they were helped by the section on decision-making.

Interns and freshmen often develop special relationships, and freshmen seek out the interns to talk over personal problems. Intern Carolyn says she learned counseling was "more difficult than I had thought." Another intern, Suzen, says "one of the big phases in the program is that we are only two years older than the freshmen."

Bob reiterates that thought with, "I didn't know much more than they did, so they took responsibility for input to the course." One of the goals of the course is to get the freshmen to learn to teach themselves, something another intern, Pike, says "my students have been asking me." And yet, she says the freshmen "do not feel it easy to take on with education."

"The classes are informal and involve much discussion of the high school-college transition. One freshman has taken the idea back to his former high school where he has been a week he talks to high schoolers about questions and situations concerning college.

Aside from college life itself, the freshmen get exposed to things like the art of listening, then listen. "The course begins teaching freshmen listening skills. And they never had them."

Language Lectures April 3 And 6

Teachers and students of the French language and other interested persons are invited to lectures April 3 and 6 sponsored by the department of French and Italian at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst.

Tuesday, April 3, the department will hold a meeting of the American Association of Teachers of French to welcome Professor Douglas W. Allen, president of the national organization. He will speak on "What the AATF can do about itself and the future of French." Dr. Allen is a professor and former department head at the department of French at the University of Virginia. The meeting will be in Bowker 803-05 of the Campus Center at 8 p.m. Professor Allen, editor of the twentieth century volume of the Critical Bibliography of French Literature, will meet with interested faculty in the third floor lounge of Bartlett Hall from 4 to 6:30 p.m. Tuesday.

Friday, April 6, at 8 p.m. in 106 Hampton Hall there will be a lecture by Roger Dragonetti, professor of French at New York University. Professor Dragonetti, who is a well known author and lecturer, will speak on "Proust et la medecine" in French.

'Easy Access' Law For Handicapped

By CHRIS FLETCHER

A state law was passed in 1968, stating that all new public buildings must be accessible to handicapped people, but the guidelines set up by the Public Safety Department have not been followed. New buildings are being built, and unreported, without the mobility disadvantaged in mind.

Mobility disadvantaged is defined as any person who for reasons having to do with the respiratory or cardiac system, or loss of sight or because of loss of a body part or function finds it difficult or impossible to be as mobile as the normal person without one or more of these problems. Although figures pertaining to the handicapped are difficult to obtain, it has been estimated that there are two hundred and fifty permanent mobility disadvantaged students attending UMass.

In a recent survey, conducted by Marie Desmond, UMass was considered eighty per cent efficient for handicapped accessibility in the most used buildings on campus. The University is the best school in New England for accessibility to all.

Earlier this year, Chancellor Bromery made a commitment to the handicapped; the disabled veterans as well as other handicapped people. However, this does not mean that UMass is architecturally barrier free. It would take thousands of dollars just to make the granite sidewalks on Mass Ave. alone completely accessible to wheelchairs. As it is now, it is possible to go from Southwest to the Grad Research Center on sidewalks but, to deviate from that path is a problem. The mobility disadvantaged are put more at a disadvantage for reasons like this. They have to take a more complicated path many times to get to their destination because of these architectural barriers.

The disabled are willing to take the long way around. They are willing to get to their classes in accessible buildings. The problem is this.

There is no way of communicating which route to follow, which door to go into, or which bathroom wheelchairs can fit into. True, eliminating architectural barriers is an outstanding problem but the identification of what is already accessible is a problem of a more immediate priority. Signs are needed indicating accessibility to buildings and inside buildings, signs showing the best routes handicapped persons should follow; and what's more, a handbook (like the Freshman Handbook with maps etc.) showing routes the mobility disadvantaged may follow, buildings accessible to them and people they may need to contact.

The class of 1972 at Ohio State University gave a gift of $75,000, which they worked to raise to make their campus architecturally barrier free. The Federal Government matched that amount by three times as much money.

This campus is relatively accessible to handicapped students, yet there still remains many architectural barriers which would cost many thousands of dollars to eliminate. As top priority, an identifying system is needed here at UMass to show paths and buildings already accessible.

Pay Television, Hollywood's New Star

By JERRY BUCK
Associated Press Writer

HOLLYWOOD (AP)—The pay television fare office in the home could be the long-awaited shot in the arm for Hollywood's sagging movie industry.

Pay television executives voiced that opinion at a conference on cable television sponsored by the Hollywood chapter of the National Academy of Arts and Sciences.

"The future of motion pictures may well be in the home," Richard Lubic, president of the Home Theatre Network, told the conference Saturday. "Pay television may be the new box office of the future."

"When is Hollywood going to get wet?" asked Courtney Kathanson, president of Optical Systems Corp., which began operating a cable pay television system in San Diego last month. "I can say one thing: If the people in San Diego will pay $78 to see 116 movies they may pay $18 to see 308 movies.

"We have a guaranteed post-theatrical release. You are going to see better movies made. But it isn't going to happen overnight."

Gerald Levin, president of Home Box Office Inc., which operates cable pay systems in Wilkes-Barre, Allentown and Bethlehem, Pa., invited the studios to experiment with pay TV.

"I don't believe the production centers should sit back and wait for an invitation," Levin said. "We are taking a chance and I believe you should also." Levin said his system is running many "B" rated movies because they are the most readily available, but he predicted that pay television could bring back the family movie.

Dore Schary, president of TheatreVision, Inc., and formerly head of production at MGM, said he does not think pay television will ever go into 70 million homes, as some people have predicted.

"A majority of TV viewers don't want pay television," Schary said. "They're very satisfied with free TV. But 20 per cent of the set owners do want pay television and that's 18 million homes. That's a hell of a market."

Schary said he believes pay television will have to offer more than just movies and said that a TheatreVision experiment in Fantasia, Fla., has been offering musical programs that have proved as popular as movies.

WFCR Opens Fund Drive

WFCR, Five College Radio in Amherst, began its 1973 campaign for financial support yesterday. Appropriately named APRIL EARFUN, the drive is attempting to reach a goal of $60,000 from 5,000 subscribers, friends and organizations interested in the station and the broadcast services it provides.

Godwin Oyewole, manager of WFCR, described the background for the station's need for funds. "Our annual operating budget is now in excess of $200,000, of which nearly 70 percent is funded through the contributions of the five area colleges and federal funding for equipment. Our ability to develop and originate broadcasts which truly reflect the needs of the listening audience we serve depends to a large extent on the income we receive through WFCR membership, and through other gifts. If we are to fill our role as public radio station, the additional $60,000 we are now seeking in financial support is fundamental to the success of our programming."

Persons who make gifts of $18.00 or more to WFCR's APRIL EARFUN campaign are placed on the station's mailing list to receive the monthly Program Guide. Contributions in any amount, however, are welcome.

For further information contact: Godwin Oyewole, Radio Station WFCR, Amherst, Mass. 01002, (413) 545-0100.

'Big Ditch' Creeping Closer To C.C.

The last phases of construction for The Big Ditch began March 26 on Campus Center Way, the road leading to the Campus Center Parking Garage. Traffic flow will be interrupted, but not stopped, for 10 weeks from that date.

For the first two weeks, traffic will be re-routed over a nearby temporary gravel road. The campus bus stop will remain the same. For the following seven weeks, workmen will be installing pipes in the ditch, and traffic will be two ways, but on just one lane.

A policeman will be present during daytime hours and motorists are asked to be cautious, especially at night.

With this last major construction for The Big Ditch completed, the next steps are road repair and clean-up, and planting.

The Big Ditch will carry power lines for the new power plant which is being built at Tillson Farm and which will begin service during the next academic year.

Dining Commons To Serve Analogs

This week UMass students will have the opportunity to sample a new type of food, "food analogs". These are essentially synthetic derivatives of soy protein, and are similar to the original food in taste, texture, and appearance and smell.

In conjunction with the meat boycott, this Tuesday evening the scalloped potatoes and ham served in the dining commons will be prepared with soy protein fashioned "ham."

Thursday evening, Boston chicken will be served. This recipe, like the scalloped ham and potatoes, will be the same as that normally used except that the chicken meat will be soy protein isolate of the same dried texture chicken parts. Boston chicken salad was taste-tested last year by several hundred students at Hampshire Commons and was found to be acceptable. Any students who taste-tested it for the studies can confirm it for themselves in whichever commons they may be eating on Tuesday and Thursday evenings.

The development of meat substitutes has progressed to the point where it is difficult in most cases to differentiate between the natural product and its artificial counterpart. They are less expensive to the institutional level and quite convenient to use in cooking. Surprisingly enough, "meat" analogs are substantially comparable in animal products, and also less fattening. In chicken and mutton products, the meaty products are almost interchangeable in substitution to the natural meat.

Should you decide to investigate these "future foods", please make suggestions with your consumer's evaluation of the products. This will be of tremendous value to Food Services and to the future of a growing industry designed to help meet the food needs of the future.

Dam Licensing Questioned

The Western Mass. Public Interest Group (WMPIRG), the Environmental Defense Fund (EDF) and a Connecticut Valley environmental group have been granted a petition to intervene in federal proceedings regarding the licenses of five Connecticut River hydroelectric dams.

The groups issued a report last month calling for study of environmental damage to the river caused by the operation of hydroelectric dams. The report cites erosion, water pollution and interference with federal and state fish restoration programs as problems related to power production.

As intervenors in the proceedings, the groups will seek provisions in new licenses for the four dams that would [illegible] standards for continuous minimum flow of water, (2) require the licensee to conduct studies of fish passages at each dam and (3) require the licensee to take action to alleviate erosion damage caused by impounding water behind the dams for power production. The intervenors will also ask the Commission to conduct studies on the economical effects of power plant operation and to take action on an application for approval to construct proposed fish passages at Holyoke dam, owned by the Holyoke Water Power Company.

Boycott Meat

This week you will have an opportunity to participate in a nationwide effort to lower the exceedingly high cost of meat. All over the country, people are boycotting meat during the first week of April, with the hope that the price of meat will drop as a result of this boycott.

All members of the UMass community should cooperate with this national boycott effort, assuming that each and every individual is concerned with the exorbitant cost of meat. Instead of a hamburger, have an egg salad sandwich; instead of a hot dog, have a grilled cheese sandwich. Poultry and fish are also acceptable substitutes. Do your part. Do not buy meat this week.

Gerry Cataldo

Johnny Can't Read

Standardized test results showed recently that the reading scores in Boston's elementary schools have dropped to a record low during the past four years. A correlation has been made between the low scores and low socio-economic neighborhoods across the city. Some educators have stated that the tests were unfair because children from the suburbs are the dominant group in the standardized measurements. Others insist that television is the main culprit. It was noted that the "hardest working teachers" were in the classrooms with the lowest scores. (Perhaps they should have taken the tests themselves.) But whatever the cause, the majority of Johnnies in Boston, and who knows how many other cities, can't read.

Now let me make this perfectly clear! (To quote the King.) I do not attend classes or marathons or whatever in that building down the street called the School of Ed, so I am not an expert on matters of education, (which is not to imply that the Eds are). But like most non-experts I do have some thoughts on the subject, so if you're inclined to read further, and if you won't hold me to any sticky technicalities, I will proceed to air them.

It should be fairly obvious to anyone entering a grade school classroom that the scene has changed dramatically from many moons ago. It is indeed admirable that educators have finally recognized that all children are not the same, and that the individual abilities or disabilities must be reckoned with ain a discreetly appropriate manner. The problem arises, however, when this predominant theory of "progression at one's own speed" contributes to a deficiency in a particular area of study. And the problem is compounded when the child hails from a tough, crowded, downtrodden neighborhood, where telling him that he may progress at his own speed is akin to letting his own concepts of education overcome the more traditional. And when one takes issue with a childs environment, it is only logical that the parents become suspect as well. The schism between parent and classroom grows wider every day, and this is primarily due to the lack of understanding by parents concerning what their children are being taught, and perhaps more importantly, how they are being taught.

Home study and discipline still play an all important part in the education of a youngster, be he affluent or poor. When a parent, through lack of communication, is alienated from the education process, then home study becomes the whim of the child. Children arriving for classes ill prepared, or not arriving at all, are problems that can only be corrected through the closest cooperation and mutual understanding of the teachers and parents. And if teachers are at odds among themselves concerning new techniques or materials, then how can the parent be expected to make rational judgements about a child's study habits or relative progress.

And let's face another thing. Mathematics and the sciences have assumed predominate roles in education, in this era of IBM and Honeywell. The basics of the English language and the writing and reading thereof, have plainly fallen victim to the trend of new concepts in mathematics and science. Now I'm not out to abolish the new math, (let alone try to understand it), but I am all for attempting to re-emphasize literary appreciation and the teaching of dull, boring, old fashioned sentence structure, phonics, and spelling.

The goal of an education system, as I see it, is to leave the young mind free from any premature specialization by delivering a well balanced, fundamental education, thereby providing an objective and thorough background for any future educational pursuits, and for confident coping with today's society. Not ten year old nuclear physicists, but well rounded, adjusted children, on par with the average American pupil. Now there's no simple answer, of course, and I'm not pretending to supply one here. And it certainly must be boring to teach the old fashioned grammar and reading comprehension, but the familiarity of parents with this mode of instruction would certainly aid in improving a more active home interest in a child's education.

But there's one thing we can all agree on; a field trip won't help correct this problem. But what can help is a re-examination of motives, methods, and interest, and a better understanding of the system and what its goals should be. And let's not forget Johnny, he's the real victim, and he'll have to carry the discrepancies of educators into life with him. So the question remains, is good old "Dick and Jane" getting a fair shake in the classroom or not? I think the answer is fairly obvious.

Prurience Or Peonies?

By MARY KEANE

Thinking about, talking around, and pontificating on sexuality seem to have become major national pastimes. One facet of interest in sexual behavior goes undisputed: there is much money to be made from almost any enterprise that focuses on the general unrest concerning sexuality. Everyone from "J" and "M" to Masters and Johnson has clearly demonstrated this.

Because of the virtual anonymity surrounding radio personalities, this media in particular has seen fit of late to cash in on the timeliness of changing morality.

On the West Coast, soap operas are rapidly being superseded by dial-in sex talk shows. One that I had the great misfortune to be stuck in a traffic jam with, is Don Chamberlain's California Girls on KNEW in San Francisco.

California Girls format parallels any housewives' "call in and chat" talk show, except that the topic for discussion always revolves around sex. Chamberlain opens discussions with such socially significant and probing questions as "Do you get turned on by doing your housework in the nude?" and "What's the greatest thing a man could do to/for you?" Immediately the switchboards are flooded with calls.

Chamberlain adroitly intersperses his sympathetic exclamations with promotions for his sponsors. Only 52 orgasms this week? Maybe what you need is an Undulator Waterbed or some Making Love Body Oil. He's a little too slick to be that obvious, but that is (pardon the expression) the thrust of his patter.

While the number of people who seem to enjoy this latter-day Dear Abby is surprising, it is not too unpredictable to find that Chamberlain's conversations are hardly as titillating as an audience might expect. Using a seven-second delay on the air and euphemising to the point of absurdity, one often wonders if California Girls deals with prurience or peonies.

Through the apparent sincerity and humane concern for feminine sexuality conveyed by Chamberlain, the show has developed an enormous following. California Girls parties are held all over the Bay Area to allow swinging, aware people to interact meaningfully. Playboy has lauded the shows as being innovative and, in some sense, in keeping with their own profitable philosophy. California Gays, a similar show with a female moderator, has been instituted to serve slighted males.

Chamberlain's portrayal of Ma Bell's version of a father confessor is so overbearing in its saccarhine sincerity that it would be laughable were it not for the fact that so many people take him seriously. Apparently, many women fine real relief in his soothing acceptance. Obviously, few of the callers feel they are being manipulated to serve profiteers in the advertising industry.

The Associated Press (March 8) reports that the FCC has been attacked lately for allowing allegedly indecent conversations to permeate the airwaves. That people have taken this kind of banal trash seriously enough to consider censoring it, is startling. It brings to mind images of upstanding citizens reading "Make Your Marriage A Love Affair" in Reader's Digest while vehemently tsk-tsking the radio.

What good would censoring these shows do? It would seem that in a very real sense, censorship would serve only to deny the existence of a particular facet of our society. To bashfully stick our heads in the sand and wish it away avoids dealing with the situation.

The reason for censorship would be that the shows are lewd. On another level, what is really annoying about them is that they are just another one of the multitude of media hypes that prey on peoples' insecurities to sell products.

To censor these programs would only result in the same exploitative mechanisms popping up again in white-washed form. It is more important that people realize what is being done to them through this kind of marketing, and act accordingly. Don't deny it, just don't buy it.

What has all this to do with the Moonaversity of Chasamosetts? Simply this: Horatio Alger is roving backwards these days, and the same Wild West that brought us the "swinging" ethic is sure to send sex talk shows our way soon. We can either prepare ourselves by chanting "Well, East Coast girls are hip. . . ."—or sit back and let the buyer beward.

Watergate Opposition

Ever since June 17th, 1972 the news media has reported and investigated the circumstances surrounding the Watergate break-in. The accounts of espionage and sabotage promised to outdistance the corruption of the Grant and Harding administrations, yet the public response was minimal. Then, over the past week, James McCord, convicted Watergate conspirater, decided to talk.

McCord's disclosures pointed the finger at the White House. President Nixon, in an unprecedented turnabout, relented and dropped the cloak of executive privilege from around his accused aides. John Dean, Jeb Magruder and others will talk because the President will find it hard to rally support by blaming his troubles on the "Eastern establishment press." Those most vociferous in condemning the White House silence on Watergate are not Benjamin Bradlee of the Washington Post, Richard Salant of CBS, or Walter Cronkite, but prominent conservatives in the press, the House and Senate, and the public.

One indication of conservative discontent comes from columnist James Kilpatrick. On a Martin Agronsky television show Kilpatrick, while referring to Watergate said, "I am so sick about this whole thing." A former editor of the Wall Street Journal, Vermont Royster wrote in a column "The Watergate affair is no longer an amusing caper which the administration can lightly brush aside . . . the White House has burgled things . . . the White House has muffed one opportunity after the other to clear the air."

The most important figures in drawing Watergate to the front of public attention are all established conservatives. Judge John Sirica, who expressed doubt during the Watergate trial about the veracity of the witnesses and defendants, is a Republican appointee who worked for a conservative law firm. Senator Sam Ervin, a conservative former judge of North Carolina, and Congressman Lowell Weicker, a Connecticut Republican from an old-line GOP family, are most responsible for pushing the special Senate investigation on Watergate. Lastly is James McCord himself, a former CIA agent and security chief of the Republican campaign. He is a steady middle-class professional with a thing about Communists.

Conservatives are outraged because they set tremendous store in principled government and the maintenance of law and order. McCords' is spilling of the beans about White House efforts to hide from Judge Sirica and the public the truth about Watergate discloses an insensitivity to principle and a moral vacuum at the peak of government.

Opposition from the Right about Watergate denies the President his favorite divisive strategy. Nixon cannot hope to rally the "silent majority" by his usual attack on the "liberal establishment," because it is the "silent majority" who are his biggest opponents.

This rightest constituency who truly cares about morality in government has been alienated by the White House and is now up for political grabs. A principled Republican playing Watergate straight, demanding the truth, could be projected by the investigation to the front of presidential politics. As of now, Lowell Weicker is looking good, Sam Ervin also shines, but it would not be surprising if Richard Nixon himself turned out the brightest, possibly with the aid of a sacrificial lamb like John Mitchell.

Letters To The Editor

Open Letter On Collective Bargaining

Following is a copy of a letter from American Association of University Professors and Massachusetts Society of Professors to the group opposed to collective bargaining on the University of Massachusetts campus. The letter concerns the announcement previously made by Professor Wellman and his associates about a debate on the collective bargaining issue. A copy of this letter is being sent to all UMass faculty.

Dear Professor Wellman:

In a joint meeting of 3/26/73 the local executive committees of the Massachusetts Society of Professors and of University Professors authorized the undersigned to reply as follows to the challenge by a group opposed to collective bargaining—of which you are listed as chairman—to debate the issue of organizing the faculty for this purpose:

(1) The date of April 3rd which you have unilaterally announced is unacceptable. Two hearings important to our faculty are to occur in Boston on that date: on legislation to implement the Governor's plan to reorganize higher education in the Commonwealth; and on a new bill on collective bargaining. We intend to be fully represented at both of these sessions.

(2) The executive committees believe it to be important to discuss the advantages of collective bargaining, as well as specific issues of the sort which the faculty may wish to negotiate upon; but we believe that adequate discussion requires a series of meetings, open to all who are interested and concerned, with the issues, the format, and the participants to be mutually agreed upon beforehand between representatives of the group you chair and of the AAUP-MSP, now operating under their Unity Agreement.

We invite you to get in touch with either of the undersigned for the purpose of setting up such a series of discussion meetings. We would consider it quite sufficient to achieve that purpose to approach either of us privately by telephone or written communication rather than—without getting in touch with us at all—by public announcement to the press, radio, and television.

Dismiss Boone

To The Editor:

A letter which was printed in your March 22 edition by James Matlack, an observer, at Walpole State Prison, apparently qualifies as UMass cause-of-the-month. This Holy Crusade has as it's goal the retention of John O. Boone, the State Corrections Commissioner.

I can't say I've ever held the prestigious post of "observer", but I happen to be a lifelong resident of Massachusetts' "Penal Belt", Walpole-Norfolk-Bridgewater. In addition, I have some very close acquaintances, prison administration workers, whose names I'll omit for obvious reasons. These people are experiencing the prison situation on a daily basis. They are familiar with BOTH prisoners and guards. Mr. Matlack, so they don't speculate about the guards position, they KNOW it. What they tell me about, really happens behind those walls, its not a show put on for the benefit of newspapermen and outsiders. Do you really think the inmates were going to jeopardize Boone's position with an uprising following the guard walkout? No chance. Matlack has a flair for sensationalism. Frequent comparisons to Attica, guard brutality, and unmentionable "horrors" abound in his writing. It's all so much bullshit. But then that's what sells Hearst newspapers, isn't it? What are these "basic human dignities" that the prisoners lack? The right to bear arms? A recent shakedown turned up over 200 weapons. The right to unionize? The guards don't seem to have that right! The grievances of guards are relatively unimportant.

Boone has seriously undermined the security of both workers and inmates in the guise of a so called "liberalization policy". The brutalities occurring in the institutions since his appointment have been directed by inmates against inmates and guards, as witness the rash of stabbings at Walpole. He has "handcuffed" the guards by not creating proper screening measures for visitors. The bloody Norfolk prison incident of last year bears testimony to his ineptness in that area.

In short, the guards didn't walk off their jobs as a spur of the moment gesture, but rather as a result of frustration in a system that fosters a prison atmosphere where drug availability has increased considerably, where a prisoner manufactured a bomb in the workshop which exploded prematurely, taking his life, where inmates don't have to work if they don't want to. A guard interviewed on a recent newscast claimed he quit his job for fear of his life. Is this any way to run a corrections system? I think not! I suggest that those truly interested in a return to sanity in our prison system petition Governor Sargent to demand the immediate dismissal of Commissioner Boone.

Special Students

To The Editor:

For the past several weeks the Special Students Group-for-Action of the School of Education has been conferring with University officials to assure a just hearing to those students who were encouraged to enter graduate degree programs in the Ed. School via special student status.

After consulting with Provost Gluckstern, Dean Appley met with the Special Students Group on March 20, at which time he announced an increase in the number of degree program slots allocated to the School of Education. I should like to correct a statement appearing in the Collegian on March 22, where I am quoted as saying that the University did all that it could to resolve the problem. Although I believe, and stated at the time, that University officials responded reasonably to a reasonable request, it was Dean Appley who stated that "we felt that there was a case made. We listened to it and did what we could to respond to it."

The Special Students Group believes that the University administration has acknowledged the validity of our cause and has acted in good faith by increasing the School of Education's degree program slots for Fall '73. We are looking to Dean Norma Jean Anderson and the School of Education's Admission Committee for a like response at their meeting this week. It is within their jurisdiction to earmark these twenty slots and additional ones for special students who are now applying for admission to graduate degree programs. We seek further reasonableness—their response to our request.

Brando Refuses An Offer

By MARLON BRANDO

Good evening. What is said here on my behalf by Miss Littlefeather is not in any way designed to demean or embarrass those who believe in the worthiness of this custom and make this evening possible. It has not been my wish to offend or diminish the importance of those who are participating here tonight.

For 200 years we have said to the Indian people who are fighting for their land, their life, their families, and the right to be free, lay down your arms, my friends, and then we will reason together. Only if you lay down your arms can we meet and talk of peace and come to an agreement which will be good for you.

WHEN THEY LAID DOWN their arms, we murdered them. We lied to them. We cheated them out of their lands. We starved them into signing fraudulent agreements that we called treaties which we never kept. We turned them into beggars on a continent that gave them life for as long as life can remember.

And by any interpretation of history, however twisted, we did not do right. We were not lawful nor were we just in what we did. But then, we do not have to restore these people, we do not have to live up those agreements, because it is given to us by virtue of our power to attack the rights of others, to take their property, to take their lives when they are trying to defend their land and liberty, and to make their virtues a crime, and our vices a virtue.

But there is one thing which is beyond the reach of this perversity and that is the tremendous verdict of history. And history will surely judge us. But do we care? What kind of moral schizophrenia is it that allows us to shout at the top of our national voice for all the world to hear that we live up to our commitments when every page of history and when all the thirsty, starving, humiliating days and nights of the last hundred years in the lives of the American Indians contradicts that voice?

IT WOULD SEEM that the respect for principle and the love of one's neighbor has become disfunctional in this country of ours, and that all we have done, all that we have succeeded in accomplishing with our power, is simply annihilating the hopes of the newborn countries in this world, as well as friends and enemies alike, that we are not humane, and that we do not live up to our agreements.

Perhaps at this moment you are saying to yourself, what the hell has all this got to do with the Academy Awards? Why is this woman standing up here ruining our evening, invading our lives with things that don't concern us and that we don't care about? Wasting our time and money and intruding in our homes?

I think the answer to those unspoken questions is that the motion picture community has been as responsible as any for degrading the Indian and making a mockery of his character, describing him as savage, hostile, and evil. It's hard enough for children to grow up in this world. When Indian children watch television, and they watch films, and when they see their race depicted as they are in films, their minds become injured in ways we can never know.

RECENTLY there have been a few faltering steps to correct that situation, but too faltering and too few. So I, as a citizen of the United States and member of the profession, do not feel that I can accept an award here tonight. I think awards in this country at this time for whatever reason are inappropriate to be received or given until the condition of the American Indian is drastically altered.

If we are not our brother's keeper, at least let us not be his executioner. I would have been here tonight to speak to you directly, but I thought that perhaps I could be of better use if I went to Wounded Knee to help forestall in whatever way I can the establishment of a peace which would be as dishonorable as long as the rivers shall run and the grass shall grow.

I WOULD HOPE that those who are listening would not look upon this as a rude intrusion, but as an earnest effort to focus attention on an issue that might very well determine whether or not this country has the right to say from this point forward we believe in the inalienable rights of all people to remain free and independent on lands that has supported their life beyond living memory.

Thank you for your kindness and your courtesy to Miss Littlefeather. Thank you, and goodnight.

Studying No Sweat

How not to study is depicted on the left by David Bluestein, a University of Massachusetts-Amherst student who wrote "The No-Sweat Study Guide." At right he shows proper posture for studying.

"Don and I went to Canada. He swam; I read 'Systems for Study.' He went fishing; I wrote notecards. Don and I got drunk and he played is harmonica. I wrote "The No-Sweat Study Guide.' Read it or I'll kill myself."

"I" is David Bluestein, and he's reflecting these days on what a profitable summer that was. The study guide is becoming a "best seller" at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst where he is a junior; and, so far, four other colleges are expected to order about 2,500 copies.

His work, subtitled "How I Spent My Summer Vacation," earned him three academic credits, and since he kept the external publishing rights he stands to make a small financial profit.

"The No-Sweat Study Guide" talks directly to students, because David is a UMass student counselor and wrote it for UMass freshmen. He tells them: "I didn't have bad study habits when I came to college. And I bet you didn't either. Oh, don't think I don't know you. I bet you don't have bad study habits, but I bet you don't have good ones either--I bet you have NO study habits. Hello. Pleased to meet you...we're in this together."

David's major is counseling-psychology, and as an intern in the UMass Counseling Center he was required to do a project last summer. So, along with his vacation gear, he packed several research books and took off for Canada. Among other things David learned is that most books on how to study are ingeniously titled "How to Study." He wanted his to be different. It is.

The only way to form a study habit is to study, study, study in the face of temptations until it's as unquestionable as eating lunch at noontime."

"Permitting exceptions and deviations from your plan to study will prevent the habit from forming. But once it's formed, you can go dancing, practice yoga, or sing a medley of Ricky Nelson hits without harming the habit."

He gives some of the age-old bits of advice such as: "Study in the same place all the time." "There should be good air circulation." "When studying languages, flash cards are helpful." "Write a brief outline of a chapter or lecture."

And some not so age-old bits: "Time is better spent listening to the lecture than on writing long, neat, grammatially correct sentences."

David calls his "No-Sweat" the breakfast of champions, 24-hour underarm protection, everything you never wanted to know about studying but knew you should ask."

Sample copies have been ordered by the University of Rhode Island, Belknap College in New Hampshire, Southern Illinois University, and Northampton Junior College. High schools have also shown an interest in it. And some UMass upperclassmen have told him how much they've learned from it.

WMUA Focus Views Nixon Budget Cuts

Tonight at 10 P.M. on WMUA (91.1 FM), commentator Ken Mosakowski will take a close look at President Nixon's proposed $81-billion defense budget for fiscal year 1974, contrasted with sharp cutbacks in domestic programs presently funded by the Departments of Agriculture; Housing and Urban Development (HUD); and Health, Education, and Welfare (HEW).

If the President's proposals are approved by Congress, a number of Federal programs which now provide direct financial aid to college students would be terminated or severely cut back after June 30, 1973. Under the Nixon proposals, for example, National Defense Student Loans and Educational Opportunity Grants would be terminated, and Work Study Grants would be reduced by about 50 percent.

Also on "Focus" tonight: some commentary on the continuing air war over Cambodia; the prospects of draft repeal this year; and the revolt of the American consumer, as evidenced by this week's national meat boycott.

Smith Sponsors Recital Of Songs...

On Thursday evening, April 5, at 8:00 o'clock, the Smith College Department of Music will sponsor a recital of songs by John Duke in Sage Hall on the Smith campus.

The recital will feature five different vocalists in order to explore as completely as possible the different kinds of music that Mr. Duke has written, and to avoid limiting the program to songs written for one particular voice. The vocalists will be Adrienne Auerswald, soprano; Gretchen D'Armand, soprano; Calliope Shenas, contralto; Jon Humphrey, tenor; and John D'Armand, bass. Mr. Duke will serve as piano accompanist for the recital.

The program for Thursday's recital will include twenty songs written for works of a number of poets. Among them will be "hist--whist" by e.e. cummings, "When I Was One and Twenty" by A.E. Housman, "Let Down the Bars, O Death" by Emily Dickinson, "Stopping by Woods on as Snowy Evening" by Robert Frost, and "Stop All the Clocks" by W.H. Auden.

The public is invited to attend. There will be no admission charged.

And Matthaus-Passion

The weekend of April 13-15 will be the occasion for two performances of J.S. Bach's Matthaus-Passion (BWV 244), conducted by Professor Iva Dee Hiatt of Smith College. Participating as double chorus will be the Smith College Glee Club, conducted by Professor Hiatt and the Amherst College Glee Club, conducted by Professor Bruce G. McInnes. Members of the Amherst-Mount Holyoke Chamber Orchestra (Lewis Spratlan, conductor) and the Smith-Amherst Orchestra (William Wittig, conductor) will form the double chamber orchestra for which Bach scored his work.

The performances will take place on Friday, April 13, at 7:30 p.m. in John M. Greene Hall at Smith College, and on Sunday, April 15, at 7:30 p.m. in Buckley Hall at Amherst College.

Both performances will be ticketed. Free tickets for the Amherst performance are available from the Music Department at Amherst College, and those for the Smith performance may be obtained in person only from the Box Office in the Center for the Performing Arts at Smith College between noon and five p.m. during the week of April 9-13.

Milwaukee 14 Member To Speak On Viet Exiles

Jim Forest, the assistant editor of The Catholic Worker, will speak at Converse, Amherst College, tonight (Monday April 2) at 8 p.m. Mr. Forest was a member of the Milwaukee 14, convicted of destroying Selective Service files and records. He is also an editor of Liberation Magazine and has written a book on the Berrigans. He has recently visited the Vietnamese Catholic and Buddhist exiles in Paris. He will speak on his Paris visit, the condition of the exiles, and the political prisoners in South Vietnam.

An important announcement to every student in the health professions:

NEW SCHOLARSHIPS ARE AVAILABLE IMMEDIATELY.

THEY COVER TUITION AND RELATED COSTS AND PROVIDE AN ANNUAL INCOME OF $5,300 AS WELL.

If a steady salary of $400 a month and paid-up tuition will help you continue your professional training, the scholarships just made possible by the Uniformed Services Health Professions Revitalization Act of 1972 deserve your close attention. Because if you are now in a medical, osteopathic, dental, veterinary, podiatry, or optometry school, or are working toward a PhD in Clinical Psychology, you may qualify.

We make it easy for you to complete your studies. You're commissioned as an officer as soon as you enter the program, but remain in student status until graduation. And, during each year you will be on active duty (with extra pay) for 45 days. Naturally, if your academic schedule requires that you remain on campus, you stay on campus—and still receive your active duty pay.

Active duty requirements are fair. Basically, you serve one year as a commissioned officer for each year you've participated in the program, with a two year minimum. You may apply for a scholarship with either the Army, Navy or Air Force, and know that upon entering active duty you'll have rank and duties in keeping with your professional training.

The life's work you've chosen for yourself requires long, hard, expensive training. Now we are in a position to give you some help. Mail in the coupon at your earliest convenience for more detailed information.

English Prof. To Talk About American Lit.

AMHERST, Mass.-Professor of English Raymond Williams, social critic and faculty member at Jesus College, Cambridge, England, will be featured in a two-day lecture program titled "Conversations with Raymond Williams" at Amherst College. The events are open to the public without charge.

"Literature and the Left in America" will be the topic of discussion at 8 p.m. Monday, April 2 in Converse Hall Assembly Room. On the panel with Williams will be Amherst College faculty members Professor of English Leo Marx, Associate Professor of English R.C. Townsend, and John William Ward, President of the College and professor of history and American studies.

At 4 p.m. Tuesday, April 3 in Converse Hall Assembly Room, three faculty members will discuss "Natural and Social Order in England and America" with Williams. They are Professor of Anthropology Donald Pitkin, Professor of Biology Thomas Yost, and Assistant Professor of English Dale Peterson.

Williams is perhaps best known critic with a strong commitment to the political left. His work has been described as "an effort to bring together the practical criticism associated with F. R. Leavis and dominant in the Anglo-American literary world, and the more theoretical continental criticism associated with writers like Lukacs and Goldmann.

Spring Marathon

Pinching The Glump

"Pinching the Glump," a talk, not an activity, is one of dozens of daily events scheduled for the Spring Marathon at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst School of Education.

From April 9 through 13, Monday through Friday, the School of Education will again present educators and students a potpourri of educational ideas, through discussions, audio-visual presentations, and other means.

Marathon is a platform for the exchange of innovative educational ideas, and participants come from throughout the country and some foreign countries. Regular UMass education classes are cancelled for that week so that students may take advantage of the many educational offerings.

Events will begin at 9 a.m. Monday and 8 a.m. all other days; and they will continue through 10 p.m. all days except Friday which will end Spring Marathon 1973 at 4 p.m.

A final schedule and description of all events will be available Monday, April 9, at the School of Education. Here are some events from the preliminary schedule:

Monday--Collective Bargaining In The Classroom, Improving Teaching In Alternative Schools, The Community As A Learning Resource, The Creative Process, How To Change The Schools From Inside: Teachers As Change Agents, Talk With Your Hands, Drug Education: Full Circle, Therapeutic Camping.

Tuesday--Testing And Diagnosis Of Needs For Specific Learning, Adult Learner Participation Module, Film Potpourri, How To Go Through Student Teaching And Still Want To Teach, Behavioral Strategies For Treating Autistic Children, Basic Graphics For The Classroom Teacher, Living With An Almost Three-Year-Old, Education In The People's Republic of China.

Wednesday -- Non-Formal Education Project In Ecuador, Teaching Law In The High School: Techniques And Rationale, Give The Kids A Choice, Sung-songs, Education On The Road, Foreign Language Instruction In Social Studies, Dynamite Ideas In Teaching High School Math, Artificial Intelligence In Computer-Assisted Instruction, Archie Bunker And Bigotry: The Effect Of "All In The Family."

Thursday--The New Drug Education, An Exploration Of The Personal Meaning Of Movement, Visual Thinking, Peace Corps-VISTA, How Much Is A Million, A Plan for Involving Parents In Change Towards Open Education, Holograms: Or Is What You're Seeing Real, The Primal Chuckle: Positive Approaches To Joy, Expressive Language As A Means Of Teaching.

Friday--Teaching In The Community College, The Biological Determinants In The Release Of Human Potential, Debate: Should Your Daughter Be Taught By A School of Ed Graduate, Folk Dancing, Computer Games.

A Little Help From His Friends

SCRUGGS: HIS FAMILY AND FRIENDS, a film will be shown Tues. and Wed., April 3 and 4, at 7, 8:30, and 11:30 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium.

The film is a musical adventure into the life and times of one of America's foremost artists. He is presented in performance with various artists, including Joan Baez, Bob Dylan, The Byrds, and others.

Observe The Moon

The Amherst College Department of Astronomy will have an open house at the College Observatory beginning at 7:30 p.m. on the first clear night of either Friday, April 6 or Saturday, April 7. The moon, visible planets and deep sky objects will be observed through the Clark 18-inch refractor telescope. The event is open to the public without charge.

The first of hopefully-many-more-to-come "Women's Weekends" at Smith College will be held April 6,7 and 8th. The first session will begin Friday night at 8:00 p.m. when the film, "SALT OF THE EARTH" will be shown in Wright Hall Auditorium. Discussion will follow directly afterwards for those interested and will continue in part of the Saturday morning presentation.

At 10:00 on Saturday morning, EVE LEOFF, a Ph.D. and lecturer at Hunter College of CCNY, will speak on "Woman and Self-Image" in Wright Auditorium. She will also present her slide show entitled, "Dietrich to Monroe, From Angle to Curve: the Dissolving Image of Women in Film". Dr. Leoff innovated the course "Images of Women in Film" in 1972 and is presently working on a book, "Essays in Body and Style, Literary Analyses of Film Icons". Coffee and discussion will follow in the Wright Hall Common Room. Eve spoke at Mount Holyoke last week and it is our opinion that she is an exciting and extremely personable speaker with a stimulating, thought-provoking presentation. Not only will she discuss Friday night's film, "Salt of the Earth", but she will also get us thinking in terms of our afternoon topic.

At 2:00 p.m. a panel of women from Smith and Mount Holyoke will discuss "Women in an Academic Institution: Opportunity or Oppression?". Discussion will be encouraged and all views, opinions, and suggestions are welcome.

Sunday afternoon at 2:00 in Room 233 of Wright Hall there will be a discussion on "Lesbianism and the Woman's Movement". At the same time, in Room 231, there will be a discussion on "Women's Status in the Legal Code". At 3:30, "The Politics of Rape in the Pioneer Valley", will be presented in the form of a discussion with Libby Rich, a law student, in Room 234. In Room 232 at 3:30 also, there will be a discussion on "Sexism and Education". Come learn, discuss, listen and dispute!

At 5:00 p.m. all are invited to the Common Room for discussion, wine and, most importantly, poetry reading. Bring your original or favorite poems or just come and listen!

To end the weekend with an affirmative beat the "Deadly Nightshade", a well-reviewed, enthusiastically received and excellent boogying, women's rock band will perform at 9:00 p.m. in the Gamut. So come and boogie a bit: it can only be a fantastic end to a good weekend!

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Of late, many readers write to me beseeching "kind words about Taurus." In actuality, Taurus persons are generally loyal, basically courageous, possess an abundance of integrity and appreciate the creative abilities of others. May should be an outstanding month for natives of this zodiacal sign. Taurus is insistent, persistent and can be sexually provocative. And many Taureans have what might be termed "hidden writing talents." I feel it is especially constructive for Taurus persons to get their ideas on paper, to express themselves through the written word.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Be wary where legal papers are concerned. Double-check. What you thought was settled in way of partnership, joint effort, could be overturned. Be prepared. Be sure you are properly protected.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Get house in order. You could be entertaining some surprise visitors. Apply original touch to efforts. One who is a dependent acts in rebellious manner. Look behind scenes for reasons "why."

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Friends disagree. Refuse to be dragged into middle of conflict. Strive to maintain neutral stance. Trust hunch. Teach and learn. Evaluate hopes, wishes. Affair of heart is spotlighted. Protect self in emotional clinches.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Goal may be elusive. Key now is to relax, to change routine. You may be pressing too hard. Sagittarian is in picture. Discuss travel, vacation plans. Some around you appear heavy-handed. Be patient. This, too, will pass!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Be thorough. Check apparent minor matters. Details could take on new significance. Not wise to delegate duties. Personal supervision will ultimately save time, money, emotional wear and tear. Long-distance communication could be featured.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Get financial facts of life. Find out where you stand—or fall. Discussion with mate, partner is essential. Examine various facets of question. Take nothing for granted. Spell out plans. Gemini plays significant role.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Tendency exists to upset current situation without having alternative to offer. Key is to be constructive rather than destructive. You do this by getting together with family member—and letting intellectual sparks fly.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Avoid self-deception. Obtain valid hint from Libra message. Heed words of Pisces individual. Much that occurs could be shrouded in secrecy. But someone lets proverbial cat out of bag. You might be beneficiary.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Conditions that appeared adverse tend now to boomerang in your favor. You gain inner strength from recent setback. Capricorn figures prominently. Financial gain comes through creative organization.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Now is the time to finish, complete, to round out cycle—and to recognize love. There is dissension but within eye of hurricane you can find your truth. Message will become increasingly clear.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): New approach is necessary for your ideas to become valid concepts. Greater faith in yourself is a requisite for your wishes to become realities. Journey is not necessary. What you seek is close at hand.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Conserve. Don't strive for outmoded concepts. Protect what you have earned. Avoid needless speculation. Trying to get something for nothing could result in losing plenty. Act accordingly.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you make remarkable comeback. What was a loss is transformed into a gain, with September your outstanding month of 1973. You are loyal, determined and a natural pioneer. You draw many to you who were born under the zodiacal sign of Cancer.

Fractured Jaw Kept Ali's Mouth Shut

By RON ROACH
Associated Press Sports Writer

SAN DIEGO (AP)—"You missed me, sucker!" Ken Norton mocked Muhammad Ali. "You ain't hit nothing but a ghost."

Norton, a powerfully built ex-Marine, carried on a one-way conversation as the usually loquacious Ali kept his mouth closed.

After Saturday's fight, when Norton shocked the boxing world by winning a 12-round split decision, the reason for the former heavyweight champion's silence was explained:

A Norton punch had fractured his jaw in the first round.

The 31-year-old Ali, who used to "float like a butterfly, sting like a bee," did neither. Yet despite the injury, he very nearly won the fight.

Ali was taken to Clairemont General Hospital where an hour and a half of surgery was needed to wire together his left jawbone, broken three-quarters of an inch apart.

Ali will be hospitalized "for two or three days," his trainer, Anglo Dundee, said Sunday. "From all indications, he's going to be fine."

Dundee was ready to call anyone a "jerk" who suggested that Ali is washed up as a fighter. "We've already talked and he asked how long it might be before he can get back into training," Dundee said.

Yet he admitted "everything's up in the air. What's the sense of even trying to project? You don't know. The doctor projected three months but you never know. It's all according to how the healing goes."

Norton wasn't sure which punch—"I think it was an overhand right"—broke the jaw of Ali, who was in his 11th fight since losing to Joe Frazier two years ago for the undisputed title.

That was Ali's only other loss in 43 fights.

"I didn't see the punch that did it," Dundee said, "but after the first round he had a fleck of blood, a clot, on his lip. Then his mouthpiece started filling up with blood. I knew his jaw was broken. I wanted to stop the fight before the second round but Ali wouldn't let me."

Ali was in good condition at 221 pounds, 11 more than Norton, Dundee said, "and without the broken jaw he destroys this guy head over heels."

Ali "proved what I've known all along," Dundee said. "He has all kinds of guts. How can anyone question his courage? They've done that all along, you know."

Dundee had no claim of a "hometown decision" for Norton, who lives in the Los Angeles suburb of Carson but fights out of San Diego. "Give the other fighter credit. He fought a strong fight," Dundee said.

How about a rematch between Ali and Norton.

Dundee said "I'll tell you it's hard to project but Norton's people realize it would be the money for them. That's what Norton and his backers seek—money."

Ali got $210,000 and Norton $50,000 for this fight.

Mahavlich Leads Canadiens Over Boston, 5-3

BOSTON (AP)-Pete Mahovlich scored twice as the Eastern Division leading Montreal Canadiens showed their strength and skating speed in defeating the Boston Bruins 5-3 Sunday at Boston Garden.

Both Montreal and Boston are bound for the National Hockey League Stanley Cup playoffs, which get underway this week. Boston, in second place, will play New York and Montreal will play either Detroit or Buffalo, who are still battling for the fourth spot.

Mahovlich drew first blood at 1:05 of the first period when he forced in the puck after a scramble in front of the net past Boston's starting goalie Ed Johnston.

Jacques Laperriere put Montreal ahead 2-0 at 9:42 of the first session. Don Marcotte got Boston's first tally on a shorthanded goal at 14:07.

Murray Wilson of Montreal scored his 18th of the season at 12:31 of the second period, when he fired a 20-footer past rookie goalie Ross Brooks, who had replaced Johnston at the start of the period. Jacques Lemaire made it 4-1 for Montreal at 14:09 of the second period when he took a pass in front of the net and shot it home.

Marcottee scored his second goal of the afternoon and 24th of the season at 6:46 of the third period, when he took a pass from Derek Sanderson and flipped it in.

Mahovlich then scored his second of the game at 12:46 on a short handed play, and Ken Hodge of Boston got the Bruins' final tally at 16:03 of the final session when he took a pass from Phil Esposito, drove in on Montreal goalie Michel Plasse and poked it home.

Bosox Trip Tigers 6-5

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. (AP)-Ben Oglivie triggered a three-run inning with the first of his three hits, and the Boston Red Sox hung on for a 6-5 exhibition victory over Detroit Sunday despite a pair of homers by the Tigers' Willie Horton.

Oglivie, who hit .241 as a part time rookie outfielder last season, ignited the third with a pop double down the left field line. Later he added two solid singles to center.

Horton, fined Thursday night for leaving the ball park during a game against Boston in Lakeland, hit his second homer of the spring, a two-run shot far over left field fence, off starter Marty Pattin, in the sixth. Then he lined another homer off Don Hewhauser in the eighth.

The Red Sox nailed down their fourth victory in five pre-season games with Detroit with three runs on just one hit, off Chuck Seelbach in the fifth.

A single by Doug Griffin, a walk, a sacrifice and a throwing error by Aurelio Rodriguez provided two runs, and a forced play accounted for another.

Pattin, turning up for a regular season assignment against the New York Yankees in Boston Saturday, pitched seven innings, allowing five hits and four runs, two unearned.

Hewhauser was helped by two double plays, the first just before Horton's homer in the eighth.

The victory hiked the Red Sox' spring record to 13-12, with three games left before the team heads north.

Detroit has a 13-11 mark.

Monroe Leads Knicks 123-103 Over Bullets

NEW YORK (AP)—Explosive Earl Monroe erupted for 32 points, his season high, and Walt Frazier added 29 Sunday as the New York Knicks scored their second straight victory over the Baltimore Bullets 123-103 in their National Basketball Association Eastern Conference playoff series.

Games three and four in the best-of-seven series will be played in Baltimore Wednesday and Friday nights.

The dynamic Monroe bedazzled his ex-teammates with an assortment of twisting, driving acrobatic shots in the nationally televised game.

When the Bullets closed a 17-point, third-quarter deficit to six points early in the fourth period, Monroe virtually single-handedly took charge. He scored 11 of the Knicks' next 13 points, giving New York a commanding 100-85 advantage.

Frazier had 12 points and eight assists in the first half as the Knicks built a 58-47 lead with the hold of two key spurts, a 16-4 run midway through the first quarter and a 12-2 burst early in the second period.

Dave DeBusschere contributed 22 points for the Knicks, who beat Baltimore for the fifth straight time in the playoffs, including three last season when they eliminated the Bullets in six games in the opening round.

Warriors Top Bucks, 95-92

MILWAUKEE (AP)—Cazzie Russell, Nate Thurmond and Jeff Mullins, taking charge after high-scoring Rick Barry was injured, combined for 59 points Sunday to spark the Golden State Warriors to a 95-92 National Basketball Association playoff victory over the Milwaukee Bucks.

Thurmond, playing with an injured finger, scored 12 of his points in the second half and Russell came off the bench to pump in 25 as the Warriors evened the best-of-seven Western Conference semifinal series at 1-1.

The Warriors led 92-85 with 1:35 to play, then fought off a furious comeback lef by Lucius Allen's shooting as Milwaukee pulled to within 93-92 on a three-point play by Oscar Robertson with 14 seconds to play.

The Warriors' Mahdi Abdul-Rahman was fouled by Russell Lee with seven seconds to play and sank two free throws for the Warriors' final points. Jon McGlocklin missed a shot from the corner for Milwaukee seconds later and Clyde Lee rebounded for Golden State, insuring the victory.

Mullins added 18 points, 13 after intermission, as Golden State beat Milwaukee for only the second time in eight meetings this season.

Milwaukee, which saw a 15-game winning streak broken was led by Kareem Abdul-Jabbar with 26 points.

Lewis Paces Pacers

INDIANAPOLIS (AP)—Freddie Lewis scored 30 points to lead Indiana to a 106-93 American Basketball Association victory over Denver Sunday that gave the Pacers a 2-0 lead in their best-of-seven Western Division first-round playoff series.

The third game is scheduled for Tuesday night in Denver.

The Rockets led almost the entire first half, holding its biggest lead at 33-23 after scoring the first basket of the second period.

With Lewis scoring 18 points in the first half and nine more in the third period, Indiana hung in the game and came back within one at 74-73 late in the third period.

The fourth period was almost all Indiana as Billy Keller hit a three-point goal to tie the game at 78-78 with 11:10 remaining and Roger Brown put Indiana ahead with a free throw a few seconds later.

Brown, the hero of the opening game Saturday, came off the bench to score 12 of his 16 points in the fourth period while George McGinnis, who finished with 23 points, scored nine in the last quarter as Indiana outscored the Rockets 33-17.

Dave Robisch, a 6-foot-10 center, hit 26 points and grabbed 12 rebounds for the Rockets before fouling out with 7:33 remaining in the game. Denver was led by guard Ralph Simpson who contributed 19 points and five assists.

Whalers Slam Quebec

BOSTON (AP)-Tom Webster scored three goals as the New England Whalers slammed the Quebec Nordiques 8-3 in a World Hockey Association Game at the Roston Arena.

It was the last game of the season for both teams.

New England in an offensive explosion outshot the Nordiques 44 to 37 as they scored at least twice in each period. Webster's goals brought his season total to 53.

Quebec opened the scoring on a Michael Harvey shot at 11:30 of the first. At 17:19, Brad Selwood slammed in a 30 footer, opening the gates for New England.

The Whalers scored twice before Andre Gaudette scored for Quebec. Jim Dorey, Mike Byers, John French, and Guy Smith each scored once for New England.

Pierre Roy scored the other Quebec goal.

Minutemen Return With 5-4 Record

By MIKE BROPHY

The UMass baseball team returned to campus late last night with an impressive 5-4 record against some of the stiffest competition in the intercollegiate ranks. The record included a 3-4 showing in the Seventh Annual Riverside Baseball Tournament, highlighted by a 7-6 win over defending Tournament Champs Stanford Univeristy.

As of press time last night the winner of the tournament was not known but it is probable that Arizona State Univeristy walked away with the title. The ASU nine downed the Minutemen 7-6 in a 15 inning game that was suspended after nine due to darkness on Wednesday and then completed on Friday.

The UMass pitching held out well in the early part of the trip but began to show signs of wear and tear as time went on. Coach Dick Bergquist felt that a leg injury and a sore shoulder to two of the four starters hampered the effort. On Friday and Saturday, the Minutemen played 33 innings inside of 29 hours. On Wednesday the Minutemen allowed 29 runs in taking the two losses to USC (16-4) and Hawaii (13-11). Bergquist felt that the hitting held up well and should be in fine shape when the home season opens with Yale on Saturday.

In defeating Stanford, Mike Flannigan turned in a complete game performance and was helped by the hitting of Ron Beaurivage and Pete Backstrom both of whom homered and accounted for the total offensive output of seven runs. Beaurivage pit a three run shot over the right field fence in the first frame while Backstrom hit a grand slam in the top of the second frame off Stanford ace Bill Shaw. This put UMass out in front 7-2 before the Cardinals fought back to within one.

Mike Flannigan allowed six hits while striking out three and walking four. Three of the Stanford runs were unearned.

In the 13-11 loss to Hawaii the exhausted pitching staff issued 16 walks to the opponents and finally lost when HU rallied for three in the bottom of the ninth off Tom White.

The trip started off very well as the team jumped off to three wins in three days. The first two came as California Baptist was defeated 10-0 and 7-2 in non-tournament games and then went on to dump Vanderbilt 2-0 on White's shutout.

Critics say the UMass baseball team has all the tools this spring. They also have forgotten slugger Dan Esposito. After an All-New England soph year, Danny slumped to a sub .100 year at the plate last season. But he's ready and willing to prove that that was a fluke year, and his soph performance wasn't. A Racket In Florida

By SINCLAIR FOSTER

It was a rude ending to an increasingly marvelous vacation, uh, tennis trip. The UMass tennis team went to Florida expecting to see some high powered players. And they did. But what surprised the sextet the most was the realization that UMass was in the same class with most of Florida's players. And had the rains held up, the Minutemen would have had more than one chance to show Jacksonville University just how unawed they were.

The netmen's Florida visit was Coach Steve Kosakowski's first, and the first by any group of tennis players. Despite three demoralizing losses to the racquets of Rollins, the University of Florida and Jacksonville, the Florida tour reeked with positive points.

Significantly the tennis team grew closer personally. The team also came to respect their tennis ability that much more when pitting it against some of the nation's best. Out of necessity their games improved. It was the old story of playing against better competition to increase your proficiency.

Not to be forgotten was the competitive spirit shown by all six players. The author refers here not to the on-court competition so much as the off-court matchups. Doubles team against doubles team, it was shuffleboard, hearts and whist all through the night. But much like the tennis matches, this competition was cut short due to rain.

Playing only three matches from a schedule of seven (they were rained out of one match with BC and three with Jacksonville), UMass first faced Rollins College. On the windiest of days UMass was put away 8-1, with Ted Donahue and Mark Brass capturing the Minutemen point at first doubles. The Rollins tennis court was set off beautifully in an area surrounded by trees and dormitories. But in no way did the set-up in Winter Park compare with the sight at the University of Florida.

Florida had it all: A loud speaker system to announce the players; bleachers that held upwards of 200 spectators; female scorekeepers sitting high above courtside in their umpire chairs announcing the score after each point; and six tennis courts that were the sole possession of the tennis team.

This was big time tennis and the 9-0 whitewash fit neatly into the script. Further evidence of the bigness of tennis in Florida (as if more proof were needed) is the fact that the University has an annual tennis budget of $43,000 a year. UMass gets $2,000.

Jacksonville followed the next day and overheard was one Minutemen's remark. "It's nice to be playing human beings again. These guys make mistakes."

The match score was 6 1/2-2 1/2 in favor of Jacksonville, with UMass capturing second and third doubles. Robert Schpeiser and Mike Philipp teamed up for the first victory, while Steve Ferber and Fred Braley managed a victory at the third doubles slot.

What quickly became apparent was that Jacksonville was more than just fallible, they were beatable. But the rainmakers had other ideas, and with three matches against the hosts washed out, UMass never had a chance to show Jacksonville just how good New England tennis can be.

Havlicek's 54 Points Lead Celts Past Hawks

By CRAIG AMMERMAN
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP)-John Havlicek scored a team record of 54 points Sunday night and the Boston Celtics breezed to a 134-109 victory over the Atlanta Hawks in the first game of their best-of-seven National Basketball Association quarter-final playoffs.

Havlicek personally wrecked the Hawks throughout the game, scoring 30 points in the first half and running off strings of baskets any time Atlanta got within breathing distance.

Havlicek, who received strong help from Jo Jo White's 34 points, scored the game's first eight points as the Celtics bolted into a 16-0 lead.

The Hawks did not come close until Lou Hudson, who led his team with 28 points, hit three jump shots in the second period to bring the Hawks within four points, 44-40.

Havlicek pumped in 10 points in the next three minutes and the Celtics raced to a 63-49 halftime lead.

In the third quarter, the Celtics opened up an 18 point advantage, only to see the Hawks cut it back to 10.

Havlicek took care of that. He hit three baskets and Dave Cowens and White one apiece to put the game out of the Hawks' reach.

Havlicek's 54 points was an all-time Celtic high for either playoff or regular season action, eclipsing the previous high of 51 scored by Sam Jones in the 1967 playoffs against New York.

Cortland, N.Y.--Once again the UMass Lacrosse team, Garber's Gorillas, were ranked in the nation's top 20 college lacrosse teams before the start of the season. Another team also listed in the select group was Cortland State, a upper state New York state squad that went all the way to the NCAA finals last year. Today, the Gorillas know why the Red Dragons were ranked 11th in the nation, 6 notches ahead of UMass.

Stacked with a host of returning veterans and backed by the clamor of 2,300 over anxious fans, Cortland State had to wait to the final whistle and then some to salt away UMass 10-8 here Saturday afternoon in the season's opener for both clubs.

After a marathon scrimmage with Springfield College and the Boston Lacrosse Club on Saturday, the Gorrillas stopped the Connecticut Valley Club at the upper Boyden Field the following day, 12-4. Then it was a scrimmage on Monday following a long bus haul to Rutgers Monday morning. In succession the Gorillas met Lafayette, Nassau Community College, Southampton (L.I. club) in informal gatherings before arriving here Friday afternoon for a 2 o'clock practice.

Against Cortland the Gorillas stayed on the bus for the first half and managed to stay close at 5-2 with co-captain Dwight Bloomquist and Attackman Fred Michaels scoring. Stellar netminding by Junior College All-American John Rutledge (23 saves for UMass) kept UMass in the game until the final gun as 2 goals proved to be the final margin. UMass outscored the winners 4-1 in the last quarter with "OJ" Rutledge stingy with his nets.

Michaels finsihed with 3 goals for UMass while Bloomquist had a pair. Peter Connolly, Frank Garahan, and co-captain Hirsch Seidman had one. Time shortened the rally but didn't dampen spirit for the future. At any rate Cortland State remains 11th in the country.

If you've played a lot of sports during your young lifetime and you don't know which one you like best, play Rugby, it's a combination of everything you've enjoyed or hated in the world of sports. You even get to go to Florida. (MDC Staff Photo.)

Aronstein Heads For Gymnastics Nationals

Senior co-captain Jay Aronstein and coach Tom Dunn will be traveling to Eugene, Oregon tomorrow for the 1973 MCAA gymnastics championships. Aronstein, the only man who managed to qualify for national competition, is ranked fifth going into the championships. He specializes in the still rings events.

Aronstein will meet probably the stiffest competition of his career. He has managed a high score of 9.6, second only to the high 9.7 of Indiana State's Bob Mohorney. High scores are in no way a good indication of what will happen in championship competition, however. Aronstein received the highest score in the Easterns last month but managed only second place behind Marshall Avener from Penn State. Mahorney also has the top average in the country.

Aronstein should also get competition from Pete Botthof (North Illinois University), Bill Jaeger (Illinois State), Benny Fernandez and Jack Malmedahl (both from Indiana University at Bloomington). All of these men are from the Mid-Eastern region, as are so many of the top seeded performers. Fernandez tied for fourth with Marshall Avener last year. Aronstein has beaten Avener once and has been beaten once by him this year.

Concerning his upcoming competition at the University of Oregon, Aronstein commented, "I've worked very hard this past month and I feel I've improved considerably from the Easterns. The competition in Oregon is going to be the toughest I've ever been in. If I can handle the pressure of the meet I can easily win."

Undergraduate parody of the University of Massachusetts. The above contributors are responsible for its content and we were damned if we were going to let any faculty member or administrator read the thing for accuracy or approval prior to publication.

Any resemblance between the characters in this parody and any living person, or for that matter, any dead person, or even any semi-conscious person is truly regrettable.

If we've offended anyone, tough. It was for the good of all mankind. And if Nixon can say that, we can, too.

Come Home, UMass

It is with regret that we note the resignation of Chancellor William Randolph Bromery.

But enough of that; he was a mediocre Chancellor at best, and it is now the order of the day to go about the business of replacing him.

The Collegian endorses football coach Dick MacPherson for the job.

We feel that of all the candidates being considered, the Coach is the most qualified for the sensitive position.

He has an untouchable rapport with athletes of all sexes.

He has the great experience of having handled people in all situations.

He has built men, and turned those men into winners.

He is the type of man UMass needs in the next decade.

Dick MacPherson believes that UMass can be great, that it can be a bastion of True Knowledge, and that it can be fiscally responsible.

Like a great leader, MacPherson has a game plan.

He proposes to lead UMass home to the traditional values of honesty and respect, motherhood and country.

"Come home, UMass" cries Dick MacPherson.

We join in with the coach and cry for all others to join in, "Come home, UMass, and let the darkness of despair and destruction become a new day for all mankind."

To Save America

It is my annual custom at this time of year to write an inspiring message to America's militant youth. Since I always strive to make these messages sincere and "from the heart", I shall do my thing this year with that uppermost in mind:

Dear spoiled, deluded, and brainwashed brats:

I am sick of you. I am more sick of your professors, your administrators, your clergymen (if any) your parents, and others who have come very close to ruining an entire generation of young Americans . . .

You young militants, apparently brought up on the permissive nonreality of Dr. Spock, insist on running away from reality. You bemoan the world you "never made". What you fail to understand is that you must live in the world as it is and as it can be . . .

Yet why change just to be changing? Why destroy the American system which has produced the highest standard of living in human history, just because that system is not perfect? Our Republic, with its capitalist economy, is indeed imperfect—but it is the least rehensible system of government and economics which exists. There will never be a perfect system until there are perfect people; there will never be perfect people this side of Heaven . . .

The collectivists, so-called "Liberals," seem to have convinced you that a socialist government can legislate unsuccessful people into prosperity by legislating successful people out of it . . . We cannot be free and equal. Free men are not equal and equal men are not free. While all men are created equal in the eyes of God and the law, they don't long stay equal even there. God penalizes unrepentant sinners, and the law penalizes repeating criminals . . .

The inventiveness of the American system has long been the envy of the world. The only new thing the Yippie Set has produced is a new drug mixing LSD and The Pill, so they can take a trip without kids.

Meanwhile the voice from the Campus cries "hypocrisy!" at the community elders and the "Establishment". Students decry the "rat race", the "crushing materialism," our "money-mad society"—and then wire home, collect for $200, to finance a spring bash of booze and sex at Fort Lauderdale, or a trip to New York for a parade to honor the Viet Cong.

If you students want to rebel against "hypocrisy", why don't you rebel against an educational system whose "Liberal" teachers give you low marks unless you repeat their Leftist fairy tales at examination time?

If "hypocrisy" really offends you, why don't you rebel against the "Christian" heads of your Divinity Schools who are so quick to proclaim that they don't even believe in the divinity and resurrection of Christ?

. . . Why don't you rebel against a rigged communications system which is brainwashing the American people? Not so? How long since you've seen an anti-Communist TV program or movie? Ever? Communism is the scourge of the world, yet you either ignore it or embrace it . . .

Clergy To Fete Hitler Birthday

To The Editor:

On behalf of the Jewish, Catholic and Protestant communities, I would like to announce that the 87th anniversary of Hitler's birth will be Friday.

In celebration of the occasion, we will hold a swastika burning this Sabbath at 7 pm on the lawn of Dickinson Hall, the ROTC building.

In attendance will be Rabbi Meir Kahane of the Jewish Defense League, Rev. Billy Graham, and Rev. Ian Paisley from Northern Ireland.

The highlight of the evening will be a tarring and feathering of a Roman Catholic girl who dated a British soldier, stoning of a Palestinian Arab who protested the expropriation of his sheep farm in Galilee by the Israelis, and the napalming of a Viet Cong deserter.

The birth of Adolph Hitler is an important date for all three religions. Hitler symbolizes the coming together of power, science, and religion into a modern viable force. Until Hitler grew to prominence, world religions had been able to make only sporadic attempts at genocide, suffering, and truth. Those early attempts included the Crusades, the Inquisition, usury, protests against scatter site housing, and integration.

The Hitler birthday swastika burning is open to the public for the cost of 2 dollars. All proceeds will be used to publish Bibles, to finish construction of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine in Manhattan, and to install Marc Chagall stained-glass windows in the new Children of Israel Unity Temples in Salt Lake City and Miami.

Women Unbutton

To The Editor:

Well, the women have finally done it girls, they've unbuttoned their libs and their breasts are finally starting to sag, which should make prospective rapists not so happy. It seems to me that Vietnam was an evil necessity in which the pigs really put it to the poor workers of the rice paddies and villages. And now Nixon is genociding the Indians at Wounded Knee which is no laughing matter.

But seriously, think of what is going to happen to all our gay brothers and sisters who just won't look the same going bra-less.

And speaking of rape, wasn't last week's disclosures about Dean Feild something else? Unite women, because if we don't then the male chauvinist pigs from all over the world will descend down upon Amherst with their thick dicks looking for an easy lay.

And whoever said that love was dead?

To The Editor:

The time has come to tear down the established order; the time has come to bring World-wide Revolution to the University of Massachusetts. We faculty are uniting with our brother and sister workers against the bourgeois ruling class which has trampled the downtrodden proletariat underfoot. We have had enough of this abuse.

The New Order is upon us and we must prepare for it. We ask our brothers and sisters of the student-body to aid us in this Revolution. For too long you have been kept out of faculty committees by the administration, too long you have been "silenced by the administration's cronies on the floor of the faculty senate, too long good teaching has been ignored by the faculty personnel committees which are tools of the ruling class. It is good teaching that must be rewarded, not research!!

When the Dictatorship of the Proletariat has been established, there will be a New Cooperation between faculty and students. The faculty will reject their $20,000 salaries, we will do away with merit increments and payroll bonuses as being Counter-revolutionary to the ultimate Triumph of the Worker. We will come to live with the students in their dormitories; in the New Order there will be Student Input at every level; In the New Order there will be no requirements, no grading, in the New Order there will be simply a love for learning. Come let us work together toward this end. Oppressed peoples of the University, UNITE!!!

UMass Joins Big Ten!

By MUGSEY MALLOY

University of Massachusetts Athletic Director Frank McInerney announced Thursday that UMass was joining the Big Ten Athletic Council, and ending its affiliation with the Yankee Conference.

Also joining was Syracuse University. McInerney also disclosed plans to enlarge Alumni Stadium to a seating capacity of 41,000 and to build an 11,000 seat basketball and convocation center.

McInerney disclosed that secret negotiations had been going on since January 1972, and that the final agreement was reached in February 1973. He said he has the unanimous support of the University Athletic Council, the administration, and the Student Government Association.

McInerney said there will be only a "token $5 per semester raise in the athletic fee" but added "students would be guaranteed choice seats at all sporting events."

Massachusetts will cease its membership in the Yankee Conference at the end of the 1974 academic year, beginning its "Big Twelve" athletic schedule in September, 1974. Opponents in football will include Iowa, Michigan State, Illinois, Indiana, Purdue, and Syracuse. In 1975, two more teams will be included.

Massachusetts will play all-conference opponents once each in the 1974-1975 basketball season, and twice each in a home and home series each year after that. Providence, Boston College, and Holy Cross will remain on the schedule.

Schedules for other sports including baseball, track and women's gymnastics are being worked on now by league officials.

The seating capacity of Alumni Stadium will be increased to 48,000 before the start of the 1974 football season. Thirty rows of sideline seats will be added to each side of the stadium, and permanent bleachers will be erected beyond the end zone. The cost of construction is expected not to exceed $1.8 million.

The basketball and convocation center will be built near the present intramural football and softball fields. The center will be modeled after the Notre Dame facility, generally considered to be the finest complex of its kind in the country. Building will commence in June 1973, and it is to be completed in October 1974. Cost of the center will be $10,500,000.

Speaker of the Massachusetts House of Representatives David Bartley (D-Holyoke) said, "as a former UMass basketball player I think this is a great opportunity for the University to get its due stature and publicity across the country. I offer my support and best wishes as a fan and as an alumni to UMass in the future."

President of the Student Government Association Larry Ladd said at the announcement "although I support joining the Big Twelve and the building of the much needed convocation center, I have reservations concerning their funding. I only hope they don't burden the students as the Campus Center has."

Football head coach Dick MacPherson commented "I can't wait to show the country that we are capable of playing very sound and respectable football in New England."

Jack Leaman, basketball coach, said "it looks like we outgrew the NIT faster than I anticipated. Our goals are from now on a conference championship and a NCAA tournament bid."

A UMass co-ed was overheard to say "I can't believe we're in that whole thing!"

Big Yaz Boozes

By MEL PARNELL

Boston, April 2—The Boston Red Sox suspended left-fielder Carl Yastrzemski today for alcoholism.

Manager Eddie Kasko said that Yastrzemski had been having trouble seeing the ball, and that a resulting investigation shows that the charismatic star was indeed an alcoholic.

Yastrzemski denied the charge, asserting that his spring training trouble was due to his attitude.

He said, "My attitude has been harmful to the club, and I have been slacking off, but I am not an alcoholic."

Yastrzemski had been hitting .052 with 10 home runs and 182 strikeouts in 192 at bats this spring.

Wall Street reported that Big Yaz Bread, Inc. had dropped 37 points in reaction to the news.

Yastrzemski's roommates, Rico Petrocelli and Marty Kelley were not available for comment. Petrocelli is reported to be fond of Yastrzemski's biceps.

UMass Blows Another: Team Blames Leaman

By MARTY BARROLL

A loss to Missouri and a weak showing against North Carolina in the National Invitational Tournament silenced the critics who said that UMass was a "good" team.

Peter Blow was a cold hand in the early going and then was sidelined with a crotch injury against Boston University. He never re-entered the losing lineup.

Team captain Tom McLaughing was quick to give credit for the team's poor performance to head coach Jack Leaman.

"We had the personnel," McLaughing said, "we had the team, we had the skill, and it was Leaman's sucky coaching which made us botch the whole thing."

Another starter was Revere hood Mick Patino, who at times would not take a shot the whole game. "I made them an offer they refused," Mick said.

Tom Williams, super-soph John Murray, super-junior Bill Andimott, and super-frosh Jimmy Olsen never got a chance to play, as often, they were too spaced out from smoking oranges and blowing gum.

"Gum is a real high," Williams, Murray, Andimott, and Olsen intoned in unison.

Star of the team, Dr. A, was out half the season with pickle stem arteria. The honorary title of "Dr." is given to the best player on the team of the Negroid race by gushy, racist sports writers.

The outlook for next season is not bright.

"All of our players are leaving," Coach Leaman said, "because they're sick and tired of the pressure that professional college athletics gives them. They say that they would like to go back to their studies, and that their academics have fallen since they became involved with professional college athletics."

Leaman said that he didn't know what he was going to do. "I have all those uneaten steaks left over," he explained. "Maybe I can pawn them off on some poor people or some hungry children."

The Minutepersons record was 1-27 this year. Their only win came during the game with Salem State Teachers College here at the Cage, when a raucous group of loyal UMass fans freaked out the more staid Teachers by standing for the National Anthem. Standing for the National Anthem is an archaic custom that early Americans practiced as a puberty rite.

The Minutepersons won the Salem State game by a score of 28-27 in overtime.

This is Jack Leaman, and according to members of the basketball team, he may have opened his mouth a bit too much. The Minutepeople disgraced themselves completely this past season, and much of the blame lies on the quiet coach from Boyden. Nice knowing you, Jack. It's been real. (MDC photo by Dick Garber)

Jimmy Olsen, Cosell Square Off: Media War

By ARNOLD ZENKER

The two major media on campus, the Massachusetts Daily Gargageon and radio station WMANURE have declared war on each other, with both sides stating that the campus isn't big enough to hold both of them.

Garbageon Editor-in-Thief Monty "Zuma" Tripoli called the campus station "nothing but a bunch of verbal diarrhea" and called on MANURE Station Manager John Zzzzz to "clean up the act...it's a disgrace to the entire community".

Zzzzz took out his earplug (tuned to WRKO) long enough to respond to Tripoli's charges and level a few blasts of his own. "That goddam rag is just pissed at us because we managed to dump off Marty Kelley on them. If they didn't have such a miserable product themselves they wouldn't be mouthing off so much. They're too damn defensive. Christ, they don't even carry Doonsbury. How the hell can they call themselves a class operation?"

The squabble has even carried down to departmental levels. Garbageon News Editor Bill Blow has called MANURE News Director Jim "Konk" Cannon a "real bush league operator. Every time he thinks he weakens the nation." Cannon was heard to reply with a withering blast of his own. "Ever since Blow's been the man in charge over there, the Garbageon has hit a new low, if that's possible. Imagine, hockey scores on the front pagge.

In the sports department, MANURE Sports Director A. Knit Vest has called on Garbageon Sports Editor Steve Crowbar to "put a little more spice in the operation over there. Kelley isn't enough. There oughta be more chearleader pictures." Crowbar was yard placing a phone call to Vest in which he purportedly told him to "fuck yourself."

The battle is expected to be settled a week from Sunday, when a group of Garbageon staffers try to bury MANURE's chief transmitter in year old newspapers. MANURE is preparing for the onslaught by greasing the transmitter so that the Garbageon staffers can't climb on it. Tripoli, however, is not put off. "I've been a card carrying Italian all my life. Damned if a little grease is going to put me off." MANURE personnel have promised to eliminate Tripoli by greasing the transmitter with soap.

There is also a secret plan for ruining the Garbageon's presses afool. MANURE personnel, however, are not optimistic about its success. "There are a hell of a lot of sewers in Amherst," said Zzzzz, "I hope we can find the right one."

CEQ is facing the problem of a shortage of bins in which to store recycled paper. This scene which was taken on the fourth floor of Eugen Field House on Orchard Hill shows the messy problem this shortage brings. Elaine Massey, a member of the club says "the main problem is that there just isn't enough paper being recycled.

System More Organized

CEQ Easing Recycling Problem

By ROBERTA MARTONE

The Coalition for Environmental Quality (CEQ) has expanded its service to the dormitories and academic buildings and is becoming better organized. Elaine Massey, a member of CEQ told MDC that the system is pretty successful, but "the main problem is that there just isn't enough paper being recycled."

Four hundred and thirty cubic yards of paper and refuse are collected from the University per week, according to Physical Plant personnel. Six and one half tons of this amount is recycled by the CEQ.

CEQ also faces the problem of a shortage of bins in which to store the recycled items. Ms. Massey said the original plan was that the Physical Plant would loan bins to CEQ on a temporary basis. However, she said that these bins were being retrieved almost immediately by the Physical Plant for use in new buildings, thus causing the shortage problem.

Ms. Massey said that due to the shortage of bins, CEQ is unable to benefit entirely from the recycling in dorms on campus.

The Coalition has recycling box locations at the CC West, Hatch, Music Room, CC 1st floor, CEQ office, and at the Collegian office.

Bins are being set up in the academic buildings. However, if the buildings are to be "put on the program", CEQ must establish a system in order that janitors will be notified to pick up the items from the bins. Thompson is the newest building "on the program", said Ms. Massey.

Dumpsters are presently located at Whitmore, Hasbrouck, Herter, Marston, Goodell, Graduate Research Center, Stockbridge, Campus Center, Hampden Dining Commons, and at Patterson Dorm. These bins are maintained by the Physical Plant.

After the dumpsters are emptied by the University trucks, the refuse is taken weekly to Northampton where it is compressed.

The CEQ receives $6 per ton for the refuse. Money is regenerated back into the organization for the purchasing of more equipment. Last year, Ms. Massey said the money was used to purchase small, inside bins which were placed in various buildings on campus. This year, they hope to purchase larger bins.

CEQ was formed by Eva Schiffer, who is a faculty member and also a member of the Sierra Club of National Environment. Although recycling is the most substantial objective, it has other goals also. Ms. Massey said that CEQ's educational goal is also a primary one. There is a library of environmental materials available in the CEQ office.

Following is a list of materials which were found to be acceptable and unacceptable by the Coalition:

Acceptable (need not be flattened out).

Computer cards and printouts, newspapers, cardboard cartons, magazines, paper bags, letters, memos, envelopes, xerox, mimeo, ditto copy (no stencils), (Occasional staples are ok), soiled paper towels, napkins, tissues, junk mail (no cellophane), maps, padded book mailing envelopes, old examinations, phone books, catalogs, term papers, cardboard "saucers" used for meat packaging, even if soiled, old Christmas cards (no metal) picture postcards, match covers (no matches), inside box from frozen vegetables, cardboard packaging if not plastic coated, cardboard egg cartons.

Unacceptable Carbon paper, stencils (mimeo or ditto), milk cartons, wax paper, outside wrapping from frozen vegetables, paper plates, any waxed paper product coffee cups, photo copy material (emulsion paper from some duplicator machines), photographs, black and white, color prints and slides, cellophane (window envelopes), scotch tape, any plastic plastic bags, plastic egg cartons, styrofoam coffee cups, etc., aluminum foil, pie plates, cigarette and cigar butts, rubber bands, food

Selectmen Hear Sewage Ban Reports

By ED FOGARTY

At the Amherst Selectmen's meeting last night, a long debate was heard over the Mass. Water Pollution Control Board's ban on further sewage connection in Amherst.

The Selectmen held a special meeting yesterday afternoon with members of various town committees to discuss the sewage ban. The ban in effect prohibits any further construction in Amherst.

In other business, the Board heard an ad-hoc committee report on dog restraint and the Selectmen voted to allow a one day beer and wine license for Spring Day once again.

In one of the first matters of business the Selectmen voted to allow the Amherst Recreation Commission to continue construction on the Mill River Recreation Area.

The Board rationalized that the Mill River Project would be in use during the summer when UMass is not in session. The demand upon the sewer system during the summer would be down, and could handle the River Project Sewage.

Amherst Recreation Commission Chairman Stanley Zomak added, "the project should be finished by Summer, 1974 and would add into the North Amherst lines (which have recently been rebuilt)."

Steven Puffer, construction agent, said the Town should call a halt to all construction and should withdraw all present permits. He argued that no matter who flushes the toilet, it still adds to the sewage flow.

Selectman Michael Sullivan spoke about the Mill River Project decision. "Some of these projects will not be coming on line for quite some time." He said that the Mill River Project will be in use too far into the future to effect the sewage ban.

The Board further voted not to allow the Amherst Housing Authority to continue construction on the 80 units of elderly construction in the Boltwood Project. The Boltwood Project is a redevelopment project for Amherst Center.

Selectwoman Nancy Eddy said "I would rather wait on the waiver (to allow further construction of the elderly housing) until we can review the situation."

Student Attorney Richard Howland was present at the meeting and argued in favor of the project. He informed the Board they could be held to the contract they signed to construct the housing units.

Later in the regular meeting, Joseph Chunglo represented the interests of the small developer. He said that the present ban is hurting the small developer who depends on construction of two to three homes per year for his livelihood.

"Already the banks are giving us a hard time. The small developer must show a proof of sewer permit before he gets his loan."

On the dog restraint issue, the Selectmen heard from the Citizens Advisory Committee. The Committee recommended that dogs not be under total restraint.

Selectman Leo Bouchard argued in favor of even "stiffer laws" to keep the dogs under control. He advocated a 24-hour, full year leash law.

At present, Amherst must rely upon the Police to gather stray dogs. Many times this ties up a patrol car as well as an officer for over an hour.

The issue will be decided in Town Meeting next October.

Student Attorney Richard Howland asked the selectmen to grant permission for a one day beer license for Spring Day.

The Board voted to allow the licensing only on conditions that the grounds be cleaned up.

The Board cited that they had had trouble recently from a one day liquor license given to a fraternity.

Steve Puffer local construction agent said the problem would be aggravated by the continued construction of developments in Amherst.

With Spring here, a concert should not be too far off in the offing. Here we see a couple of jubilant folks dancing to their hearts content at a concert held here last summer where we were all at home, enjoying a well deserved vacation.

AAUP/MSP Unwilling to Debate

By BILL DENSMORE

The newly formed AAUP/MSP campus faculty union coalition announced yesterday its unwillingness to participate in an open debate on collective bargaining scheduled for this afternoon.

Howard O. Brogan and Joseph D. Burroughs, UMass-Amherst faculty, and president of the local American Assoc. of University Professors (AAUP) and the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) said in a letter to the Collegian, published yesterday, that they would not participate in the planned debate because "two hearings important to our faculty are to occur in Boston on that date."

The AAUP/MSP pair cited state house hearings on educational reorganization and a new bill affected collective bargaining for state employees and said "we intend to be fully represented at both of these sessions."

Legislation to implement educational reorganization was filed Friday by Governor Francis W. Sargent.

Copies of the education bill filed by Sargent are not yet available, but sources have said that it is "significantly different" from widely-criticized reorganization plans unveiled in January by Secretary of Education Joseph M. Cronin.

It is expected that the legislation will still include the most unpopular portion of educational reorganization-- regionalization of the state into five fiscally separate zones, each with a major state college campus.

Meanwhile, Robert Wellman, secretary of the Faculty Senate, said yesterday that a meeting called to discuss collective bargaining on this campus will be held as scheduled tomorrow.

He said that as a result of AAUP/MSP non-participation, the meeting will be ostensibly to organize opposition to faculty unionization on this campus.

All faculty opposed to unionization are invited to attend, as are interested students, according to Wellman.

The meeting is to be at 4:00 this afternoon in room 104 of Thompson Hall.

Wellman is Chairman of a five-man, self-proclaimed "Committee of Concerned Faculty", the group which is sponsoring today's meeting.

The committee yesterday issued a statement in reply to the planned AAUP/MSP absence from their meeting stating that "due to a series of misunderstandings, representatives of the AAUP/MSP feel unable to debate".

"Because of the highly organized and well financed campaign to bring a union to the Amherst campus, many faculty members seem to feel the outcome is inevitable," the faculty group said.

"We sense on the campus a great reluctance to see unionization come about. It is our purpose to provide a focal point for action to get all the disadvantages of unionization publicized and discussed by the faculty."

Gas Rationing Has Begun

By MARY THORNTON
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP)—Gasoline rationing on the wholesale level has already started in New England and by mid summer retail prices may climb as high as 60 cents per gallon on both the east and west coasts, according to testimony presented Monday before the Congressional Task Force on Energy and Resources.

"Prices have gone up three cents in the Greater Boston Area in the past week alone," said U.S. Rep. Paul Cronin, R-Mass., a member of the task force.

Though rationing has not yet been extended to the East Coast consumer, some gasoline dealers are not able to get supplies.

Frank Cahill, manager of a chain of 28 gasoline stations based in Philadelphia, said, "We've been getting about half of the gasoline we need. And one station in Chelmsford, Mass., has had its supplies cut off completely.

"If something isn't done soon," he said, "I'll be forced out of business."

Cahill said retail prices in Philadelphia went up two to four cents in the past week.

"The problem was made in Washington, D.C.," said John Buckley, vice president of the Northeast Petroleum Corp.

"During the last year or two, government policy on oil imports has been characterized as a kind of crisis-oriented short-term reaction policy. Policies were adopted for six months or one year or four months, depending on the severity of the situation," Buckley said.

"These policies do not lend themselves to rational analysis, nor do they permit an oil company to plan intelligently for meeting long term requirements," he said. "As a result, we are often forced into using extend in mid-winter at very high prices rather than being able to plan our purchases on an annual basis or longer term."

Buckley blamed recent oil crises largely on the government's import policy which years ago imported oil in order to cut down competition with domestic oil.

Problems with the domestic oil situation were outlined by Wilfred Hall, executive director of the independent Grocer's Association of New England.

"Our known usable crude reserves in this country are retreating, all shares of oil. Alaska oil will not be available for at least another three years. U.S. refinery capacity is at a standstill, and the U.S. demand is increasing at five to ten percent per year."

Trustees To Tackle Tenure

By BILL DENSMORE

The UMass Trustees are scheduled to discuss tenured appointments for four allegedly "radical" economists and approve a new set of governance procedures tomorrow at their regular monthly meeting in Worcester.

The Trustees are expected to approve a tenured appointment for New York City public school's head Dr. Harvey B. Scribner on the School of Education faculty tomorrow.

The new governance document essentially formalizes existing relationships between faculty, student and administrative groups on this campus.

Among new procedures are the formation of a "multicampus budget committee" to "advise the President on budget requests and budget alterations in light of the long range plans and objectives of the University."

The new document changes the faculty with primary responsibility in such academic matters as curriculum, subject matter and methods of instruction, research, admission, libraries and other aspects of University life which relate to the educational process."

It states that faculty will carry responsibility for appointments, re-appointments, promotions, tenure, and salary adjustments.

According to the document, "students will have primary responsibility for such areas as programs, services, and activities which are designed primarily to serve students."

It states that "students will be assured the opportunity of participating in the evaluation of a faculty member's effectiveness."

The report charges the UMass system president with coordinating all campuses, and asserts that the Trustee shall maintain control over planning, and development as well as having "all authority, responsibility, rights, privileges, powers and duties of organizations and governments under state law."

Dr. Scribner has been Commissioner of Education for New York City since 1971, but has resigned effective June 30th and is now on national vacation.

In Vermont as Commissioner of Education from 1968 to 1971 Scribner stressed that learning—not teaching—should be the focus of education. He has advocated and treated students as "consumers" rather than pawns in the educational process.

Tenured positions for four economists will be discussed at tomorrow's meeting, among them professorships for Harvard Profs. Samuel S. Bowles and Herbert M. Gintis.

Bowles was denied tenure at Harvard last fall, allegedly because of his "radical" interpretation of economics. He is a member of the Union of Radical Political Economists, (URPE). His father has served as Governor of Connecticut and U.S. Ambassador to India.

Gintis, a Bowles and Richard Wolff, both currently teaching at the City College of New York, are also candidates for tenured positions in the economics faculty. Both live in New Haven. Gintis has degrees from MIT and Yale. Wolff has a Ph.D. from Yale.

Gintis is presently a lecturer in education at Harvard. His contract with that University is to expire at the end of this year.

Guerrillas Kidnap Kodak Executive

By LOUIS CHUNOVIC
Associated Press Writer

BUENOS AIRES (AP)—Leftist guerrillas kidnapped a national editorial and an executive of Eastman Kodak Co. on Monday in a shooting spree of terrorism following the election of a Peronist as president.

Jeremy H. Shillan, 19, the first U.S. citizen kidnapped in Argentina, was here both times when his abductors ran a pickup truck into his car near the Kodak plant in suburban Buenos Aires, police said.

Aired six or eight young men, some shooting, they were guerrillas, piled out of the pickup, pulled Shillan from his car and drove off in another vehicle, witnesses told police.

Meanwhile, Kodak officials said they had not heard from the kidnappers.

A Marxist group, the People's Revolutionary Army, claimed credit for the abduction of Jose Alberto Francisco Aguirre Morales, 38.

He was seized during the night at his downtown apartment by three young men, who tied up his wife and son. The kidnappers produced shotguns in the walls of the apartment calling for "popular justice for Trelew"—a reference to 16 guerrillas killed last August in the navy prison in Trelew City.

Authorities said the 16 were killed trying to escape, but guerrilla groups say the prisoners were taken from their cells and executed.

The double kidnapping created a problem for the Peronist Party's campaign, the Peronist who won Argentina's presidential election March 11, has promised amnesty to political prisoners despite the objections of the outgoing military regime.

Many of the political prisoners are accused of kidnapping and other terrorist acts. Monday's abductions are likely to strengthen the military's resolve to resist amnesty.

The group that claimed to have kidnapped the editorial in anti-Peronist but four other guerrilla groups same subsequent to attack Peronists, the leftist Argentine strongman.

A Kodak spokesman said Shillan was born in Portugal, where he studied chemical engineering before getting a graduate degree from the University of Minnesota in 1965.

He then went to work at Kodak's Rochester, N.Y., plant and later worked for the company in Mexico, Peru, Chile, Panama, Venezuela, Colombia and Bolivia.

Shillan was transferred to the Kodak headquarters in this capital before being sent to Argentina in 1970.

Another U.S. company, the Bank of Boston, was being Monday to receive a letter to manager, Cesario Bodiacci, 55, an employee, he was seized by terrorists last Wednesday in Rosario.

Terrorists and common criminals have kidnapped more than 30 Argentine and foreign businessmen in the past two years. Ransoms of million in ransom have been paid in the form. Standard Electric Argentina, a subsidiary of International Telephone & Telegraph reportedly paid a record $2 million to free an Italian executive last year.

Antiwar Reps Plan Rally

Representatives of antiwar organizations in the Amherst area will meet tonight in the Fireside Lounge at 7:30 P.M. to discuss plans for a rally at Ottauquechee Thursday to protest President Nixon's visit to the United States. Individuals or groups interested in holding a local action in response to United States bombing in Indochina and continued U.S. intervention in Southeast Asia are urged to attend the meeting.

The National Peace Action Coalition, Student Mobilization Committee and other antiwar forces have called for demonstrations at the time of Thieu's visit in numerous cities including Atlanta, New York, Chicago, Boston, Washington, D.C., Los Angeles and San Francisco. The actions are being held under the slogans of "End all aid to Thieu" and "U.S. out of Indochina now."

"Thieu's visit with Richard Nixon gives all those opposed to the continuing U.S. presence in Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos an opportunity to voice their dissatisfaction with the phase of the Nixon Administration in keep a hand in the affairs of Vietnam while at the same time claiming to have achieved peace in Southeast Asia.

Hatch To Begin Closing Early

By BILL BALLOU

A tradition of nine o'clock coffee and cupcake breaks, sleepy-eyed students listening to "Layla" while trying to digest Basic Statistics, and futile searches for Twinkie supplies that have long since run out is apparently coming to an end.

The Hatch, starting this week, will close at 7:30 p.m.

It used to close at 10:00 p.m., but a steady decline in late-night business since the Campus Center Coffee Shop opened up in 1970 is forcing the Campus Center Food Services to close early on a six-week experimental basis.

"We've been doing an in-depth survey of night operations in the Hatch and Coffee Shop," said Tony Leslie, Assistant Director of Food Services for the Campus Center, "and we found that there were generally about 50 people in both the Hatch and Coffee Shop throughout the night. It just wasn't economical to run both operations, so we had to close down one, and for various reasons we decided it would be the Hatch."

In calling the closing "experimental", Leslie said that Food Services would "re-adjust" if necessary. "If we find during the six weeks that people are banging down the doors to get in and that there's a real demand to re-open the Hatch, then we will. It will all be on a business demand type basis."

The early closing of the Hatch forced Food Services to lay off some student help with little or no notice and the students who were laid off are unhappy about it.

They plan a meeting in 416 Campus Center tonight to discuss the situation.

Leslie blamed himself for the situation but adds, calling it a "lack of coordination" on his part. He said that Food Services tried to notify as many people as possible on Friday, March 30, the day before vacation, but many had already left.

Leslie traced much of the trouble in confusion caused by the death of John Hatker, who was the manager of the Hatch at the time of his death on March 17. Hatker's death, in the midst of the crisis, Leslie said, forced the study to be rushed and put Food Services in the position of "not knowing what happened."

Students fond of late-night socializing and "studying" in the Hatch will have to search out new havens beginning this week. Due to a decline in late-night business in the Hatch, the Campus Center Food Services is closing the Hatch at 7:30. Tony Leslie, Assistant Director of Food Services for the Campus Center attributes the decline in business to the Coffee Shop.

Pros And Cons Of Abortion Debated

By KERRY MELLO

The use of abortion as an available alternative to pregnancy, and the right of an unborn fetus to life, were the opposing points stressed in a debate on abortion in Hamden Dining Commons last night.

Participating in the debate were Arlene McCrea and Lucien Miller of the pro-life movement Life-line, and Britt Buggman and Sue McCord, both pregnancy and abortion counselors.

Ms. Buggman, a member of the Valley Women's Center, began the debate by citing an instance which occurred a few years ago, of a woman senior who died when her boyfriend attempted to perform an abortion on her. "This," Ms. Buggman stated, "was due to the fact that there were no available alternatives," and prompted her to begin a counseling center which will assist in delaying abortions.

Ms. Buggman stressed the point that abortion was an alternative to pregnancy and not to contraception, "the best thing to do is not to get pregnant."

However, she stated that it is essential to have the alternative, "the key word is choice, choice and the definition of where life begins." This Ms. Buggman believes, is individual, and cannot be legislated.

"The Church is predominantly male, lawyers are male, doctors are male," the counselor stated, "but it is women who bear children and die from childbirth."

Following Ms. Buggman was Mrs. Arlene McCrea, a member of Lifeline, Mrs. McCrea is a member of Lifeline, a group that provides alternatives to abortions and support for the unwed mother.

She expressed concern that there wasn't enough support for alternatives to abortion that aren't associated with political and moral institutions.

"Lifeline", Mrs. McCrea stated, "provides counseling for the problems of an unwanted pregnancy, and also financial aid and housing for the mother, both before and after birth." She added that the agency also provides counseling for the father of the child, who is also often confused.

In stating her views on abortion, Mrs. McCrea brought out the distinction between the "right to parenthood and the right to life", stating, "the fetus is still a human life, from conception all it needs is nourishment to become a full human being."

She stressed that the right to life, a right guaranteed by the Constitution, exceeds personal opinions and that "the fetus is not part of a woman's body but a complete entity of its own."

In rebuttal to Mrs. McCrea's speech, Ms. Buggman made an analogy to the "Christmas Carol" where two children appeared to the author of it as child. "Ignorance and Want."

She also stated that in her experience as counselor, people feel more psychological pain in giving up the child than in having an abortion.

Lucien Miller, a professor here at UMass gave the second speech for the pro-life movement. He also explained the purpose of Life-line, accepting its function as a community of support and love for the unwed mother.

"Lack of support often drives a girl to abortion", Mr. Miller stated, "and in a time of crisis and social pressure, alternatives are necessary."

Professor Miller then defined the term liberalism as individual, stating that when individuals don't realize the full impact of abortion, before undertaking one.

He stressed that there is no conclusive way of determining a fetus, despite the sterile conditions of an aspirating room. "Some people think that having an abortion is like having a tooth pulled, and should resolve the unpaid effect of it."

Miller cited statistics, taken from studies done by the Christopher Society, of physical complications of the abortion technique, which is practiced in the first two weeks of pregnancy. These studies found that in addition to a criminal record, there were ten percent more incidences of miscarriage in future pregnancies, fifteen percent of premature births and four percent of ectopic pregnancies. Also there was a two percent increased chance of sterility in the woman having the abortion.

"When a abortion, what it does to the unborn and what it does to the mother, are things that must be known," stated Mr. Miller.

Giving the final speech for pro-abortion, was Mr. Tom Bird, a counselor at Northampton Medical Center. Mr. Bird stated that abortion should, "be available as an alternative to contraception that don't work."

He expressed that there is a need for available contraceptive abortion methods, pointing out that, "too many women have been maimed already by a society that prevents abortion."

Citing the cases of forty-eight or fifty year old women, who, "can't tolerate a pregnancy", Mr. Bird concluded that "no human being's right to life includes the use of another's support system."

Suspect Held In Dorm Robbery

University of Massachusetts Public Safety Department reported Monday that one suspect in a March 8th robbery of Pierpont dormitory has been apprehended.

Sgt. Francis Manzer, Head Campus police officer, said the Colleges that Gin F. Livingston, 19, of Springfield was arrested last Thursday by Springfield Police.

Livingston was one of two men who was alleged to have robbed several residents of Pierpont of $50 last month. The robbery took place in a student-designed suite in the basement of the dorm.

It was reported that one of the men came to the door and asked for a cigarette. Upon receiving the cigarette, he left to get his companion who then forced his way into the room, allegedly brandishing a .38 revolver and a knife.

Livingston, who is not a student at the University, is being held in Hampshire County Jail on $10,000 bail on three counts of armed robbery. Police say that the other suspect is still unidentified and has an substantial period in his possession.

Women Urged To Office

By PAT WILDER
Associated Press Writer

NEW ENGLAND, N.H. (AP)—Rather than just have a character in current events they can run for political office and that they can win.

Mrs. Arnold, a freshman member of the National Senate, is her own best example.

A long time member of the League of Women Voters, she decided the only way women could be influential in making changes was to get involved in the decision-making process.

"The easiest way to do it is to run for the state House of Representatives first," said Mrs. Arnold. "But my district already had two good women representatives."

So she ran against them, as she ran for the state Senate last year, though she had never sought election before.

She said it shows it is not easy for six senate seats from Gilmanton County, the state's largest population center.

The Democratic senator's national reputation was her best matter who "had a great feeling for her town."

University Requested Meeting Cancellation

By BILL Staff

A meeting between the state Bureau of National and State Certification between negotiators for the University administration and two faculty unions was cancelled last week at the request of the University.

According to Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, the hearing which scheduled for the purpose of reaching an informal agreement on a collective bargaining unit for faculty was cancelled "because of the great importance that the administration attaches to these issues."

Bromery has been named the negotiator and potential chairman of a faculty bargaining unit "most important from national presidential elections" for the Union Amherst campus.

According to Bromery, "the University has recently engaged Atty. Arthur F. Mondl of the Boston law firm of Morgan, Brown and Joseph "to handle the administrative role in faculty collective bargaining attempts."

Bromery said that a Tuesday meeting has been cancelled because Mondl has a "long standing previous commitment scheduled for that date."

In The Nation And The World

Boycott Reducing Meat Sales

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Meat sales were down in some areas Monday as the nationwide boycott picked up steam. Housewives planned meatless menus, supermarkets advertised fish specials and farmers kept a wary watch on the situation.

The week-long boycott officially started Sunday. By Monday, an Associated Press survey showed that many shoppers were bypassing the meat counters in supermarkets and turning to items like fish, vegetables and cheese. Newly imposed price ceilings on beef, lamb and pork appeared to have little effect on consumers' determination to boycott high cost items.

Lloyd Jarrell, meat manager of a giant open air market in Richmond, Va., said, "Our red meat sales were off 20 to 30 per cent over the weekend." He said beef sales were the hardest hit. Poultry sales remained steady, he said, and seafood sales went up 20 to 30 per cent.

Like several other store managers, Jarrell said he was stocking less meat than usual in anticipation of the boycott.

The National Farmers Organization, whose members withheld livestock from the market for several days last week to protest declining hog and cattle prices, planned a new series of meetings to chart future action. There were reports of layoffs in meat processing companies.

Canadian farmers sent reduced hog shipments to market Monday in anticipation of a meat boycott called north of the border. A group called WASP-Women Against Soaring Prices-is sponsoring the boycott to back its demand for a price review board to stop increases in the cost of food, housing and other necessities.

At home, meanwhile, several supermarkets advertised meatless specials. A Charlotte, N.C., store ran a full-page newspaper ad Monday morning and two-thirds of the page was devoted to seafood items.

There also were indications of some price decreases.

Great Scott supermarkets, a 46-store Michigan chain, announced that prices of 58 meat items will be rolled back to their lowest March levels.

A spokesman said the rollback will take effect Tuesday and will continue 30 days. There will be no limit on quantities available for purchase, he said. Examples of the cutback, he said, will be chuck steaks at 79 cents a pound, instead of the 98 they now cost; top sirloin at $1.69 instead of $1.88; and rib pork chops at $1.66 instead of $1.79.

Restaurants got into the picture with all-fish menus or bargains for meatless eaters.

"Don't Eat Beef," read the headline on an advertisement for a chain of New York restaurants that offered customers a 10 per cent discount on non-meat entrees.

Other restaurants reported increased business no matter what the menu. A spokesman for the Black Angus Steak House in Miami said, "We had a ton of people Sunday." Chicago restaurants also said business was good.

"For the first time in 20 years I bought some Navy beans," said one woman shopping in Albuquerque, N.M. "They tasted pretty good."

President Nixon imposed the price ceiling on beef, lamb and pork Thursday night. Internal Revenue Service inspectors began enforcing the ceiling Monday. The limit applies only at the wholesale and retail level; it does not affect the farmer or cattleman, nor does it cover poultry and fish.

"A consumer boycott can do absolutely nothing to increase supplies of quality meat," said the president of the Kansas Livestock Association, William G. Amstein Jr. of Clifton, Kan. Without increased supplies, he said, prices will stay high.

"Boycotts can only disrupt normal marketing patterns and most definitely will discourage livestock industry expansion plans," Amstein said, claiming that demand and increased production costs are responsible for higher retail prices.

There were some protests against the boycott. More than 90 persons, most of them farmers and their families, bought up the entire stock of meat at the Red Owl Store at Rochester, Minn., on Monday, spending $1,483.25.

–PRICES STILL TOO HIGH–Customers at meat counter in a Burlington supermarket off route 128 were few, and they just looked without buying. Housewives across the nation still contend that meat prices already were too high for President Nixon's ceiling on them to be meaningful. The price control apparently had little effect on a planned nationwide consumer boycott of meat. (AP)

Nixon Opposes Price Freeze

By BILL NEIKIRK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—A bill to freeze prices and rents would be counterproductive and probably subject to a veto by President Nixon, Treasury Secretary George P. Schultz said Monday.

"The President is strongly opposed to it and I wouldn't be surprised" at a veto, Shultz told the House Banking and Currency Committee, where there is strong backing for the legislation.

Shultz, Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz and John T. Dunlop, director of the Cost of Living Council, appealed to the panel to extend the President's broad authority to control wages and prices for another year, without trying to write a freeze into law.

The bill opposed by the administration would make the freeze effective March 16. It has the backing of about 20 members of the 40-member panel.

"We don't think that it is necessary at this time, nor is it desirable," Shultz said. "I believe it would be counterproductive."

If rents were frozen nationwide across the board, when the problem is only regional, "that could do real damage," he said.

In the food area, he said, the answer lies in basic law of supply and demand.

The Banking Committee plans to vote Tuesday on the administration's request to extend the Economic Stabilization Act for another year, to April 30, 1974. The President needs the broad, flexible powers to control the economy, the three officials said.

While Democratic members of the committee called the President's abandonment of mandatory wage-price controls to a largely voluntary system a mistake, the administration officials said it is a necessary step toward a free economy.

"Personally, I feel the Congress will be extremely foolish if it gives the administration 'more flexibility' to continue to make more mistakes—mistakes at the cost of the American consumer," said committee chairman Wright Patman, D-Texas.

Butz and Shultz defended the administration's action to impose ceilings on meat prices, saying that it did not expect the strong upsurge in demand for meat that occurred in the past year.

Butz said the meat boycott would have an impact on prices, but added just as the housewife is now causing a restraining influence on prices, she was also responsible for the rise in prices "when she wasn't restraining herself."

Asked if he saw farmers withholding meat from the market to keep up prices, Butz said he didn't think that would be widespread.

He said farmers have to sell steers to the market when they reach a certain weight and "I don't see anybody stopping eating."

ITT Admits Attempt To Block Election

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—International Telephone and Telegraph board chairman Harold S. Geneen acknowledged Monday that the firm offered $1 million to the U.S. government to try to block the election of Marxist Salvador Allende as president of Chile.

Testifying before a special Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee, Geneen said the offer to the White House and the State Department had a dual purpose—to defeat Allende by uniting his political opponents or to induce Allende to permit American firms to recover their investments in nationalized properties.

Geneen said the government did not take him up on the offer, which was made while Allende's 1970 election hung in the balance in the Chilean Congress.

"Of course," the ITT chief executive said, "our thinking was very preliminary and we had no specific plans. But, he went on, "we did think that some socially constructive joint private industry and government projects could be part of the overall plan." This he said, might include building houses for the Chilean people.

Geneen also acknowledged discussing with a CIA official the possibility of supporting a plan to block Allende's election.

SAIGON (AP)—The four-party military team charged with accounting for hundreds of missing Americans is setting up shop this week and a U.S. spokesman said top priority will be given to the recovery of the remains of airmen who died in North Vietnam.

The team, made up of North and South Vietnam, the Viet Cong and the United States, has scheduled its final formal meeting for Wednesday.

"One of our first orders of business will be arranging for the early transport from Hanoi the remains of those airmen killed when their planes crashed or those who died in captivity," the U.S. spokesman said. "The Democratic Republic of Vietnam knows exactly where the bodies are buried. For numbers of Americans that we list missing, they are dead and the DRV has their remains."

Hanoi has given the United States a list of 55 American servicemen whom North Vietnamese authorities said had died in captivity.

The U.S. spokesman said arrangements would have to be worked out to exhume the remains, then prepare them for transport back to their families.

Nixon Pledges Aid For S. Vietnam

PRESIDENTIAL PORTRAIT-South Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thieu chats over a cup of coffee recently during an interview at his home in Saigon. Thieu has embarked on a mission to change his image, but his critics are unimpressed, dismissing his gestures as mere 'window dressing' designed to make him look as close to a democratic leader as possible during his current visit to the United States. (AP)

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif. (AP)—President Nixon and South Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thieu pledged a joint effort Monday to build a lasting Indochina peace, then began discussing Saigon's plea for stepped-up U.S. economic aid.

After the leaders completed an initial 90-minute meeting at the Western White House, officials indicated Thieu had collected Nixon's pledge of an infusion of U.S. aid for postwar reconstruction.

But indications were that Nixon was frowning upon a Thieu request for a specific U.S. guarantee of renewed military intervention if North Vietnam blatently violates the still-fragile cease-fire agreement.

As he gave Thieu a full military welcome, Nixon voiced hopes their two days of summit talks would produce "great steps forward in building the lasting peace, the real peace that we have fought together for . . ."

Thieu responded by expressing "heartfelt gratitude" for past U.S. assistance and said he hoped the summit would bring "a consolidation of peace in Indochina and a new era of constructive cooperation in peace among all parties concerned."

After the two leaders' opening meeting, White House press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said they had reviewed the situation in Indochina and had "stressed the importance of implementing" the cease-fire agreement signed two months ago in Paris.

The two presidents, Ziegler said, "reaffirmed the continuing strong friendly ties" between their countries and discussed the development of their postwar relations.

The spokesman said the talks were held in "an atmosphere of friendship and cordiality." Sources reported the summit was bringing hard bargaining on economic issues. Ziegler acknowledged there was "substantial discussion regarding economic assistance . . . redevelopment assistance . . . which the United States could continue to provide to South Vietnam as we move into the postwar period."

He said the leaders were discussing "in depth and in detail" such other questions as efforts to account for U.S. troops still missing in action, reported infiltration by North Vietnam and the presence of North Vietnamese troops in Laos and Cambodia.

As he gave Thieu a red carpet welcome to the Western White House four days after the United States officially ended its decade of Vietnam involvement, Nixon said: the Vietnamese now "have the strength to defend their own independence and their right to choose their own government . . ."

". . . We hope from this day, as a result of our talks," Nixon said, "will come great steps forward in building the lasting peace, the real peace that we have fought together for, and that now we want all of our people to live for."

Thieu responded by expressing "heartfelt gratitude . . . for the noble contribution of the American nation" to defend his country and said he, too, hopes "the joint effort of our two governments would lead to a consolidation of peace in Indochina and a new era of constructive cooperation in peace among all parties concerned."

In the two days of talks—his first face-to-face conference with Nixon in nearly four years—Thieu is seeking assurances of continued moral and economic support for his government.

Nixon reportedly is ready to give these assurances, but sources said the toughest bargaining is centering on Thieu's request for a guarantee the United States would intervene militarily if the North Vietnamese blatantly violate the cease- fire accord.

Before beginning their initial session, Thieu, who arrived Sunday in Los Angeles, received a colorful, ceremonial welcome to the country he last visited a dozen years ago.

On a sunny, cloudless day, Nixon greeted the smiling Vietnamese leader with a brisk handshake, then escorted him and his official party along a red carpet to a bunting-draped stand to receive a booming 21-gun salute and other military honors.

Then, against the backdrop of an invitation—only crowd of about 500 persons waving tiny American and South Vietnamese flags, the two leaders exchanged opening remarks.

Nixon looked back to the day four years ago when they met at Midway Island and said they had talked then of the day "when we could meet not for the purpose of discussing the conduct of war, but for the purpose of discussing the building of peace . . ."

Ervin Insists On Testimony

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr., D-N.C., Monday rejected a White House effort to obtain special treatment for presidential aides in the Senate's investigation of the Watergate affair.

Ervin repeated his vow he will seek the arrests of White House aides if they do not honor subpoenas to testify under oath in formal private and public sessions.

He also told a news conference he believes White House counsel John W. Dean III was involved in a "conflict of interest" because he apparently represented key presidential advisers while trying to learn if they were involved in sabotage and espionage attempts.

Later Monday, Ervin and the special senate investigating committee he heads were criticized by presidential press secretary Ronald Ziegler.

The Watergate investigation, Ziegler said, has been "plagued by irresponsible leaks of tidal wave proportions" and Ervin should "get his own disorganized house in order so that the investigation can go forward in a proper atmosphere of traditional fairness and due process."

Later Ervin's Watergate committee scheduled a Tuesday meeting to discuss ways of closing off leaks.

Another leaked story appeared in Monday morning papers. Columnist Jack Anderson said convicted Watergate spy James McCord had given the committee a written memorandum in which he quoted another convicted burglar, Gordon Liddy.

The memo said Liddy related that the bugging of Democratic offices had been planned in the office of Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell by Liddy, Mitchell, Dean and Jeb Magruder, a Nixon campaign official.

Anderson supplied The Associated Press with a copy of the alleged memorandum, but any signatures or identifying marks had been removed, making it impossible to verify its authenticity.

The memo, if authentic, would document what sources had reported earlier about McCord's testimony before the committee. It said the alleged meeting was held in February of 1972, while Mitchell was still head of the Justice Department.

hearsay."

Ervin had been asked earlier Monday about news leaks from the special committee and said "About all you can do is to pray to the good Lord to give some people a sense of restraint."

He said he intended to release no such information "in the absence of concrete evidence of wrongdoing."

Ervin also said Monday he has accepted an invitation by Atty. Gen. Richard G. Kleindienst to give committee members across to the FBI's own Watergate investigation.

He said this access includes raw FBI files which he said would be safeguarded from public exposure and would not themselves be placed in evidence.

Ervin called Nixon's claim of executive privilege "spurious." He said it does not apply in situations where there are allegations of illegal or unethical conduct.

Court Passes 'Pipe-Line' To Congress

By VERNON A. GUIDRY JR.
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—The future of the controversial trans-Alaska oil pipeline rested with Congress Monday after the Supreme Court declined to enter the ecological and legislative tangle.

The high court, without comment or dissent, refused to interfere with a lower court decision blocking construction of the pipeline to bring oil from Alaska's North Slope to the seaport of Valdez.

The 789-mile project costing in the hundreds of millions faltered over the lack of a few feet of right-of-way.

The U.S. Circuit Court here ruled in February that the Mineral Leasing Act of 1920 provided only 54-foot rights-of-way for pipelines over public land. Since the trans-Alaska project would require 146-foot widths in some places, the Circuit Court prevented the Secretary of the Interior from issuing the necessary permits.

Roderick A. Cameron, executive director of the Environmental Defense Fund, said, "The court's action has the effect of putting Congress on the spot. Congress must now decide whether merely to amend the Mineral Leasing Act of 1920 to permit wider rights-of-way or to re-examine the specific issue of the best way responsibility to extract Arctic petroleum reserves."

The Environmental Defense Fund, one of four conservation organizations which brought the suit, favors a pipeline across Canada to the Midwest. "The all-land route is superior from an environmental standpoint as well as an economic viewpoint," Cameron said in a statement.

Sen. Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, predicted that Congress would amend the act and free the pipeline within the year.

The Senate Interior Committee has already begun hearings on the issue. Its counterpart in the House has scheduled testimony April 11.

Yet to be settled is the question of environmental impact. The circuit court refused to decide whether the government's impact statement was adequate because, it said, the information will be out of date if and when Congress acts.

3rd World Ends Occupation Of Brandeis U. Building

WALTHAM, Mass. (AP)—Faced with a restraining order and a show of force, members of the Third World Coalition Monday night left the Brandeis University administration building they had occupied for about nine hours.

An estimated 50 students, claiming to be members of the Third World Coalition took the building over about 8 a.m. Monday to demand higher levels of student financial aid to students from low income families, particularly those of Puerto Rican and Mexican-American descent.

The students left the building peacefully shortly after 5 p.m. after being informed that a restraining order had been issued against the occupation by Middlesex Superior Court in Cambridge.

Dr. Marver Berstein, Brandeis president, left a meeting in New York Monday and flew to his administration building to inform its occupiers that the university would not negotiate student demands as long as the occupation continued.

The occupiers were also tole that if they did not heed the restraining order, they would be forceably evicted from the structure, known as the Bernstein-Marcus building.

Students participating in the takeover claimed the university had cut student financial aid from 96 per cent of need two years ago to an estimated 82 per cent of need next year.

Bernstein told students discussions about their demands for 100 per cent financial aid could "take place only after such illegal actions have ceased." He said if students vacated the building before the restraining order was served, the university would take such action into consideration in taking disciplinary action. A university official said the students did leave the building before the order was served.

While the occupation was under way, a group of black students paraded outside the building in support of those inside and the school's Student Senate unanimously endorsed a resolution supporting the actions of the students inside the administration building.

Smith Presents Bach Recital

Tonight at 8:00 p.m. the Smith College Department of Music will sponsor a recital of the keyboard works of Johann Sebastian Bach, presented by Barbara Lissandri, in Sage Hall on the Smith campus. The recital will be open to the public at no charge.

The program will include "Two Part Inventions," the Sinfonia in F minor, six Preludes and Fugues from The Well-Tempered Clavier, and the French Suite No. 5 in G major.

Miss Lissandri received her musical education in Boston. She did her undergraduate work at Emmanuel College, and in 1970 earned a Master of Music degree from Boston University. She has been a member of the faculty at Smith College since September.

Summer Vacations

To Russia With Soap

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP)-Leonard Moore is setting to sea this summer-in a bathtub. He plans to row from the United States to the Soviet Union in the name of international friendship.

Moore, 48, is the director of the West Oakland Community Center. He plans to set out on July 4 from the town of Wales on the tip of the Seward Peninsula, hoping to catch a favorable current that will take him to Siberia, about 52 miles across the Bering Strait.

"There is a need for friendship around the world," said Moore. "If we just stand there and say it, most people wouldn't pay attention. But if we dramatize it, people will see the need.

"Rowing a bathtub between the two countries is basic and simple."

Moore, who will be accompanied by a friend in an escort vessel, wants other people to send him letters he can take to Russia with him. His goal is one million letters.

Moore, who is awaiting clearance from the Soviet Embassy in Washington, admits he's never been to Alaska, doesn't know much about the Bering Strait and doesn't know where he'll land.

A six-footer, Moore plans to use a 4 1/2-foot-long porcelain bathtub, outfitted with a cushion seat and foot rests. Food and other supplies will be in the escort vessel.

The bathtub is nicknamed the "U.S.S. School Kid." Moore used the same vessel last September to row 180 miles down the Sacramento River from Red Bluff to Sacramento, in a stunt to publicize the community center.

Times Reporter To Speak

Mr. Robert A. Semple, Jr., a distinguished reporter in the New York Times Washington Bureau who has written extensively about the Presidency during the Johnson and Nixon administrations, will speak on the relationship between the president and Congress tomorrow at 7:00 p.m. in the Engineering East Auditorium.

The Political Science Department is sponsoring this event and cordially invites the University community to attend.

5 Foreign Students Needed

The Executive Council of the International Student Association urges foreign and American students to become members. Presently, 5 members are needed on the Council.

The International Association works on programs which include foreign student pre-contact letters to new admits, arrival orientation, housing needs, sports, travel, cross-cultural workshops, parties and even smorgasbords.

If more than 5 people sign up, a runoff election will take place April 18. The Council will then elect or appoint its officers.

To become a member, submit your name to the Foreign Student Office in Whitmore 239, indicating activities of interest to you and your experience with foreign students and cultures.

Exec Session Gets Tepid Response

By MARY THORNTON
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP)—For many years citizen groups have urged the legislature to open its executive sessions to the public, but the chairman of the only committee which has totally opened executive session says he's not sure it is a good idea.

Sen. Alan D. Sisitsky, D-Springfield, Senate chairman of the Public Service Committee, says the results of the open executive session are "mixed and I wouldn't necessarily recommend them to everyone."

On the positive side, Sisitsky says the open session "opens up the government process to anyone who's interested, and that's good.

"With an audience, you feel compelled to discuss the merits of the legislation, and the arguments are weighed more carefully. There tends to be a downplay of the political considerations," he said.

When executive session is closed to the public, Sisitsky said, "people go one way in committee and another way outside. Some bills are affected by personalities and others are gotten rid of just because someone feels like going to lunch." But, said Sisitsky, the good points of executive session may be outweighed by the bad.

"We hear all these things about secrecy in government, but hardly anyone from the real public ever shows up. Usually it's just lobbyists or people directly affected by a bill," he said.

"If you've got a powerful lobbyist out there," Sisitsky said, "then you've got to be pretty brave to kill a bill because they can hurt you.

"And you might feel pressured politically to vote for something you wouldn't vote for if there weren't any people out there watching," he said.

MIT Prof Energy Crisis To Discuss

M.A. Adelman, professor of economics at MIT, will be the main discussant for today's session of the Faculty Colloquium on Energy, at 3 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union.

Dr. Adelman will be considering the area of energy economics and is expected to comment further on his earlier view that there is no critical oil scarcity in the short range future. He has previously stated that the world energy crisis is "a fiction", kept alive by the policies of the U.S. Government.

Members of the University community are invited to participate in this discussion as well as the April 17th session which will feature Gordon S. Brown of the U.S. State Department's Office of Fuels and Energy.

The Colloquium is part of the University's Global Survival Studies project and is presented through the cooperation of faculty from the College of Engineering, the departments of Physics, Anthropology, and Political Science, the Center for International Education and the Office for International Programs.

Grants To NAFSA Conference Available To Asian Students

Asian students interested in the field of foreign student advising are eligible for a limited number of grants. These grants are to be used to attend the NAFSA Conference in Detroit in May. The recipients of these awards must have a definite commitment to return to their country preferably within one year of the conference.

The awards, which may not be for more than $150 per person, may be used for either travel or per diem assistance.

Students from Afghanistan, Burma, Cambodia, Ceylon, Hong Kong, India, Indonesia, Japan, Korea, Laos, Malaysia, Nepal, Pakistan, the Philippines, the Republic of China, Singapore, Thailand or Vietnam are eligible. Applications should be sent to:

A Bit Of A Correction

Believe it or not, part of yesterday's Collegian was an April Fool's edition. The four April Fool's pages were supposed to be pages one, two, 15 and 16, but due to a printer's error were pages two, three, 15 and 16.

When informed of the mistake, the printer said: "April Fool!" In case you still can't figure it out, the April Fool's pages have an April 1, 1973 date on them.

P-10 Speaker To Analyze Adventures

An analysis of the possible motives compelling certain people to seek and risk adventure is the theme of tonight's Project 10 Discussion Series. Dr. Louise Farnham, Professor of Psychology at Hampshire College, will speak on "Man, the Adventurer" at 8 p.m. in the Project 10 Apartment at the front of Moore House in Southwest.

"My work has been to attempt to understand the spirit of adventure, to understand why certain sorts of people want to put themselves on the line in stress situations, for no apparent reason but pleasure," Dr. Farnham has said.

The discussion is presented as a "work in progress," which she sees as the "natural history of the idea of whether the literary expression of the quest for adventure, and the tools of social science analysis, are even compatible." Many of her case studies are drawn from works of mountaineering literature and the climbing experiences of mountain enthusiasts.

She was educated at the University of Minnesota and at Stanford University, where she studied with leading social psychologists Nevitt Sanford and Joe Katz. She taught at Yale University before joining the Hampshire faculty in 1970, where she has coordinated the program of freshman seminars in human development.

The speaker on April 10, is Jim LaMacchia, Project 10 undergraduate teaching fellow, who will lead a discussion on "The Mythical Christ." He will stress the mythic meaning of Holy Week in the ritual of rebirth and resurrection. All Project 10 events are open to the public.

Talk On Cross-Country Bike Trip

An illustrated talk about a cross-country bicycle trip will be presented in the Campus Center Rooms 805-809 tonight at 7 p.m. Dave Palmer and Jan Reid will describe their experiences on the journey which lasted several months in the fall of 1972. Their talk, sponsored by the Bicycle Club, will cover several aspects of the trip, including their equipment and techniques, and advice based on the problems they encountered.

There will be information about the TOSRV-East on June 23 and 24, which is a tour of Vermont that parallels the Green Mountains. In addition, information on the Boston Council's trips (of the American Youth Hostels) from the beginning of April through early June will be available.

Philosophy Prof. To Lecture On Thoughts Of Moore

"Moore's Defense of Common Sense," a philosophy lecture, will be delivered by Prof. Alice Ambrose Lazerowitz in Room 917 of the Campus Center today at 4 p.m.

For many years Dr. Lazerowitz taught at Smith College, retiring last year as Sophia and Austin Smith Professor of Philosophy. She has been a member of the University of Massachusetts graduate faculty and the faculty of the University of Michigan, and is one of the leading interpreters of the thought of Moore and Wittgenstein. For 15 years, she has been editor of the "Journal of Symbolic Logic."

Financial Aid Candidates Available To Talk To Students

Candidates for the position of Financial Aid Director will be in the Student Activities Office this week.

Hopefully, as many students as possible will meet with these people while they are in the office. Anyone wishing to speak with any of the candidates should see Sheila (Rm. 102) in advance of their arrival. Below are listed the times the candidates will be here:

Joan Gebron—April 4—2:45-3:00 p.m.

Warren Cooper—April 5—2:45-3:00 p.m.

A Woman's Right?

By SHARON McGOURTY

One complaint that I've heard from members of various women's movements is that women should not necessarily be the ones to socialize children; that men can be as affectionate and skillful with children as women. The value here is to have men somehow be more involved with the whole realm of having children—from pregnancy through the child-bearing process.

The fact that a man can and should be involved with a woman's pregnancy stems from the belief that the life inside the woman came from both people, from the man as well as the woman, and thus both of them share the responsibility. It's obvious: men must start to do more than simply pay the doctor's bills.

The demand for abortion, "a woman's right", is all messed up. Abortion is not purely a woman's right because the life she carries she didn't create herself. It seems that in most pregnancies there was a man directly involved. Where are the women who ask that men be more involved with their children? Why do they deny the fact that the life growing within them is a part of the man they had relations with? I think men must be terribly confused. Legally, a man now doesn't hold any right to his genealogy. He has absolutely no legal say over what is, in part his. Saying that abortion is solely a woman's right is to deny the fact that being pregnant has anything to do with a man. Anything that has involved the work of two people belongs to both of them, and when one person has total power the other is somehow oppressed—not to mention the oppression of the created third.

Maybe the fact that many people in this country don't understand process makes abortion such an option. Just like so much American labor lacks creativity, and does not take one through a process of growth, many Americans probably don't see their whole life as a growth process.

One thing about growing and becoming is that there has to be a beginning. And lots of times beginnings are hard to see— sometimes you have to wait a while and stand back and look—then you can see all that has gone before. Remember how fast and unnoticeably the little kids in your family got big? Maybe through your college experience so far you can't see yourself changing in great leaps, but by the end of it chances are you'll be a different person. Just because we can't always see growth while it's happening, that doesn't mean it isn't there. And what is a fetus? Few people have ever seen one. More seem to want to deny that creative process in its beginning stages. Like any other form of life, it's got to start, it's got to begin and be allowed to grow. Saying a fetus is "nothing" before three months is a complete denial of process. Without those first three months no human life would ever happen. You can say that a fetus is not fully human, but then how many of us are?

What's hard is to trust in something that we cannot see. And a fetus is so small as to seem invisible. Just like that Indonesian War that dragged on for so long. For many of the people here who couldn't see it or feel it—it didn't exist. And the result was the death of countless innocents.

We have to trust in something that's happening that isn't directly visible before us. That spontaneous generation isn't responsible for the life that is legally protected after three months. And I wish men would take a more real responsibility for the total life of the unborn, rather than denying their claim to it.

Nixon: I Want My Meat

Charles Camelopard, MDC reporter and wiretap expert, spent his spring break in Washington, D.C. monitoring telephone bugs installed on President Nixon's private lines. The eavesdropping devices have been installed in the Executive Office Suite since last summer when Camelopard took advantage of Mr. Nixon's absence (he was at the Watergate) to bug the lines.

The President has been having domestic troubles lately, particularly with Pat who insists on taking her place among American homemakers by joining the consumer revolt against high meat prices. The first lady has refused to purchase or serve meat this week and Mr. Nixon is upset. Camelopard recently heard the following conversation between the nation's foremost married couple.

Ring, Ring, Ring.

"Hello."

"Hello, who is this?"

"Pat, this is Dick, how are you, honey?"

"I was fine until you called. How many times do I have to tell you not to call during "As The World Turns? Don't you have something to do?"

"Yes I have something to do. President Thieu is waiting for me in the outer office, I just called to see what we're having for dinner."

"Is that all you want? You mean to tell me you interrupted my TV time just to see what we're having for dinner tonight? Sometimes I think you're crazy."

"Now listen to me, Pat. Let me make one or two things perfectly clear: I am the president. I am the breadwinner of this family and when I sit here all day long listening to people complain and call me names and criticize, I get tired. And I look forward to my dinner. and I'm looking forward to it now. It's my Executive Privilege to know what we are having for dinner, and I'm looking forward to it now. It's my having for dinner and I want to know too."

"Alright you don't have to get grouchy, you've already ruined "As The World Turns" so I might as well tell you. We're having stewed tomatoes, cucumber salad, green beans, sauerkraut, and eggplant parmesan."

"What's for meat?" asked the president slightly calmer now.

"No meat. There's a boycott on and I'm not buying any meat this week."

"I am the president; I want meat tonight. I don't care if its hot dogs or pig's feet or bologna. I want meat."

"Now you listen to me, Richard Nixon. You are the President and the breadwinner. I run the house; I'm not buying any meat this week and if you want meat you'll have to get it somewhere else."

"OK, Pat, OK. Don't yell, do you want Mr. Thieu to hear you? I pride myself as a great diplomat. I'll get rid of Thieu, have him come back tomorrow. Then I'll make some calls and get us invited to dinner. A few of these friends of mine are turning into leeches, I'll get one of them to invite us over for dinner. Is that fair?"

"I suppose so, as long as it's not the Agnews. I can't take another minute of that on-again-off-again personality of his." And just remember I'm not buying any meat. If you can't get us invited anywhere, just come home."

"Alright, goodbye."

Nixon's lines went dead for about two hours. He apparently went to another office to call around looking for a dinner invitation. President Thieu was told to come back tomorrow. Camelopard sat reading "Jonathan Livingston Seagull" until his light lit indicating that Nixon was back on his line to Pat.

Ring, Ring.

"Hello, who is this?"

"Dick."

"You again, right in the middle of Laurel & Hardy. What do you want this time?"

"What do you mean, I called you before. I've been trying to get us invited to dinner, remember?"

"Oh yeah, you made me miss 'As the World Turns'. Did you have any luck?"

"Not really, I called the Earl Butze's but they're having fish. I hate fish. Then I called George Meany, and he and his wife are doing Dr. Stellman's water diet. He invited us over for some One-a-Days and ice water but I begged off. Bebe Rebozo is having spaghetti with clam sauce, but I hate those slimy mothers and I can't stand the garlic breath afterwards. Then I called John Connally. He's usually good for a steak or two, but his secretary said he couldn't talk until after we Republicans covered up the Watergate affair sufficiently. Too bad about that mess; we could have eaten like pigs if that McCord hadn't opened his mouth. Patrick Gray wouldn't have anything to do with me either. There was no answer at the Mitchell's. Too bad, John is a big spare rib man and Martha can cook the hell out of pork rinds. I don't know what to do."

"What?"

"What do you mean 'what'? I just told you all the people who wouldn't have us to dinner. Weren't you listening?"

"Yeah, when are you coming home?"

"I'm not, I'm taking you out for dinner."

"OK, where are we going?"

"How about McDonald's for a couple Quarter-Pounders."

"Anything you say, Dick, but don't come home until after the 'Newlyweds' is over. And I'm still having fish. Goodbye."

Non-radical Manifesto

Political radicalism has always been at its most lucidly effective when lapping up its fuel for militancy from the sweat laden palms of crisis. But in the absence of such crises, which serve as a focal point for the rallying of diverse personalities and groups to a common cause, radicalism often becomes sterile and casts about quixotically for a firm mooring place, free from the ambiguities which so constantly mar the delineation of right and wrong. It is in this latter situation that present day American radicalism, particularly of the Marxist variety, finds itself and having been robbed of the moral purity and complacent self assurance which the McCarthy era, civil rights and the Vietnam war bestowed upon it, has begun to stake out increasingly trenchant ideological, or world view positions, within the context of which the subtle complexities of non-crisis situations are ground through the wheels of quasi-Marxism to emerge with a simplicity which masks reality behind a blanket of blind illusion strung from the rafters of apparent truth.

But what happens when an essentially incoherent, mysterious, and unsystematizable world is viewed through the Cyclopes eye of an uncompromisable, systematized world view is that real morality takes a back seat to ideological fervor, individuals are reduced to objects of classes, one of which becomes the culprit for all evil, and irrationality, intolerance, and cruelty are vindicated by the march of history toward its final liberating end. It was these facts that Damus attempted, with little success, to point out to Sartre who, enamoured with Merleau-Ponty's defense of political terror, went to inordinant lengths to excuse and justify the Stalinist purges in the name of a future historical truth.

Future historical truths are a doubtful contingency upon which to commit mass muder and we find Camus at his most attractive which he denies to the Marxist dialectic the right to incarcerate in its flames the basic humanistic sentiments in light of which most of us find murder and torture barbaric and repugnant. The justification of inhumane means in the name of an end good is a dubious undertaking particularly when the posited ends seem conspicuously remote and unattainable.

The current popularity of quasi-Marxism among radicals, while not yet of the virulent quality which marked Sartre's defense of Stalinism, is an increasingly disturbing trend for it represents a retreat from freedom and self-questioning introspection, an inability to distinguish myth from reality, and a refusal to recognize the tragic element which must accompany most moral choices, particularly those supported by concrete action. This tragic element, which is the unavoidable guilt into which a truly moral man must plunge himself, is washed away by the smug deification of the historical process.

In the real world, history is an unpredictable concurrence of limitedly contingent events and not representative of a grand dialectical evolution of Hegalian ideas or Marxists modes of production toward a final climactic end. Furthermore moral action is a never ending struggle to chart a delicate path between the differing shades of grey representative of the range of possible moral choices. Guilt is the irredeemable result of moal action and only in light of a recognition of this tragedy can human beings act responsibly and in the vein of humanism. The avoidance of this realization, which so often accompanies modern radicalism, is the first step into the depths of a false consciousness leading with its logical extention to immorality and terror.

If the world is to make any moral progress it will not be at the hands of radicals who ground their actions in an exclusive claim to moral truth and a stubborn insistence on their ability to discern the historical future. Rather it will be at the hands of men like Camus who based his moral sensibility on a reverent respect for human life and its real if at times absurd quest for dignity, and on a deeply skeptical attitude toward those who sought to sacrifice man on the alter of absolutes.

Put A New Direction In Your Life

To The Editor:

Perhaps this letter, written by a UMass/University Year for ACTION Volunteer might be of interest to veterans who have returned to school:

"I am a veteran enrolled at UMass as a sophomore, and currently participating in the UYA program. If you're interested in an exciting, challenging opportunity, perhaps you'll be interested in what I'm doing.

Last semester I had a problem: large lecture halls filled with disinterested students frustrated the hell out of me. Material presented in class was understood, but not really meaningful. I had reached a point in the educational process where I knew what I wanted to do in the future, but I wasn't sure how my present education was going to affect my abilities to get a job done.

This semester, things are different. I'm working at the Urban League in Springfield as a legislative/research assistant in the housing department. I'm researching present housing laws in the state, and helping with proposals to change some of them. I research and write proposals for funding to continue programs being phased out by Nixon's moratorium on federal housing. I'm also getting 30 credits for a year's service in the program, $230 a month from UYA, and the G.I. Bill!

What I really believe is more important is that I'm working and developing a positive relationship within the community where I work that will help effect some kind of change.

I'm learning fantastic things about myself, my job, and the workings of a growing city. I know that I'm going to continue studying for an advanced degree in community planning and I can't wait to get back to the University and get the courses I'm going to need.

If you're seeking new direction within your life, if you have the ability to love, respect, trust and work with people, then contact the UYA office and see what's happening.

Protest Cuts

To The Editor:

Congressman Michael Harrington of the Sixth Congressional District has compiled an itemized list of domestic Federal programs in Massachusetts which are scheduled for termination, or severe cutbacks, if President Nixon's "New Federalism" budget for Fiscal Year 1974 is approved by the Congress.

Harrington's 18-page document catalogues more than 80 programs, presently funded under the Departments of Agriculture; Commerce; Labor; Housing and Urban Development (HUD); and Health, Education, and Welfare (HEW)--all of which will be affected by the proposed budget cuts when the 1973 Fiscal Year ends on June 30th.

Scheduled for termination, under the proposed Nixon program, are such essential low-income assitance programs as:

Health Facilities Construction Grants (HUD, P.L. 88-443)
Community Action Program (HUD)
Model Cities Program (HUD)
Emergency Food and Medical Services (HUD)
Neighborhood Youth Corps (Dept. of Labor)
Educational Opportunity Grants (HEW, P.L. 89-329)
National Defense Student Loans-Direct Loan Contributions (HEW, P.L. 85-864)

A copy of the complete list is available for examination at the Government Documents desk on the 4th level of Goodell Library. Several members of Amherst Citizens for Participation in Political Action (CPPAX), a citizens' group lobbying against the budget cuts, also have copies of this information. (Address: Box 197, Amherst, Mass. 01002)

I urge all registered voters in the First Congressional District to write, wire, or telephone Congressman Silvio Conte, 239 Cannon House Office Building, Washington, D.C. 20515 (Tel. 1-202-225-5335), strongly protesting against the President's proposed cuts. Since Conte is fifth-ranking Republican on the full House Appropriations Committee, which must consider the proposed budget cuts, his views could significantly influence the results of sub-Committee votes, full Committee votes, and the final House floor votes on the jeopardized domestic funds.

But, like most incumbents who haven't been seriously opposed for re-election over the last ten years, Conte again needs some hard-line persuasion by his constituents--and not only those who would be most adversely affected by Nixon's "austerity" budget.

Moreover, if you feel that letter-writing is not enough--it isn't enough in this situation--I urge you to attend a meeting of Amherst CPPAX Wednesday, April 4th, at 7:30 p.m. in Room 178 of the UMass Campus Center, where concrete lobbying strategy to save the funds will be outlined.

Not All There

To The Editor:

Regarding your most recent issue of the Collegian, (April 1) it seems to me that several articles are not exactly "all there." I mean, having gone to the N.I.T. at Madison Square Garden, I got the impression that the Minutemen won the game and NOT Missouri! Also, I was shocked to discover that my hero, Carl Yastrzemski, was an alcoholic and imagine my surprise when I read of Rico Petrocelli's, well, you know-tendencies. And him with those two cute twin sons of his! However, I was glad to see that the newspaper has added to the staff such fine writers as Mel Parnell and good ole Arnie Zenker.

I also noticed that there seemed to be not one, but TWO front pages. Now I'm sure that was just a printing mistake but be careful or you'll be known as the paper with TWO FACES! (Tee Hee!) I was also surprised to read that the New Africa House was taken over by whites. I have always considered myself a person who believed in equality for everyone regardless of race, color, and/or creed. But this is just TOO MUCH! But I don't know, after all, I thought that MACUNAIMA was Italian for Place Signature Here. Imagine my embarrassment.

No Place For ROTC

To The Editor:

The issue of ROTC is one that we thought had been, at least, partially settled last year when academic credit was denied to ROTC courses. It now seems that the faculty has done an about face and requested that credit be returned. I find it hard to believe that the Faculty Senate makes decisions without having good reasons for them. The reason that credit was taken away last year was extremely clear. The ROTC program is externally controlled by the Department of Defense, and hence, inconsistent with the autonomy of the University. This certainly hasn't changed since last year. If people are thinking that now that the war in Vietnam is "over" the military system in this country is going to become warm and humane they are fooling themselves dangerously. The military system now is the same as the military system last spring, and it still has no place within the University system.

As for the argument that won this change of heart in the faculty, I believe in academic freedom, also. I think that every student has the prime face right to take any course offered by the University. This is not to say that therefore the military has the right to offer the courses. If what one man in the ROTC program told me is true, he studies management, drug control, etc. I think it is safe to say that all of these courses either could be taught, or are being taught within established University departments. No one is interfering with a student's right to take these courses. I simply question why the University faculty feels the military deserves the right to teach them. At the May Board of Trustees meeting a decision will be made on this issue. Tuesday night at 8:00 in the 9th floor lounge of the Campus Center I will meet with anyone else, faculty or student, who feels the same. If you are concerned please be there.

Remember Your Tickets

To The Editor:

If you made reservations for the UMass Music Theatre production of "Company" before you left for vacation, remember to get over to the Fine Arts Council office at 125 Herter Hall between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m. to pick up your tickets. This fantastic musical comedy, entirely student-produced, will be presented on April 5, 6, and 7 at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. The deadline for holding these reservations is two days before each performance. After that time, the tickets go back on sale. Remaining tickets will be sold daily between 9 and 4 at 125 Herter and one hour before the show at Bowker.

Holding All The Aces

To The Editor:

The letter which appeared in yesterday's Collegian via the courtesy of Professors Burroughs and Brogan of the new giant economy size AAUP-MSP, was very interesting to we who hold no legal say in the union activities on this campus. Their attitude of "we don't have to talk to you" seems to be quite a bit below the frame of mind one might consider the correct for an organization that is trying to collect votes. As a matter of fact, it seems to be quite below the frame of mind that men who want to reason about a very important issue would be expected to have.

If this attitude of "you have to come and see us or we'll take our ball and go home" continues, how can we expect our supposedly liberal student-oriented friends will act when they hold all the aces in a bargaining session—without the watchful eye of the student body.

The not-long-dead Faculty Group for Academic Freedom rears its ugly head again.

Two Essays On Racism

The two editorials on this page appear in connection with the Symposium on Racism and Capitalism, April 4-6, See schedule, page seven.

By ROBERT E. COLE

By now, the existence of racism is fairly well known. Some of us have reached this conclusion through our own experience; others of us by accepting the authority of the National Advisory Committee on Civil Disorders and other blue ribbon bodies diagnosing the malaise of our society. There are still others who have come to this conclusion through research and study.

The evidence that racism is a fundamental part of U.S. society is compelling. In terms of our personal experience, we may encounter individual hatefulness. Within our academic institutions, we see that nonwhites are under-represented among students, and to an even larger extent, among faculty. Looking at the society as a whole, whites enjoy lives lasting eight to nine years longer than non-whites, and the infants of the latter are twice as likely to die.

Although government no longer assumes the burden of legally enforcing racism, it is nonetheless a part of the process. In Boston, for example, Roxbury property assessments run at twice the level of the city as a whole. On the public expenditure side, education is only the most familiar example of inferior public services for Blacks. Regarding justice, in one study, Blacks convicted of crimes against white persons (assault, rape, etc.) drew over seven more years on the average, than when the races were reversed.

While racism is common in both individual relationships and in public institution, its most significant and onerous forms are experienced through our private enterprise economy. To begin with, non-whites are slighted when marketable resources, such as property and skills are passed out. To compound the matter, if one is not white, he or she has difficulty in marketing the resources they possess. Often non-whites can find no buyer at all. As one small example, airlines just don't hire Black pilots except for fifty token representatives. More pervasively, in an economy which is not accustomed to provide jobs for everyone, Blacks are twice as likely to experience that fate as whites.

Even where a buyer can be found, non-whites receive less for what they have to offer. This is reflected in the fact that a Black male must have a college degree to receive as much income as a white male with an eighth grade education; or in the fact that a Black baseball player must be a better batter to make the "majors" than if the prospect is white. The accumulative effect in our capitalistic market system is to provide non-whites only a little more than half the money income of whites.

The process does not stop here, however, since the poor in general, and non-whites in particular, pay more. It is well established that retailers charge higher prices and/or provide lower quality than elsewhere in a metropolis. A study of Chicago rents discovered that ghetto rents were twenty per cent higher than elsewhere in the city for comparable housing. In short, every time a dollar changes hands, non-whites pay the racism tax.

A reasonable individual might ask, since racism is experienced through the private enterprise system, could the system itself be the cause in some sense of racism? After all, it is the banks, building and loan associations, and realtors who conspire to segregate neighborhoods. It is the profit maximizing firm that decides who gets a job, who is promoted and trained, and to a large extent, what the wage will be. It is also the firm that charges more in ghetto areas, and even raises the price when welfare checks come out. Moreover, it is our largest corporations who are in a position to influence public policy through their special access to government, communications, and foundations.

Although we may know that racism exists, it is necesary to ask why, if we hope to eliminate it; and it may be the free enterprise system we should look at first.

Robert E. Cole is on the faculty of the Department of Agricultural and Food Economics.

By JOHNNETTA B. COLE

Traditional scholarship in America is rather curious in the approaches it takes, and the approaches it typically does not take, to the study of racism. One can distinguish four significant (although overlapping) attempts to explain racism in the United States. (1) The oldest type of explanation argues that racism is inherent in the nature of things. Current exponents of this view include Schockley, Herrnstein, and Jensen, who argue that Blacks are genetically inferior. Although the logic is not clear, it is implied that inferior ability justifies an inferior economic position. (2) Another long established type of argument looks for some historical event which, no matter how fortuitous, ordained the current state of affairs. A prominent local exponent of such a view is Smith College's Stanely Elkin and his "Sambo" hypothesis which suggests that present Black behavior is due to a series of historical traumas. (3) A more recent approach is to blame the victim; to argue that the condition of Third World peoples is of their own making, rather than a creation of the society as a whole. In this vein, Mr. Moynihan is well known for his argument that Blacks "don't act right" because of their Black mamas. (4) A final common view is that the fact of racism can be effectively treated by minor policy changes such as civil rights laws or spending an equivalent of say five percent of our military budget on manpower training. The influence of these "poverty warriors" has of course recently receded.

It is important to note what the above approaches have in common. The first three, for the most part, divert guilt from the U.S. system as a whole. Current U.S. society cannot be held responsible for slack genus or for long past events, and in any case, what could be done even if guilt where acknowledged? The fourth option, while recognizing the possibility of progress, implies that it is only the victim who can bring it about. Without Third World peoples changing their own behavior, government can do nothing; and with the necessary change, government action is largely unnecessary. The last and more liberal approach essentially says one can make an omelet without cracking eggs; justice can be had without a major transformation in America's institutions. All have in common, however, that they accept fundamentally the inevitability or desirability of our social system as a whole. Put differently, none asks if the basic nature of the system create racism.

Failure to ask this question is particularly curious, given the shortcomings of traditional approaches to the study of racism. First, much traditional work is based upon faulty, or non-existent evidence. The best example is the reoccurrence of the genetic inferiority theme, in spite of the fact that there is general agreement that the contention has no support in fact. Second, and perhaps more interestingly, policies based upon traditional approaches have generally been dismal failures, as witnessed by the work of the "poverty warriors" of the 1960's. The empirical and policy failures of traditional approaches, one would think, would call into question the underlying theories themselves.

It is clear however, that traditional scholarship what ever its short comings in explanation and policy, has deflected attention away from an examination of the more fundamental nature of our society. We can begin the task of remedying the deficiency by asking if it may be the economic system itself which provides a basis for racism.

Don't let the price of a college education stop you.

The price of a college education is skyrocketing. Fortunately the Air Force had done something to catch up with it. For the first time, the 6500 Air Force ROTC Scholarships include the 2-year program, for both men and women.

If you can qualify, the Air Force will pay for the remainder of your college education. Not only do ROTC 2-year college scholarships cover full tuition, but reimbursement for textbooks, lab and incidental fees, as well as a tax-free monthly allowance of $100.

To cash in on all this just apply, qualify, and enroll in the Air Force ROTC at Dickinson Hall, (413) 545-2437.

It's a great way to finish your college education in the money, and enjoy a future where the sky's no limit. . .as an officer in the Air Force.

Students Going To See "Bunraku"

The UMass Asian Studies Program has organized a bus trip to New York to see the National Puppet Theater of Japan present "Bunraku" this Saturday.

Total cost of the trip will be $8.00. This price includes round trip bus fare, and a special group reduction admission charge. Enroute, Professor William Naff, chairman of the Asian Studies Program will conduct a lecture on Bunraku to familiarize the group. The bus will leave UMass on Saturday at 9:00 a.m. and Smith College at 9:30 a.m., returning at about 9:30 p.m.

All inquiries and reservations can be made through Ms. Lori Harrigan, Asian Studies Office, 804 Thompson Hall, 545-0886.

Bunraku is nearly a 300 year old puppet theater of Japan. Bunraku is both humor and tragedy played out with the dramatic intensity often beyond the range of live actors. The Bunraku company depicts the ornate beauty of hundreds of years of tradition and had created a theatrical experience unequalled in power and sensitivity. In its presentation of works by Japan's greatest dramatists, its literary quality ences throughout the world.

The New York Times has said that Bunraku plays, "are classic Japanese dramas, and the acting of the puppets, each with its three black-garbed manipulators, is only one part, together with the music and narration, of an unusual and thrilling experience in total theater."

National Puppet Theater of Japan is now on a North American tour and this is a rare opportunity to see Bunraku performed outside of Japan.

The Asian Studies Program is planning a trip to New York to see a performance of Bunraku, the ancient Japanese puppet theater. The performance by the National Puppet Theater of Japan features works of Japan's finest dramatists.

Aggie Frat To Laud Inductees

On April 4, 1973 Alpha Zeta will honor some 20 outstanding students from the College of Food and Natural Resources at a reception at the Murray D. Lincoln Campus Center. These new initiates will become part of an honorary fraternity almost as old as the land-grant institutions themselves.

The purpose of the fraternity, from its inception, was to bind together fellowship, leaders and potential leaders studying agriculture on campuses across the Nation and in Puerto Rico. Through such Alpha Zeta chapters, agricultural students have been inspired and motivated to develop their full academic and leadership potential.

Presently, Alpha Zeta has 59 chapters functioning in 48 land-grant colleges; 10 state colleges; and the University of Puerto Rico. Since its founding, Alpha Zeta has grown in numbers and chapters unlike some of the "social" fraternities. The United States Department of Agriculture alone lists some 500 Alpha Zeta alumni on its professional staff.

Alpha Zeta is a unique fraternity which not only honors those of high scholastic standing with membership. To remain in "good standing," members must be willing to give of themselves by partaking in acts of service useful to the campus and community. Alpha Zeta is also unique because its members are familiar with the major developments of this century, such as soil and water conservation, reforestation, urban and rural planning, food technology, marketing, management, environmental sciences, economic development, animal nutrition and production, leisure time activities, foreign aid, and international agriculture. In fact, there are more than 500 distinct professional occupations represented in Alpha Zeta nationally.

Members of Alpha Zeta are aware that agriculture in the United States, alone, represents a staggering 300 billion dollar investment, an investment in which the alumni of Alpha Zeta has and will influence.

TURN THOSE USELESS SKILLS INTO HANDSOME BUDWEISER® PATCHES

For example, if you can hug cans pretty good, you can wear a Budweiser World Champion Patch. Just hug, next to your person, a record bunch of empty Bud® cans. Record to beat is 38.

BUDWEISER WORLD CHAMPIONSHIPS? WHAT'S GOING ON?

Oh, happy day. At last someone is doing something positive about the current world shortage of champions.

Budweiser is sanctioning five absurd events in which college youths can set records and earn wonderful, big Budweiser patches (7"x6", washable, genuine colors).

Besides the breathtaking BUD•CAN HUG above, there are four other ways to be a World Champion. Get details at your favorite beer store where you see the "Budweiser World Championship" display!

Do one, beat the record, tell us about it on a postcard and get your marker pen ready for inscribing your particular specialty beneath where it says "World Champion."

(Maybe you've detected that this is not an official, rigid-rules "contest." But it is a lot of fun, even if you can't break the records. You can, though, can't you?)

TO GET YOUR BUDWEISER WORLD CHAMPION PATCH (EVEN IF YOU DON'T SET A RECORD), JUST WRITE YOUR NAME, ADDRESS AND WHAT YOU DID ON A POSTCARD.

UYA Recruitment Continues Thru April

"My senior year was going to be a repeat of my junior year," one former University Year for ACTION Volunteer said, "upper level English classes, philsophical meanderings and vague feelings about my future."

Instead, Al Alessi joined the UMass/Amherst University Year for ACTION and went to work at Friendly House, a multi-service neighborhood center in Worcester. He became Program Director, and through his experience, earned the credits he needed to graduate.

Now, nearly two years later, Alessi is preparing to enter the University of Chicago Law School and will leave the Program Director's position he had held since September, 1971, a position he was asked to continue as a salaried staff member after the completion of his year of UYA service.

For Alessi, those 12 months as a UYA Volunteer offered "a year long, love-hate affair with three or four hundred youngsters," an opportunity to grow close to "the widest range of personalities" he had even encountered, and an educational equivalent to a "long course in recreational therapy, multi-problem families, public relations, the psycho-dynamics of poverty and racism, public health and on and on."

He had come to know dope addicts, grade school arsonists, hyperactive children, withdrawn children and those kids whose parents "would not or could not care for them." And he had come to know himself. "Every day was one of self-discovery," Alessi sys.

For Ellen Haytowitz, a UMass senior currently serving as a UYA Volunteer at Woodstock Prep in Fitchburg, that sense of discovery (both of self and others) is one she has also experienced.

"I was tired of hearing sociological lectures about the theories of man," she says. "UYA gave me the opportunity, through my experience, to discover the meaning of these theories for myself."

Ellen teaches a course in sex education at Woodstock Prep, an alternative community school, in addition to working with students whose attendance at school is consistently poor.

"When I first started working at Woodstock," Ms. Haytowitz recalls, "I knew almost nothing about alternative schools and how people felt about them." Now, however, she feels she has learned a great deal about such schools and the services they can offer to their communities.

And like Al Alessi, Ellen Haytowitz's UYA experience has offered her the opportunity to come in contact with people and situations that she feels very rarely exist on a college campus.

Since the program's inception at UMass in September, 1971, University Year for ACTION has offered students from the five-college community the opportunity to spend a year working with selected community agencies serving the low-income residents of Western Massachusetts. In that time, nearly 200 students have taken advantage of the UYA concept, working as legal assistants in the areas of welfare and tenant rights, recreation leaders at neighborhood centers, counsellors at juvenile detention centers and county jails, and planners for community environmental protection agencies.

While they work, UYA Volunteers receive a full year of academic credit from UMass/Amherst–30 credits for undergraduates, 8 for graduate students–and a small, monthly living allowance from the federal government. In addition, Volunteers are eligible for a sizeable reduction in UMass student fees, and a $600 readjustment allowance at the conclusion of their year of UYA service.

Recruitment for Phase V of the UYA program, scheduled to begin at the end of June, has started, and activities are planned throughout the month of April to offer interested students the opportunity to meet with UYA Volunteers and staff.

UYA representatives will be available at a table on the Campus Center Concourse from April 4th to 18th. The next recruitment meeting is scheduled for Thursday, April 5th, at 7:30 p.m., in Rooms 804-808, Campus Center.

Subsequent meetings are planned for April 10th, at 7:30 p.m., in Room 164, and April 18th, at 8:00 p.m. in Room 165, both in the UMass Campus Center.

"Company," a musical comedy about marriage and a bachelor, will be presented Thursday through Saturday, at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

The UMass Music Theatre will sing songs such as "Company," "You Could Drive A Person Crazy," and "Side by Side," as they perform the Stephen Sondheim and George Furth comedy.

Entirely student-produced, the show is sponsored by the UMass Fine Arts Council. Reserved tickets are $1 for UMass undergraduates and $1.50 for the public, and are available at the Fine Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall. Remaining tickets will be available at Bowker Auditorium one hour before each performance. Telephone (413) 545-0202 for both ticket offices.

Feminist Poet To Visit UMass

An open discussion on "Feminist Consciousness in the Arts" with Susan Sherman, poet, playwright, and editor will be held Thursday, April 5 from 1-4 p.m. in Campus Center 805-809.

Ms. Sherman's poetry has been published in numerous literary journals and nine of her plays have been produced in New York. In 1966, she was editor of IKON, a radical cultural magazine and a delegate to a conference in London sponsored by R.D. Laing on "The Dialectics of Liberation."

Ms. Sherman's visit is sponsored by Everywoman's Center, the North East Area Women's Center, the South West Women's Center, and the Orchard Hill Arts and Society Festival Planning Committee.

WFCR Discussion

The last Great Decisions liscussion of 1973, on the Middle East and Soviet withdrawal, will be tomorrow on WFCR-FM (88.5) at 7:30 p.m. from the UMass. The topic will be "The Middle East After the Soviet Withdrawal from Egypt: Can 'No War, No Peace' Continue?" Panelists will be: Robert Haddad of the Smith College history department; N. Gordon Levin, Amherst College American studies; Leila Meo, UMass political science.

Dr. Thurman To Speak

Dr. Howard Thurman, selected by "Life" magazine in 1953 as one of the 12 "Great Preachers" of this century, will speak on "The Experience of Human Freedom" at 8 p.m. Wednesday, April 11 in the Converse Hall Assembly Room, Amherst College. Sponsored by the Willis Wood fund, the event is open to the public without charge.

A graduate of Morehouse College and Colgate-Rochester Theological Seminary, Thurman has received honorary degrees from dozens of other schools. He has addressed faculty and students in some 500 institutions. In 1935, he was chairman of the Pilgrimage of Friendship to India, Burma and Ceylon, and lectured in 45 academic centers in the three countries.

Computers Helping Plan Meals

"For good nutrition eat a variety of foods." If you're a label reader, you've seen this on packaged foods lately, and as the year progresses, you'll see more and more cans and boxes listing calories, fat, vitamins, and other nutritional elements contained therein.

The idea, encouraged by new federal rulings, is to provide consumers with sufficient information to eat better, nitritionally.

But something is missing, according to a UMass professor who has an idea which could revolutionize the cookbook industry.

Prof. Joseph L. Balintfy feels that no matter how much information a consumer has, he still needs help in determining an accurately balanced meal. Dr. Balintfy thinks computers can be this help.

An operations research mathematician in the UMass School of Business Administration, he has been working on computer balancing of meals for the past three years with a grant of $130,000 from the Office of Naval Research. And recently he gave his views to the Committee on Dietary Allowances of the National Research Council, of the National Academy of Science.

It is impossible, he says for a person to juggle in his mind all those protein, fat, and vitamin percentages, and calories given on new labels, and come up with a balanced meal. And since some nutrients are stored in the body, there is the further mathematical complication of figuring out percentages of these nutrients over a period of several days. And, still further is the complication of balancing not just one meal by itself, but all meals in relation to each other.

So, he envisions the time when cookbooks will have recipes and appropriate nutrient listings, giving the information to evaluate various menu item combinations for balanced diets.

Prof. Joseph Balinfy is working on computer balancing of meals for the past three years with a grant of $130,000 from the Office of Naval Research.

To go one step further, he'd like to see menu-planning possible right in the supermarket, where a computer would store up recipes of frequent customers. Each family would have a computer code, and before heading for the aisles could stop at the computer to refine the shopping list for the week—getting balanced meals for days in advance, and saving money too.

For the computer would update prices, giving the consumer a choice of similar meals with adjustments for economy.

Persons on medically prescribed diets could benefit greatly from such methods of meal-planning, as well as the average eater, according to the professor.

"The value of nutrition information, for professionals and laymen alike," he says, "very much depends upon the method used in balancing diets . . . Only a combination of foods can satisfy the dietary allowances, and finding that combination which is nutritious is what the mathematics of diet planning is all about. There are no known scientific or technological reasons which would limit the use of computerized methods to professionals; a supermarket-based computerized menu- planning and shopping guide at the fingertips of consumers can be an entirely feasible operation with present-day computer technology."

Dr. Balintfy calls present meal-balancing methods of nutritionists the "trial and error" method, because though "the mathematical nature of the problem of balancing diets" remains, the solution is attempted by people who try to get the nutrient percentages together in their heads. "Impossible," says the UMass professor.

His ideas are being tried by the Transtech Company of Kansas City and Management Optimization Systems of New Orleans, training people to plan menus for institutions. An experimental program by the U.S. Department of Agriculture is testing his mathematical meal planning in schools of Memphis and Miami, using some schools in the districts as controls, with meals planned the traditional way.

The National Institute of Higher Mathematics, part of the City University of Rome, has invited Dr. Balintfy to talk about math and nutrition at an international science meeting, in April of 1974.

So, he continues his research and hopes to convince people, especially nutritionists, that present-day menu-planning and meal-balancing are no more than "following a random food selection." He is convinced that the human mind cannot figure out a balanced diet, and cannot furthermore figure out ways to make that diet more economical.

He already has a computer cookbook, complete with nutrient listings for all ingredients, but since the recipes are institutionalized, the average family hasn't had a chance to try them yet.

Scholarship Offered

Women seeking scholarship aid from the Zonta Club must have applications in no later than April 26. These applications are available in the financial aid Office, Room 232, Whitmore Administration Building.

Applicants must have some connection with the city of Medford, either through residence or through connection with a Medford organization such as Lawrence Memorial Hospital, the Medford Visiting Nurses, the Public Library, Tufts University or some Medford social agency.

The recipient must be in need of financial help to complete her training. The minimum requirement is creditable completion of at least two years of undergraduate study. The Zonta Club of Medford is particularly interested in students who are entering graduate school for professional training.

WMUA

Tonight at 7:30 WMUA's OPENINGS series features a discussion of the counseling services available to students at the UMass Counseling Center. Center director Al Southworth, campus community psychologist Ted Slovin, and undergraduate intern Nancy Pike join WMUA's Joe C. in a look at the Counseling Center's commitment to personal growth through individual and group learning experiences.

American International College Offering Two Cultural Tours

American International College has announced plans to offer two foreign culture courses this summer in Europe — one in France, the other in Italy — according to Dean Clinton M. Bowen.

Total cost of each course has been estimated at $900 which includes six credits, round-trip air fare, tours, majority of meals, etc.

Prof. Simone Deitz said the French culture tour will include Paris, Nantes, Bayonne, Aix en Provence and Grenoble, from July 23 to Aug. 20.

Prof. Olindo Dragone's Italian culture program will place emphasis on the art, artists and architecture of Renaissance and Baroque Italy in Florence, Rome and Venice from June 14 to July 17.

For further information contact Dean Clinton M. Bowen at American International College, Springfield, Mass., 01109; telephone (413) 737-5331, ext. 213.

Aquarians I wish I had known: Gertrude Stein and Evangeline Adams. Aquarians I have enjoyed knowing: Forrest Tucker and Kim Novak. An Aquarian who surprised me with warmth and friendliness: Shelley Berman. An Aquarian who leaves me cold: Mark Spitz. An Aquarian who sometimes lets me talk: Zsa Zsa Gabor.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You get change for proverbial second opportunity, a fresh start, the capability of erasing past mistakes. Make the most of it. Key is to be yourself, not an imitation or a robot. Be original, insisting on your own style.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Some comment on your appearance, stating it has "changed." Aura of mystery, perhaps glamor, surrounds you. Don't reveal all you know. Be discreet. What you fear will evaporate. Trust intuition.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Some desires are due to be revised. You meet people and see them in different light. What you imagined is not flattered by hard light of facts. Means be grown-up enough to accept people for what they are, not for what you wish they could be.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): One you indulge is not being fair. Some of your ambitions could be fulfilled if you rid yourself of emotional anchor. What appears to be a pressing problem is solved by routine procedure.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Study Cancer message. Find out why some persons, previously friendly, seem aloof. A bit of analyzing could result in "remarkable" comeback. Gemini, Virgo individuals are likely to be involved.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): What you saved or collected proves of value. Controversy could surround sale or purchase. Be diplomatic in explaining to family member. High handed methods will not suffice. Be willing to listen as well as assert.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Lie low. Explosive situation exists. Don't stick out your chin. Caution now truly is the better part of valor. Where marriage, partnership enter picture, you must step lightly. You are due to be surprised as secret income in formation leaks.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Some areas, which were hidden or forbidden, come under scorching spotlight. Nothing is apt to occur in lukewarm fashion. Know it and prepare accordingly. Relationship which means much points in special direction.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Accept facts as they exist in connection with project, relationship. One who has deceived in past is quite willing to try a repeat performance. Be on guard. If you care for yourself, others will care for you, too.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Friend in high place uses unorthodox method to promote cause beneficial to you. Maintain self-esteem. Others have confidence in you—return favor to yourself. Despite obstacle, you will succeed.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): It might be best to stick to what is familiar. Journey now could be ill-advised. Key is to be versatile without becoming confused. Cancer individual is in picture. Find out what is needed at home.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You can reach far, but strive to understand rules, limitations. You are in position for solid advance. Important to keep track of what you have, what is expendable, what should be reinforced.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have fine sense of humor, a tendency to put on weight, an appreciation for the arts. You are independent, creative and attract to you many born under Sagittarius. August could be your most significant month of 1973.

Anne Vexler, (pictured above) won a gold medal in the all-around at the Easterns this weekend at Temple Univeristy as did co-captain Margie Combs (right) who won a gold medal on the uneven bars. She reached the finals in all but the vaulting events.

Women Gymnasts 2nd In Controversial Easterns

By MIKE KASAVANA

PHILADELPHIA-It was the best of times, it was the worst of times. The UMass women's gym team settled for second place in the Eastern Championships at Temple University in a meet which saw UMass submit protests for just about one-third of all their scores given by the panel of judges.

Springfield College, breaking badly on bars and vaulting, still received enough points to snub UMass by a margin of .15. The final team scores of the top three teams were: Springfield College 100.95, UMass 100.80, and Clarion State 97.2 points.

On the balance beam, Anne Vexler was UMass' top scorer with a nicely performed routine. Margie Combs was the Minutewomen's second highest scorer and Jeannine Burger third. None of these competitors had falls but the team's beam total was only 23.6 points.

The floor exercise event, always a high point for UMass, was scored very low. In this writer's opinion, Vexler, Combs, and Burger all tumbled their best, leaped high, and danced very well, but their scores didn't reflect their work. Vexler was high scorer with 8.9, while Burger's routine drew an 8.6, and Combs was insulted with an 8.3 (her lowest score in almost two years). The event score for floor was 25.9, perhaps UMass' lowest this season, and after two events the team's running score was 49.5 points.

As the team rotated to vaulting it became apparent that their floor scores had left some effect. But they came back strongly and did handsprings, yamashitas, and twisting vaults that equalled any of their previously unbeaten performances. The judges awarded "beginner's" scores to some rather well done and difficult vaults.

The surprise c' the meet was Marion Kulick. She was so excited that she bounced her way to her lifetime high score and compiled UMass' highest vaulting score of the evening, an 8.40. Combs and Burger were hypnotized as the distant judges had them tying at 8.30. This is the lowest Combs had ever scored in vaulting while at UMass and Burger's lowest score this season.

Stunned, the team proceeded to the uneven bars to complete their round. Well, everyone who knows Eastern gymnastics knows that UMass has the best bars team in the region and perhaps even in the country. The judges had little trouble giving fairly good scores here, but the damage had already been done. Margie Combs led all scorers with an 8.85, while Burger was right behind with an 8.80, and Vexler posted an 8.60. Betsy East hit well and got an 8.30, Heidi Armstrong used her same routine and hit it but earned only a 7.2. This brought UMass' team score to 100.80.

Springfield was awarded some weird scores and crumbled under the pressure of the meet. The UMass girls began to really believe that they were going to beat the unbeatables. But the judges didn't seem to be thinking along those lines and kept them in contention even when they faltered very badly. They scored 100.95 and looked as shocked as we were.

On the brighter side, UMass did earn some medals. The all-around competition was again won by a UMass performer. Anne Vexler tied Kolemainen of Springfield for first place and provided a strong backbone to the UMass team performance.

Two other all-around UMass entrants, both on whom were underscored severely, finished fourth (M. Combs) and fifth (J. Burger). This is the most all-around people this school has ever placed in the top six in the history of UMass women's gymnastics.

The individual event awards are based on a performer doing two routines. One routine is done in the team competition and the second is done on Saturday night if the performer finished in the top ten scores on her first routine. Due to the low scores on Friday, many of UMass' good performers were either eliminated or disadvantaged by a first low score. The two routine scores are totalled and the winners determined.

The other gold medal winner for UMass was Margie Combs on the uneven bars. Combs swung a great routine and dragged the only nine score of the entire meet out of the judging panel. Her first routine scored an 8.85 and her second a 9.00, giving her 17.85 and first place. Anne Vexler bolted down second with a 17.2 total. Jeannine Burger and Betsy East completed a very spectacular UMass showing as they tied for fourth at 16.75 points.

Floor exercise was won by Dunkley of Springfield with a 17.6 total and Anne Vexler tied for second place. Jeannine Burger finished fourth, and Combs seventh, despite their low scores from the team competition.

On vaulting Marion Kulick bettered her 8.40, and got an 8.50 and tied for sixth place. Kulick showed good control and was the only UMass performer to make the vaulting finals.

The balance beam was dominated by Springfield College, but Vexler took eighth and Combs claimed the tenth spot.

UMass had more people in the finals, five different competitiors, than did any other school. The team looks toward the Nationals in Iowa on April 20-21.

Back On The Road

At the last meeting of the motorcycle club it was decided to rent four spaces in the Campus Center garage. The spaces are available to any motorcyclist at the rate of $1.50 a month. Compared to the flat rate of $.50 charged now by the garage for each time you park, this turns out to be a bargain for any motorcyclist who anticipates parking in the garage more than three times during the month. Places will be sold at our next meeting which will be Tuesday, April 2 at 7 p.m. in Campus Center Rm. 804.

Also at our last meeting plans were formalized for a Motorcycle Day on Saturday, April 7. There will be a free inspection of bikes participating, followed by dirt and street rides afterwards.

Of the dirt riders who have gone out this spring all have found the conditions extremely muddy and wet. Many powerlines have streams running down the steeper sections and marshes in the lower section. But the snow is gone and with some heavy March winds the hope is for some good April riding. Street riders report the roads are rough with many potholes and accumulations of sand on the side.

Polyglots Are Back

What are the Polyglots? A new type of plastic? A childhood disease? An association of parrot-fanciers?

The Polyglots are UMass addicts in search of a little help from their friends, who just happen to be other Polyglots. Some are undergrads, some grads, some faculty; they speak in many tongues. Their addiction is soccer football—a habit that requires much kicking.

Many Polyglots play in the intramural soccer leagues, but they still crave something more. In pursuit of the right company they gather on the campus fields every Saturday morning (spring summer and fall), in numbers varying with the weather from a handful to over forty.

Polyglot skills range from adept to zomboid, though most like to think of themselves, in ability, as upper middle class. The most skillful, energetic or foolhardy often scrimmage during the week with other local teams, including the UMass Varsity.

The Polyglots are about to emerge from hibernation for another eight-month season. Their welcome extends to all true enthusiasts. Everyone gets to play, somewhere. First meeting (rain or shine) will be Saturday 7th April, at 10:00 A.M., on the playing fields farthest west from Boyden Gymnasium.

Newell Highlights Trip With All-Tourney Nod

By MIKE BROPHY

Outfielder Steve Newell of the UMass baseball team was named to the All Tournament team for his outstanding play in the Seventh Annual Riverside Baseball Tournament held in Riverside, California over the spring vacation. According to coach Dick Bergquist, "This is perhaps the greatest honor that could have possible been bestowed upon us."

Newell joins five players from Southern Cal, three from Arizona State, one from Vanderbilt, and one from Stanford in what Bergquist terms "a great credit to Eastern baseball." For the tournament Newell was 12 for 29 for a .413 batting average, including two doubles and a home run.

Newell ended up hitting .385 for the total trip with two doubles and two home runs. Right behind Newell in the hitting department was third baseman Mark Palau who managed to keep up a .371 clip with three doubles, two triples, and a four bagger in leading the team in extra-base hits with six.

Co-captain Eddie McMahon helped to pace the team with his .370 contribution which netted him three doubles.

In the opener Mike Flanagan started for UMass against Cal Baptist and was relieved by Tom White in the seventh. The game was scoreless through three until UMass rallied for five in the top of the fourth and went on to win 10-2 on an effort that included homers by catcher Bill Ryan and Mike Flanagan. Dan Kelley, McMahon, and Palau each had three hits on the day.

In the second encounter with Cal. Baptist, UMass ran away with a 7-2 decision that saw John Olson claim the win before being lifted in the seventh for Chip Baye. Home runs by Newell and Palau in the ninth put the finishing touches on a twelve hit attack.

The Vanderbilt games saw the UMass nine extend their unbeaten streak to three as White turned in his finest performance of the trip in shutting out the Commadores, 2-0. Flanagan had two doubles while Newell and Kelly collected the RBI's for the Minutemen.

On to Stanford and the defending Tournament Champs...UMass here played a fine game of baseball in outdoing the Cardinals by a 7-6 score on nine hits. Ron Beaurivage hit a three run shot over the fence in the first inning and then in the next frame, Pete Backstrom lashed out a grand slam that put the Minutemen out in front to stay.

It was UCal at Riverside that handed the Minutemen their first loss of the Western swing as they came from behind in the bottom of the eighth with a two run rally off Olson. The Minutemen did not play as sharply as they had previously.

In a game that started on March 28, UMass and Arizona State were tied 6-6 at the end of nine when the game was suspended because of darkness. The game, that eventually went fifteen innings, was completed on Saturday with ASU coming out on top, 7-6.

In the eighth inning UMass put together a six hit barrage to take the lead 6-5 but in the bottom of the ninth, second baseman Clay Westlake hit a two-run homer to tie it.

The nightmare was about to begin as UMass walked in to play the mighty Trojans of Southern Cal and after the dust had settled and UMass was back in the dressing room it was 16-4--all USC.

The UMass pitching simply failed and White took the loss as he gave up four runs in the first frame alone. Ed McMahon had two hits and Steve Newell collected three including a home run in the only bright spot of the day for UMass.

In the night cap of the doubleheader Hawaii edged out UMass 13-11 despite the Minutemen out-hitting the opposition 12 to 11. In a short relief stint, White was tagged with his second loss of the day even though UMass jumped out to a 7-0 lead in the first inning on four hits mixed with four walks. Poor relief pitching was, according to Bergquist, "what sunk us."

UMass finished up the trip on a winning note as they upended Washington State 6-3 with Olson collecting the win for his seven innning effort.

Although it takes nine men to play the game, baseball is still an individual game. Concentration is the key. Junior Steve Newell had more than his share on the recent Western swing as his .385 average placed him on the All-Tourney team.

UM Ruggers Dumped

By GARY BALTUCK

The UMass Rugby Club kicked off the spring season last week with three practice games versus the Orlando Rugby Club and the University of Florida at Gainesville.

While the team lost two and tied one, the scores were not indicative of the team's performance.

Orlando's team captain said after Tuesday's game that UMass is "one of the hardest-hitting teams we've played against."

UMass captain Jim "Piggy" Tkacik attributed the team's losses to the short pre-season practice period (three weeks), and the fact that the players "are just plain out of shape."

Scrum half Larry Tebo led off the Orlando game with a score from five yards out with just minutes gone in the game. Later fly half Rick Scarpignato added two field goals to make the score 10-0.

Rich Spielman of the Orlando team, and a former lineman for the Denver Broncos kicked six field goals, all from at least forty yards out, to overtake the UMass ruggers 18-10.

The short practice season caught up with the ruggers the next day in Gainesville when the University of Florida won 10-0.

UFlorida's only touchdown came at the second half kick off when a forward pop-kicked the ball, recovered it and carried it in for a score.

The regular season begins this weekend when UMass travels to Storrs to play the University of Connecticut. UMass returns home on Sunday to play Holy Cross.

These are two of the toughest teams UMass will meet this season, and it will be the best weekend of rugby you can see until the New England Rugby Football Union tournament on May 12 and 13 at UMass.

No, they're not the Pretorian Guards, they're the last line of defense for the goalie. More often than not his job is a lonely one. Especially when you're losing. Even in defeat goalie John Rutledge (not pictured here) glowed in the dark. The Long Island native put on quite a performance at Cortland with 23 saves as the Gorrillas dropped their opener at Cortland, 10-8. But it's only the beginning.

Marty Kelley

"It's A Family Affair"

By MARTY KELLEY

CORTLAND, N.Y.—Out of the North Country they came. Unlike the Indian savages who used to play their game to the death, they showed signs of civilization. But they danced on the same as did the Chactaw Indian tribe who founded their game centuries ago. The ground has been blessed for Lacrosse. Although UMass and Cortland didn't meet for the death, the ritual was the same. The game of lacrosse has lost little of its original luster.

When it was over, there were no deaths recorded. Unlike the original Indians, no land was given the winner, no ponies as a gift to the winning chief, no physical embarrassment. The pain was mental and mostly emotional. Garber's Gorrillas will attest to that.

You see, lacross at UMass can't be explained in the light of the team's national ranking. Regarded as one of the finest lacrosse aggregations in the nation, a loss to Cortland (10-8 on Saturday) meant that the Gorrillas are statistically 0-1 on the season. But to the New York-Baltimore-and Needham born, lacrosse is not a statistic and never will be. It's a way of life.

And, as in the land of little spring sunshine, where the nights get colder before older, where little kids run around with lacrosse sticks, where the Yankees and Mets take a back seat to Hopkins and Maryland (God-like powers in collegiate lacrosse circles), and tiny dairy farms let you know you're at wilderness's end, the way of life began for the UMass lacrosse team. The expose before 2,300 drunken ballyhooers was real. And it hurt.

Defeat is hard to be witnessed. Try to explain it to a Dwight Bloomquist, a Hirsch Seidman, a Freddie Michaels, or New York born John McCarthy. For as this quartet felt, so did the rest of the Gorrillas. A chance to move up to perhaps 13th in the nation in lacrosse went by the boards. But not out of the heart. However, the Saturday night busride back after a tiresome spring trip (hmm) through the archives of lacrosse tradition in New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania, left the group well spent. But the loss wasn't treated at the morgue like it's done in football and basketball. Once you get to the morgue you're dead . . . Right! So, get your ass to the package store and come alive again.

And that's what the Gorrillas did. The loss was forgotten. After a few beers and a couple of games of hearts (the card game given a Long Islander at birth) all was well again. And although it wasn't the night before Christmas, talk around the bus centered not on pessimism, but guys like Bruce Sibson and John Martin talked of how the University of Connecticut will be scrambled this Thursday (home opener for the Gorrillas).

You know, the Gorrillas are a cocky lot. They have to be. They know they played poor enough to lose and have only themselves to blame. But a family as tight knit as Garber's Guys realize that they could be their own worst enemy psychologically. But that will never happen. They all love each other. It's a uniqueness that no other sport on campus can boast. You've got to be a Gorrilla to share it.

And it's no wonder that goalie John Rutledge (superb in the debut for the Junior College All-American) threw his arm around midfielder Jack Moran and told Jackie to keep his head up. "We can get things together".

I'm sure they will. You see, it's a family affair . . . UMass Lacrosse.

Yes, the fans at Cortland tried to break their spirit. They rallied with beers and obscenities behind the antics of this anebriated cheerleader dressed in candy stripes and a decorated lacrosse stick. He was so stilted from free drinks from the crowd that he hardly had the strength of sight to see the Gorillas nearly upset his Red Dragon friends with a late scoring flurry.

The Cortlanites had their fun-fans and players. But they fail to realize that their victory was shortlived. You may have gotten their number that day, but in the long run you'll never catch them. You see . . . it's a family affair . . .

Meal Ticket Cost To Rise

The Rents and Fees Committee discusses the possibility of raising the price of meal tickets next semester. The committee approved the increase which had been requested by Joel Stoneham, Director of Food Services.

By SHARON HUGHES

The Senate Rents and Fees Committee last night approved a $25.00 increase on 10-meal meal tickets and a $30.50 increase on 15-meal meal tickets to be effective next semester as requested by Director of Food Services Joel Stoneham.

The Committee increased the dorm telephone charge from $19 per semester to $20 in anticipation of a rate increase by the telephone company this summer.

Also, the committee accepted a $3 student fee requested by the Fine Arts Council.

Stoneham blamed "increasing costs" as the primary reason for the meal ticket cost increases. He said "Our major problem is the rising food costs rampant in our economy. Fish, meat and eggs have gone up 30% since last year, but we're assuming the rapid rise is not going to last."

He said that his budget is calculated on a projection of a 10% increase.

Besides rising food costs, he said that Food Services is faced with a 7% increase in payroll and costs and $49,000 in retroactive pay.

Thomas Campion, Vice Chancellor for Administrative Affairs predicts a loss of 170 meal ticket holders due to the closing of Hill House. He said "The system is not efficient enough to place the 430." (students to be displaced by the closing of Hills.)

He said that because people sign up for a room and don't show, the room assignment system is inefficient. Senator Joe Smith objected, saying that the students shouldn't bear responsibility for the faulty system in the way of higher meal ticket costs. He suggested that the error in the system should be corrected instead.

Stoneham replied that the Food Services have not increased meal ticket prices in two years. He also said, "I could have come in here and asked for a $50 increase and justified it."

After the committee passed the requested increase, they suggested that Food Services sell meal tickets to professors and administrators as an added source of revenue. When Stoneham said they were considering that possibility at some professor's request, a committee member sighed with sheer astonishment.

The Committee passed a telephone rate increase from $19 to $20 a semester at the suggestion of Chuck Hampton, financial manager of residence halls. He said the telephone company will request the increase in July and he is sure it will be approved. In the event the telephone company doesn't receive an increase, an adjustment in billing during the spring semester will be made to reduce the charge accordingly.

Faculty Readies For Bargaining Battle

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

A law firm specializing in labor relations has been hired by UMass, according to Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, to advise and represent the University in the upcoming battle over collective bargaining.

In other action, a meeting of faculty opposed to collective bargaining was held yesterday. 70 faculty members attended and discussed their opposition and preliminary organization plans.

Also, English professor Howard Brogan, president of the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP), announced that a platform stating the MSP's and the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) goals would be issued within a week.

The MSP and the AAUP have joined forces to press for unionization of the faculty.

The Boston law firm hired by UMass, Morgan Browns, Kearns and Joy will be represented by Arthur P. Menard. Menard will insure that UMass covers all legal aspects of collective bargaining, which Bromery termed a "serious and complex issue."

Bromery also announced Monday that Thomas Bornstein, a professor in the School of Business Administration was appointed to draw up a proposal for an office of Personnel and Employee Relations, which he will later head. He is now a special assistant to Bromery.

Yesterday's meeting to organize the anti-collective bargaining faculty was sponsored by the Committee of Concerned Faculty. Most of the meeting was spent explaining the Committee's opposition to collective bargaining to the faculty present.

The main points brought up by the five founders of the Committee included:

—the inevitable creation of an "adversary relationship" between students, faculty, administration, Trustees and the President's Office.

—loss of the present on-campus governance structures with all power reverting to the MSP/AAUP.

—loss of decision making power by faculty and departments resulting in a highly centralized decision making system.

—possible replacement of present administrators who are ex-faculty members and sympathetic to faculty problems with "professional" administrators with no teaching experience.

—elimination of student input into the decision making process. One faculty member accused the MSP/AAUP of being "anti-student" and assuming the University is made up only of "labor (faculty) and management (administrators).

—that departments would lose control over who in their departments is awarded tenure.

The MSP/AAUP was defended by David Biddle, a member of the MSP Executive Committee.

Biddle said the soon-to-be released MSP/AAUP platform supports a strong faculty senate, supports ratification of any contract by the entire faculty, is for students because of the MSP/AAUP concern with quality education and provides for the "fullest consultation" with faculty through open forums to give consideration to all faculty interests.

Biddle also said the MSP/AAUP is in favor of faculty peer groups deciding on who shall receive tenure. Presently tenure decisions are made by each department.

The next confrontation between the MSP/AAUP and UMass will come April 18, the tentative date for a hearing in Boston to determine who would be in the MSP/AAUP bargaining unit if collective bargaining is approved by the faculty.

According to Brogan the MSP/AAUP wants instructors, all professors, department chairmen and heads of departments, librarian classifications 1-5 and some program directors included.

However, Bromery has said he considers department chairmen management, and opposes their inclusion in the bargaining unit. Brogan said the MSP/AAUP was determined to have department chairmen included.

If an agreement is not reached at the April 18 meeting, the next step would be a hearing before the state Labor Relations Commission. This has been described as a complicated process which would probably push the election needed to approve the MSP/AAUP as the faculty agent into the fall semester.

Two of the buses in the UMass transit system wend their way along North Pleasant Street. The transit project, supported by the Urban Mass Transportation Administration (UMTA), the University, and the Student Senate, has been responsible for reducing the traffic congestion on campus during the "busy" hours.

Campus Traffic Easing

Traffic congestion at the "busy" hours has been tailing off at the University of Massachusetts.

That's what authorities of the new UMass Student Senate transit service report; and they are optimistic that the U.S. Urban Mass Transportation research and demonstration project will continue to alleviate traffic situations on and near the Amherst campus.

"We're very pleased with the new system," Dr. William P. Goss, project director and a mechanics and an aero engineering professor at the University, said Sunday.

"Traffic congestion has been reduced at the "peak" hours quite a bit, and there has also been a significant reduction in the number of hitch-hikers along the routes we cover."

Goss referred to the "peak" hours as the periods in which the mobility of students to and from the university is heaviest. He indicated that the transit system received the most use during the period of 7:30 to 10:00 a.m. and 3:30 to 6:00 p.m.

An estimated 7,000 passengers per day use the 10 to 11 buses, which serve three campus routes and two off-campus routes from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. daily.

At the request of the UMass Student Senate and the Amherst Selectmen, an evening service of four buses has has been added to accommodate passengers from 6:30 to 11:30 p.m.

The project is supported by a grant of $475,441 from the Urban Mass Transportation Administration (UMTA) supplemented by $157,728 in money, labor, and services from the University and $30,000 in money and leased vehicles from the UMass Student Senate.

Although the UMTA grant expires after the fall semester, the University is committed to continue the free bus service operation beyond that period, Goss said.

He said the second phase of the experiment would be the changing of the parking policy at the University. New parking regulations would be instituted in the near future to encourage the use of the buses.

"The system hasn't solved the problem of parking, but it has cut down on the impact somewhat. There are a few spaces left in the fringe parking lots, where before, they were filling up rapidly," Goss said.

"Change in this area will not occur overnight, it will be a gradual, long-range type thing. We hope that students will reconsider the choice of having a car on campus. Hopefully, staff and faculty members will use the bus and leave their cars at home for family use."

Goss said that the new transit system could tempt students into moving off campus, but didn't indicate that the occupancy rate would be radically affected.

"Whether it might occur in droves, we can't predict. It's also a question of economics: on-campus living vs. off-campus living. It would certainly be easier for someone to move off campus," he said.

The new bus system could have an indirect effect on the amount of rapes in the campus vicinity since "the need for hitch-hiking is decreased," Goss said.

"It does provide that element of safety, just as the decreasing of the possibility of the occurrence does."

The transit service has discussed the possibilities of coordinating its system with the one in the Greenfield-Montague transportation area.

Goss said that such long range planning could be done. He also suggested that the Five-College bus system might also be coordinated in the future.

The cleaner, attractive buses, equipped to run on gaseous fuel, have had a positive effect on the use of the vehicles, Goss maintains.

"They're a lot quieter than the conventional diesel type engines, and they're certainly not as smelly," he said.

Meat Boycott Fares Well Here

By CHRIS ROSSOMANDO

There are still three cans of anchovies left at the Munchy's in Hampden Dining Commons. But Munchy's is prepared for the possible effects of this week's national boycott of meat. There's another case of anchovies waiting in the storeroom.

An MDC survey of stores and restaurants in the area shows that the boycott, now in its fourth day, has wide support.

Meat department employees at Stop & Shop on Rte. 9 and Louis's Foods on N. Pleasant St. say that meat sales this week have gone "way down".

Betty Lavalle, who works in the meat department at Louis's Foods, said that the store ordered much less meat than usual "in anticipation of the boycott."

Most shoppers interviewed were very much in favor of the boycott and had planned meatless menus for the whole week. They are substituting eggs and macaroni dishes as well as other meat substitutes.

"People seem to be buying more chicken and fish. I've noticed that they are hardly buying any meat at all. I've even seen people buying shrimp instead of meat, even though the shrimp is more expensive," commented a cashier at Stop & Shop.

None of the restaurants surveyed felt that they had lost any business this week. A spokesman for McDonald's in Northampton said that the volume of business was not affected, though people seemed to be buying fish filets more than usual.

At Hardee's, an employee who was interviewed said that she had noticed no drop in the number of hamburgers sold.

The owner of Kentucky Fried Chicken on Rte. 9 noticed an increase of business this week.

Ms. Dunn said, "Instead of staying home and eating something meatless, people are coming in and ordering fish or chicken. But I really don't think that people are including chicken in their boycott like beef and pork. We've been selling about the same amount of chicken that we usually do, but I have noticed that we're selling a lot more fish."

A few people did not feel that the meat boycott would do anything to bring down meat prices. Lou Bland, a UMass student who was eating a "Big Burger" at Kentucky Fried Chicken yesterday, explained why he was not following the meat boycott.

"I don't think prices will go down. The only thing I can see coming out of this is that people become aware that there is a meat shortage. It's meat now, next it'll be vegetables."

James McManus's on Rte. 9 is offering a special "All You Can Eat" fish fry every day this week, but one waitress there said, "People are still eating a lot of meat."

On campus, both the Campus Center Coffee Shop and the Hatch reported that they had felt the effects of the meat boycott. Grilled cheese and tuna were among the top hamburger replacements.

There is only one meat wholesaler in the area. Joseph Frost, owner of the JC Frost Co. in Greenfield, said that the mat boycott has had "no effect" on the amount of meat ordered through his company this week. He supplies meat to several markets in the area.

While support of the boycott appears to be very high in the area, the people who sell the meat were not as sure as the boycotters that the result would be a cut in prices. They seem to have a wait and see attitude. One employee of Stop & Shop's meat department said he felt that prices may go down, but added, "They probably won't stay down, if they go down at all."

Senate Toughens Drug Laws

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Senate voted Tuesday for mandatory prison sentences for non-addicts who illegally manufacture or sell as much as one-tenth of an ounce of heroin or morphine.

For the first offenders, the minimum sentence would be 10 to 30 years in addition to the penalties provided by present law. For a second offense, a life sentence would be mandatory.

In neither case would an offender be eligible for probation, suspended sentence, or parole except after serving 30 years of a life sentence.

In addition, mandatory sentences of up to 30 years are provided for using or unlawfully carrying a firearm in the commission of federal crimes that threaten life or property.

Sen. Herman E. Talmadge, D-Ga., chief sponsor of these provisions, which were amendments to legislation for the compensation violent crimes victims.

"We need to get at the man who sells the dope and the man who wields the gun," said Talmadge. He told the Senate that "a wave of terror is sweeping the nation."

On March 14, President Nixon sent Congress a message urging tough mandatory sentences for drug pushers. Talmadge's amendment differs in some detail and in one major respect.

The amendment approved by the Senate provides mandatory minimum sentences for traffickers in heroin and morphine only if they are not addicts themselves—a distinction not included in Nixon's proposal.

A motion by Sen. Harold E. Hughes, D-Iowa, to table and thus kill Talmadge's amendment was defeated 76 to 18.

House Redistricting Bill Filed

BOSTON (AP)—A proposed redistricting plan for the Massachusetts House which potentially will pit 40 incumbent representatives against each other in 1974 elections was filed Tuesday in the Senate clerk's office.

The redistricting plan eliminates nine "triple" districts and 47 "double districts," and proposes 240 individual House districts each of which will have only one representative.

The new redistricting plan, developed by a House-Senate committee, follows the dictates of a Constitutional amendment adopted by voters in 1970.

And it makes some other major departures from previous House districting plans.

For the first time, representative districts will cross county lines—22 of the proposed new districts include communities in more than one county.

Previously the House parcelled out allocation of House seats to counties, then left it to county commissioners or county boards to draw district lines.

But under the constitutional change, the House itself is required to draw individual districts.

The committee, however, defended itself against charges that drawing district lines is a task too politically sensitive to be left to legislators.

"While we would never attempt to persuade anyone that a Legislative Committee on Redistricting would refuse to consider the legitimate suggestions of sitting legislators as to the description of districts in their area, it can truthfully be said that the legislation finally proposed was not designed to protect incumbent officeholders," said the committee.

The report was written primarily by Rep. George Keverian, D-Everett.

The committee said it had attempted to "combine areas consisting of similar communities of interest, and recognizing, wherever identifiable, political, racial and ethnic groups in so far as this could be done without violating other valid constitutional principles."

Talks Open O.H. Festival

By DAVID SPARLING

The week-long Orchard Hill Arts and Society Festival kicked off last night in Field main lounge with a panel discussion called a "jam session" by moderator Acklyn Lynch.

The discussion, "The Arts, the Artists and Social Change" panelists were Susan Sherman, poet and playwright; Leon Barron, UMass English professor and past Master of Orchard Hill; Tamas Aczel, UMass English professor; Archie Shepp, UMass Institute for Pan-African Culture; Reggie Workman, musician and teacher of an Orchard Hill course of Black Music; and Simon Gouverneur, Venezuelan artist.

Ms. Sherman led off the discussion by recounting her experiences in Cuba. She spoke of the lack of separtion between Art and society there. Art is used as a vehicle for social change in Cuba, from Christmas presents to workers dancing in the fields, according to her.

The situation in the U.S., Sherman said, is quite different.

"In America," Sherman said, "the myth that Art exists for Art's sake is perpetuated. In America, Art is the product of the oppressive system and the separation of Art from society.

Barron called art a religious experience. "I see the artist as a kind of Christ," he said.

Barron continued the discussion with a prehistorical survey of literature, citing how the myths and archetypes from the Greek period and on have become ingrained in Man's imagination.

Tamas Aczel, in his talk, brought the audience into active participation in the discussion. He said he believes in the "activist nature" of Art and that Man, through his art, is able to make certain changes in the nature of society.

At this point numerous opinions from the audience were heard, debating the issue of lasting art versus the immediate aesthetic value of the piece.

In answering, Aczel said, "The best art is that which survives over generations and changes the human scene."

Panelist Archie Shepp brought up the issues of Art and economics and Black art in the West.

There are many channels of artistic expression closed to the Black man in the U.S., Shepp said.

"Symphony orchestras and the like are the bastions of artistic racism," said Shepp.

Western "white" art has appropriated all types of art from other cultures and terms it American art, according to Shepp.

Describing the vast gap between Black art and the western white art, Shepp asked the audience to imagine Lawrence Welk and James Brown playing back to back.

Shepp also tried to describe the significance of economics and technology of Western art.

"You must consider such things as the invention of the airplane and Muzak on elevators as factors in Western art," said Shepp.

At the time the Collegian went to press, the panel and the audience were voicing their opinions on the various definitions of art.

The next event planned by the festival is Thursday night at 8 p.m. in Webster House main lounge. More discussions and a "party" are planned.

Rev. Claims POWs In Asia

MANCHESTER, N.H. (AP)-The minister who headed the Remember the Pueblo Committee says he has learned that at least 200 Americans are being held as prisoners of war in Laos, Cambodia and China, the Manchester Union Leader said Tuesday in a copyrighted article.

The Rev. Paul Lindstron of Prospect Heights, Ill., said in the article for Wednesday editions that his information came from intelligence people gathered by military personnel, Central Intelligence Agency agents, intelligence agents of the South Vietnamese government and U.S. State Department employes.

Although there have been other reports of Americans still being held prisoner in Southeast Aisa, Lindstrom was the first to provide such specifics as the names of some men he said were being held.

Group Seeks To Block Credit Return To ROTC

By MARY MULLOY

The fight to sustain no academic credit for ROTC continued last night in reaction to the Faculty Senate's attempt to reverse its decision of last year, which had denied credit to ROTC courses.

The question will again be raised at the May Board of Trustees meeting after a preliminary meeting with the Faculty and Educational Policy Committee in late April. Two representatives from ROTC and students will be allowed five minutes each to present their views. Meanwhile, a group of approximately thirty people met last night in the Campus Center and will be meeting every Wednesday night, until the decision, to discuss and organize plans of action.

Under the direction of Maggie Houghton and SGA President Larry Ladd, the group first determined that it was necessary to arrive at general feelings and attitudes and then to begin work on a written statement to present to the Board of Trustees. Many suggestions were offered by various students, such as, gaining public support by getting endorsements from officials writing letters to the paper in the hope of involving students, researching old files to discover why credit was first given to ROTC and then why it was abolished last year, going to Area Governments and getting representatives to support the issue and help educate campuswide and also educating student about the war still going on.

Two sub-groups were established: one to research documentation on ROTC and to help prepare the written statement, and one to generate an educational effort on the campus to get student involvement. But, Gerry Morton, a student speaking against ROTC, expressed disdain over mass groups. He said "only a core nucleus need be actively involved, then you can have a large supportive group to back it.

Originally, credit for ROTC courses was denied because the program is externally controlled by the Department of Defense, therefore, having no place with the autonomy of the university, according to the Faculty Senate. But recently the argument of academic freedom for all has persisted to the extent that the decision may be reversed in May. Maggie Houghton calls this argument a "confusion of logic. The right of a student to take a course is not the same as the right of the military to teach that course, besides, all of these courses either could be taught or are being taught within established university departments," she said.

Another student expressed the view that teaching military tactics and strategy is not academics and therefore, should not be included in the university curriculum, "ROTC teaches the destruction of mankind and it is to our benefit to set standards for the University", he added.

In general, the group felt that since 80% of the military officers come from ROTC, support of the program would mean condoning the military. They felt that since the U.S. military position is non-supportable, ROTC should not be supported.

Although the majority of those present favored the abolition of credit for ROTC courses, a few actively involved members of the program attended to express their genuine desire to restore credit to the program. According to one freshman in the Air Force department, the ROTC program was the only means by which he could attend college, since it gave him a scholarship.

Others in the program felt satisfied with ROTC and though the program offered a viable give and take atmosphere, not found in total military environments like West Point.

Amherst Sewage Problem 'Major'

By ED FOGARTY

The Mass. Water Pollution Control Board told the Amherst Board of Selectmen and Amherst developers yesterday that "the sewage pollution situation in Amherst has generated from a minor situation two years ago to a major one today."

The Water Pollution Control Board has imposed a ban upon further sewage extensions in Amherst as of Feb. 16. The ban in effect calls a halt to construction in Amherst.

Yesterday's meeting was called by the Selectmen and the State Board to discuss the ban.

Solutions for the objections raised by the State Board have been acted upon by the town, said Allen Torrey, Town Manager. In a letter of Feb. 16, the Board called a halt to sewage extensions in Amherst until the town establishes a Pumping Station at Stanley Street, an adequate sewage line from the Stanley Street Pumping Station to the Treatment Plant, finalizes plans for a Secondary Treatment Plant, and resolves the overflow problems at the West Street Pumping Station.

Both pumping stations overflow raw sewage regularly into the surrounding lands and the present Treatment Plant dumps "essentially raw sewage" into the Connecticut River according to findings of the State Board.

William Slegal, Director of the Mass. Water Pollution Control Board, said there is an increasing seriousness of the sewage problem and a lack of responsbility of the Town in handling it.

"Every date (deadline) that we have given the Town in the past year and a half has been pushed further and further into the future," said Slegal.

Also present at the meeting were members of local developers. Peter Roth, attorney for Otto Paparazzo Associates, argued the ban would result in "irreparable damage". Roth told the meeting that Otto Paparazzo has invested "tremendous amounts of time and money" and "has acted in good faith to comply with the town's by-laws."

Roth argued that no blame could be placed upon the developer for the town's problems.

Also present were many smaller contractors who complained that their livelihood had been cut off by the ban.

Chairman of the Board of Selectmen, Michael Sullivan reminded the developers that "the ban is in effect for the purposes of protecting public health and not to stop town growth."

Slegal advised that the developer will have to submit an application for sewer extension to the Town for approval or disapproval and it will then come before the State Board for final decision.

Jack O'Neil, representative from the UMass Planning Office, spoke at the meeting about UMass' role in the sewage problem and how they would be effected by the ban.

O'Neil pointed out that "UMass faculty and staff have participated in studies on sewage in Amherst. UMass has already transfered land to build the new secondary treatment plant on, and has agreed to pay $5000 to the Town for consultants to study waste problems in Amherst.

He said the ban would have little effect upon the University as they have no immediate plans to increase dormitory space.

'SS' Parking Clarified

Due to continuing confusion regarding the proper use of "SS" decals, the Parking Office wishes to make clear exactly what this privilege entitles one to. Vehicles with "SS" decals may park in any legal parking space on campus except for all types of reserved spaces (handicapped, state vehicles, infirmary personnel, head of residence, etc.). They may not park in parking meter spaces without payment. It is requested that "SS" vehicles do not park in lots "K" and "O".

MORE THAN SURVIVAL

As an active supporter of the National Meat Boycott, the University Food Services Dept., in addition to providing a meatless-week option for its boarders, wishes to encourage non-boarders who are observing the Boycott to take advantage of the variety of non-meat program at its Munchys stores across the campus. Below is a sampling of items which, when combined or used separately, will provide an interesting and nutritious meatless week:

Milk	Honey
American Cheese	Asst. Breads
Edam Cheese	Instant Potatoes
Cream Cheese	Spaghetti Products
New York Sharp Cheese	Clam Chowder
Cottage Cheese	Soups
Eggs	Rice
Butter	Black Eyed Peas
Canned Fruits	Vegetarian Beans
Jelly & Jam	Potato Salad

Munchys Stores want to make the meat boycott more than a matter of survival.

Meat Industry Pinched By Nationwide Boycott

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

The meat industry began Tuesday to feel the pinch of the nationwide consumer boycott as wholesalers reported layoffs and supermarkets said sales were declining.

"It's beginning to look like they mean business," said one store manager.

Consumers said they were determined to stick to their guns. "No meat for my family until after the boycott, however long it may be," said a shopper in Detroit.

An Associated Press survey showed the man in the middle-the wholesaler-was hardest hit by the boycott that started Sunday in an effort to force down rising meat prices.

Robert Miller, head of the Union Packing Co. in Los Angeles, said some retailers have stopped all beef orders. J.J. Rodriguez, head of Meat Cutters Local 563 of Los Angeles, said 350 union members had been laid off.

Union leaders in Philadelphia said about 300 meatcutters had been laid off and several hundred others were working shorter hours. "We're afraid this situation could worsen," said Leon B. Schacter, area national vice president of the Amalgamated Meatcutters and Butcher Workmen's Union.

"We feel that meat is too high for our own members, but we don't feel the remedy is the boycott. We can't support it. We'd cut our own throat."

Leroy A. Hughes, principal of the company, said the firm was caught in the middle between farmers who "are being tough and holding firm to the prices they want" and buyers who "are tough and holding firm to what they will pay in addition to the government's price ceilings on these dressed beef prices.

"The two factions...leave no room for a company with our operating responsibilities to function in a worthwhile economical fashion."

Store spokesmen said meat sales were down. Don Richards, manager of the meat department at Shaw's Supermarket in Portland, Maine, said meat purchases were off 60 per cent; the operator of the Hoekstra Meat Market in Kalamazoo, Mich., had only 10 customers in five hours on Monday. As a result, Mary Hoekstra closed the retail meat counter and said it would remain shut until Friday.

Mrs. Hoekstra said the wholesale side of her business-people buying large orders to put in the freezer-was fine. "I think a lot of people are eating meat, but they don't want to be seen at the market buying it," she said.

Hog prices at the Arkansas National Stockyards Inc. on Tuesday were up to $38.50 per hundredweight, an increase of $2.00 since Monday, but $1.50 below Friday's level.

A record drop to $30.25 was recorded at midweek last week.

The Agriculture Department reported that 79,000 head of cattle were slaughtered Monday, down 16,000 from a week earlier. Hog slaughter dropped to 280,000-down 30,000.

Oren Lee Staley, president of the NFO, said the situation looks like it has stabilized at this point. He said his members were standing by to decide whether to take further action-withholding livestock from market as they did temporarily last week or picketing stores to counter boycott groups.

Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz has said he opposes the boycott. But he found himself eating filet of sole for lunch. Butz spoke at a luncheon of the National Press Club in Washington on Tuesday. A doorman at the club was asked what the menu was. "Fish, of course," he replied. "You can't serve the secretary of Agriculture meat on a meatless week can you?"

There were some indications that prices were down-for the moment at least.

Consumers Cooperative, headquartered in Berkeley, Calif., said meat prices in its eight stores would be rolled back 15 per cent.

House Committee Votes To Roll Back Prices

By BILL NEIKIRK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—The House Banking Committee Tuesday voted 21 to 11 to roll back food prices to their levels of May 1, 1972, but part of the support came from foes as a strategy move. So the House may reverse the action.

Most Republican members of the committee voted for the food-price amendment, proposed by Rep. Frank Annunzio, D-Ill., after Rep. Garry Grown, R-Mich., declared it a strategic move.

"This legislation is impossible," Brown said. "To the extent that we can make it worse, there may be order out of chaos because it would be so impossible the House would have to vote it down."

Annunzio's amendment was added to a bill that would freeze prices, rent and interest rates at their levels of March 16, 1973.

"Like hell we killed the bill," Annunzio told a reporter who suggested that it might.

The Nixon administration is strongly opposed to the freeze legislation now before the committee and has hinted that President Nixon would veto any such bill if it got to him.

But the administration's request for a straightforward one-year extension of the Economic Stabilization Act, which gives the President broad authority to control wages and prices, was rejected 25 to 15.

That move suggested the panel is ready to send to the floor much stronger legislation, perhaps than the congressionally mandated freeze.

The Economic Stabilization Act expires April 30. It gives the President flexible powers in control the economy, without directing him what to do.

The price of food on May 1, 1972 was much lower than now. The food-price surge began last spring and failed to level off despite administration predictions.

U.S. Jets Slam Cambodia

By DENNIS NEELD
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP)- American B52s and F111 swing-wing fighter-bombers pounded insurgent forces Tuesday in some of the heaviest air attacks of the Cambodian war, U.S. sources reported.

Every available B52 in Southeast Asia participated in the massive bombings, apparently designed to beat Cambodia's Khmer Rouge rebels and their North Vietnamese allies into accepting a peace settlement, the official American sources added.

The wide-ranging aerial assault was reported to extend beyond tactical support for Cambodian government ground forces and suggested a new turn in the three-year war.

The bombing got under way Monday night and continued until shortly after dawn Tuesday, the sources said. The Pentagon spokesman said in Washington, however, that there has been "no dramatic change in the last few days" in the bombing level.

"We have had a major effort for some time," he added, without disclosing the number of attacks.

Hanoi radio denounced the attacks as a "criminal act against the innocent Cambodian people" and warned the United States of "dangerous consequences."

Senior U.S. officials in Cambodia expressed belief the Communists think they are on the brink of victory, and consequently see no point in peace negotiations.

"The Communists in Cambodia think time is on their side and that it will bring them complete victory," said one senior U.S. official in Phnom Penh. "Our bombing aims to persuade them that they could be wrong."

The sources compared the massive raids in Cambodia to the bombardment of Hanoi and Haiphong last December. That intense bombing was designed to force the North Vietnamese into accepting a peace agreement in Vietnam.

The United States has about 200 B52 bombers on Guam and in Thailand and normally about 60 per cent of them are operational at any one time. Each of the eight-engine aircraft carries 30 tons of bombs.

U.S. air attacks have concentrated on Communist forces edging closer to the capital of Phnom Penh and isolating it from the rest of the country by cutting off highways leading into it.

Continued American bombing has raised a storm in the U.S. Congress, where critics of the Nixon administration have questioned the President's authority to continue bombing now that U.S. troops are out of Vietnam.

The Khmer Rouge are nominally headed by the onetime chief of state, Prince Norodom Sihanouk, who now lives in Peking. The insurgents have about 40,000 combat troops in the field. They are trained, supplied and led down to platoon level by North Vietnamese, of whom there are about 23,000 in the country.

Ranged against them are about 180,000 government troops. But the army and administration are plagued by corruption and there has been mounting discontent against Premier Lon Nol as a result of rising prices and general war weariness.

Defense Sec. Warns Of New U.S. Air Aid

By JIM ADAMS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Secretary of Defense Elliot L. Richardson said Tuesday the United States would have to consider "reintroduction of U. S. air support" if Hanoi launched another massive invasion of South Vietnam.

But he said such an invasion is unlikely and that he believes South Vietnamese forces could defend themselves against anything short of that without U.S. help.

Richardson also said he could not answer the question of whether American bombing in Cambodia could become a long-term commitment.

"It has to be looked at on a day-to-day basis," he replied.

"Our objective is to bring about full compliance with the ceasefire agreement."

The secretary refused to give details on the size of the U.S. Cambodia bombing campaign out said it it "nothing like" the December blitz bombing of Hanoi and Haiphong.

Richardson, testifying before the House Defense Appropriations subcommittee, said Hanoi is unlikely to launch another massive invasion of the South like the one last spring and added:

"But if they should do so then the United States would have to consider, if it were critical to the survival of South Vietnam, reintroduction of U.S. air support."

Richardson said however that he believes "the odds are somewhat better than even" that peace will be maintained in Vietnam.

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif.--THIEU MEETS WITH NIXON--President Nixon and South Vietnam's President Nguyen Van Thieu pose for pictures before meeting at the Western White House in San Clemente, Calif. (AP)

S. Viet Postwar Aid To Be Sizeable — Nixon

By GAYLORD SHAW
Associated Press Writer

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif. (AP)—President Nixon and President Nguyen Van Thieu threatened "vigorous reactions" against Communist cease-fire violations Tuesday as Nixon promised substantial postwar economic aid for South Vietnam.

But the communique crowning two days of summit talks at the Western White House made no specific pledge of renewed U.S. military intervention and gave no specific dollar figure for what it termed an "adequate and substantial" economic aid program.

The presidents of the nations allied in a decade of war also pledged in farewell remarks that they would make full joint efforts to consolidate the fragile Indochina peace.

In the 1,500-word communique, Nixon ruled out none of his options. But the document did not contain a precise guarantee of renewed U.S. military involvement.

The two leaders, meeting less than a week after the United States formally ended its military mission in South Vietnam, said they "viewed with great concern infiltrations of men and weapons in sizeable numbers from North Vietnam into South Vietnam . . ."

They declared "actions which would threaten the basis for the agreement" signed in Paris "would call for appropriately vigorous reactions."

The cease-fire, especially its provisions on military forces and supplies, "must be faithfully implemented if . . . prospects for a peaceful settlement are to be assured," the communique said.

It added that Nixon told Thieu that the United States "views violations of any provision of the agreement with great and continuing concern."

Nixon and Thieu, before making their final farewells, made brief statements to reporters. Nixon said he and Thieu seek a peace "which we all hope will be the wave of the future." He added, referring to the communique pledge of continued U.S. economic assistance: "You can be sure that we stand with you."

Thieu declared that the summit "marks an end and a beginning"—the end of a difficult period for both nations and the starting point for seeking what Nixon has called "a generation of peace for the whole world."

The two presidents walked side by side to the helicopter that took Thieu to San Diego.

Senate Sustains Nixon Veto

By JOHN BECKLER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Nixon won his first spending clash with Congress Tuesday when the Senate sustained his veto of a $2.6-billion bill for rehabilitating the handicapped.

The Senate mustered a 60-36 majority in favor of overriding the veto, but it was four votes short of the two-thirds majority needed. No House vote was taken since both Houses must override to pass a vetoed bill.

The rehabilitation bill was the first of a dozen bills pocket vetoed by Nixon last year after Congress adjourned which Democratic congressional leaders had hoped to override.

Mansfield Disappointed

House Speaker Carl Albert and Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield both expressed disappointment at the Senate vote but said they would go ahead with the plan on other bills.

However, jubilant Republican leaders said they thought the Senate vote had given Nixon a clear-cut edge in the budget battle with Congress that would make it easier to sustain later vetoes. Only 10 Republicans deserted Nixon on the vote while 5 Democrats, including Sen. John L. McClellan, D-Ark., chairman of the appropriations committee, voted with the administration.

The importance of upholding Nixon on this first test was stressed by Sen. Robert P. Griffin, R-Mich., the GOP whip who led the Senate floor fight for the administration.

Griffin predicted that if the Senate overrode, it would lead to passage of other bills that would increase spending $50 billion over Nixon's budget.

No Effect on Budget

The rehabilitation bill would have no actual impact on the budget since it merely authorizes programs and sets spending ceilings. The money to operate the programs would have to be appropriated in separate legislation.

However Griffin and other Republicans argued that the psychological effect of passing a bill authorizing expenditures far in excess of the budget would have serious inflationary consequences.

The vetoed bill would have authorized $2.6 billion over a three-period for continuing and expanding a program of grants to the states for basic rehabilitation services and launching a new program of grants for the severely handicapped. Its first year authorization would not require any increase over current spending.

Democratic leaders selected it for the first veto test because of its emotional content and its long history of congressional support. The bill vetoed last year had passed both the House and Senate unanimously. The current version, cut $930 million in response to last year's veto, was passed 318 to 57 by the House and 86 to 2 by the Senate.

POWs Tell Of Secret Codes

By JULES LOH
Associated Press Writer

VIRGINIA BEACH, Va. (AP)- An ingenious communications network in which every cough, whistle or scratch of a hoe had secret meaning, served as an underground newspaper for American captives in North Vietnam, keeping them informed of camp activity and bucking up their morale.

"The amounts of information we passed along would amaze you," said Lt. Cmdr. William M. Tschudy, who spent nearly eight years in seven different prisons in and near Hanoi.

"For instance, if they had a big transfer of prisoners from one place to another, we'd know in 24 hours the names of everybody there and where they were located."

Tschudy said the prisoners' main concern was in keeping track of one anothers' names, continually refining lists of captives, which they memorized.

In addition, however, they swapped jokes, chatted about old times, mocked their captors, spent endless hours discussing food, and shared such useful tips for survival as how to pick handcuff locks with a wire.

The basis of the system was a tap code. Although some elements of it have been disclosed, the Pentagon asked that its details not be divulged in case some men missing in action might be using it.

"We also whistled a lot," Tschudy said. "I've been in places that at times sounded like a bird cage."

Tschudy said the day he was driven into the Hanoi Hilton compound, June 20, 1965, two days after he was shot down over Thanh Hoa, the camp burst into whistled renditions of "America the Beautiful," "It's a Grand Old Flag," and "God Bless America."

"That did two things," he said. "It informed prisoners who couldn't see my arrival that a new man was in camp, and it let me know that I wasn't alone. I tell you it sounded awfully good to me at that point."

As the months and years passed, Tschudy said, the communications system grew gradually more sophisticated.

"We developed a sort of shorthand for our tap code," he said. "It not only made it much faster to pass information, but also much more difficult to break. If they ever broke the code, there's no evidence of it."

A major aim, Tschudy said, was simply to keep track of everybody. Their cells were shuttered although some had tiny cracks and the men themselves constructed other peepholes. They had to keep track constantly because there were periodic transfers of prisoners as well as new arrivals.

"If I were washing my clothes, for instance," Tschudy said, "I would snap them in the air. The guards thought I was just drying them. But I would snap out, 'WT SM,' that would tell everybody that William Tschudy and Scotty Morgan were in the wash area. We would just let everybody know that we were still around."

Further, the former prisoner said, each man had a personal song.

"If somebody heard a guy walking past whistling 'The Yellow Rose of Texas,' he'd say, 'There goes Bill Tschudy.'"

Tschudy's parents, Dr. and Mrs. Roland Tschudy, live in Highland, Ill.

In their cells, the men gave priority to information such as details of "quizzes," their term for interrogation sessions that often involved torture.

States Test Court On Pollution

By VERNON A GUIDRY JR.
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-Eighteen states sided with environmentalists Tuesday in a Supreme Court showdown over a lenient federal policy on air pollution.

The issue was brought to the court in an appeal by government officials who cast it as a confrontation between industrial growth and protection of the environment.

The government wants reversal of a ruling by the U.S. Court of Appeals here that the federal law prohibits any significant new pollution in air that is still clean.

The 18 states turned aside government arguments that such a strict interpretation of the Clean Air Act would bring economic stagnation to clean areas and choke cities in increasing pollution.

"The protection of air resources requires a uniform national requirement of no significant deterioration," argued Atty. Gen. David L. Norvell of New Mexico in a friend-of-the-court brief joined by 15 other states.

One effect of the government's position, Norvell said, would be to encourage the states with air that is cleaner than federal minimum standards to use lenient controls as an aid to industrial inducement.

"It threatens the economic security of the industrial centers of the nation by making it difficult for them to compete for new industry and to develop stringent regulations to clean up their existing industry," Norvell argued.

In approving state plans that would allow deterioration in high-quality air, Norvell argued, the EPA has frustrated the purpose of the Clean Air Act.

"A state that adopts and enforces criteria that protects its air quality from significant deterioration...subjects itself to an inferior position in attracting new industry while subjecting itself to pollution from neighboring states that have not adopted such criteria," he wrote.

Joining in the brief were Alabama, Connecticut, Florida, Kansas, Louisiana, Maine, Massachusetts, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Dakota, Texas and Vermont. Atty. Gen. William J. Scott of Illinois filed a separate brief opposing the government position.

Utah, Virginia, and Arizona earlier filed briefs siding with the government in the case. Last month, Michigan filed a brief supporting the environmentalists.

Four environmentalist groups, the Sierra Club, the Metropolitan Washington Coalition for Clean Air, the New Mexico Citizens for Clean Air and Water, and the Clean Air Council of San Diego, sued EPA last May to protect those areas with air cleaner than that required by federal standards.

UMass Woman Wins Miss Hampshire County

By NANCY BASMAJIAN

Mary Jane O'Sullivan, a freshman UMass phys-ed major, was crowned Miss Hampshire County in a Miss America Scholarship preliminary contest. Ms. O'Sullivan also won $500 in scholarship money in Saturday night's event, which was sponsored by the Northampton Kiwanis.

A graduate of Concord Carlisle High School, Mary was head majorette and captain of the girl's basketball team. Mary, a student of baton for seven years, has participated in both state and national baton competition. She was most recently honored as Miss International Seaboard Majorette of 1972.

At UMass, Ms. O'Sullivan is featured baton twirler for the marching band. She plans to finish her education at UMass, after which she will teach high school gym, and, eventually, open a summer baton school.

Asked why she entered the contest, Ms. O'Sullivan replied very simply, "They were offering scholarship money." She explained that the focus of the contest was away from "beauty" and more toward "scholarship."

After four weeks of preparation (practicing correct walking and reviewing their various talent presentations), Ms. O'Sullivan said that "the competition was really stiff." She also added that "the girls were really nice," which enabled her to have a good time.

Ms. O'Sullivan will now be one of four participants from western Massachusetts to compete for the title of Miss Massachusetts

CBS Producer To Speak

Ed Fouhy, the Washington producer of the Walter Cronkite CBS Evening News and a 1956 graduate of the University of Massachusetts, is on campus this week as a guest of Southwest Residential College. Fouhy, born and raised in Milton, earned a Master's degree in Journalism from Boston University while working as a reporter for the Boston Globe and Associated Press, after which he worked as news director for WBZ-TV.

With experience as CBS bureau chief in Saigon and in Los Angeles, he was named Washington producer of the Cronkite show in 1969. He accompanied Cronkite on President Nixon's visits to both China and Russia in 1972.

Today at 1 p.m. Fouhy will be available for an informal discussion in the Student Union Colonial Lounge. At 4 p.m. he will speak on TV News Journalism in the main lounge of Project 10 in Pierpont house (Southwest).

Tomorrow at 1:30 p.m. he will talk on "China: Nixon, Mao, and Cronkite," including a slide show on the China visit, also in the Project 10 main lounge.

Tomorrow evening at 7:30 p.m. Fouhy will be joined by University public affairs director Dan Melley and faculty from the Mass Communications department in a roundtable discussion on press-government relations. The forum will meet in Hampden Student Center (Southwest).

spanish is not adequate and not enough. Speech is learned "culturally". Language or speech is most definitely closely related to culture. In this country language more or less reflects the Anglo culture whose purpose it serves. We attempt to provide bi-cultural tutors because, historically, the Blacks and more specifically in this sense, the spanish student has been isolated from the sanctioned dominant anglo-culture. This results in a conscious separation and the exclusion and then feelings of inferiority. These feelings of inferiority also result when the history of contributions "minority" people have been systematically excluded or willfully distorted or omitted.

Tutoring, then, performs the function of assuring that our students survive at the university and to develop leaders and images for our people in our communities. We as a whole need to question and re-define education, not only to "minority" people, but also for the majority, in relation to the validity and legitimacy of Western Civilization's influence and values. We must re-define curriculum, teaching methods, etc.

But we should not just question, because merely questioning is a repetition of cries of injustice. We must take the initiative and develop our own resources. The tutorial component is concerned that the CCEBS students succeed in order to develop these resources.

Lastly, the tutorial concept is a means for the students to get an introduction to a successful college career by developing strong study skills and study habits, not only to survive but to do well at the university.

Personal Counseling Description

The Personal Counseling/Student Services Component functions to assist the CCEBS Student in the area of Personal problems. It also serves to organize and direct the CCEBS Student with implementation of various programs that will enhance the growth and development of the mature man and woman of the Third World Community.

It is also the intention of the component to continue with the communication among the components of the program and other resources on campus in order that we all help facilitate with the total adjustment of the CCEBS Student.

Student Services Description

Jean C. Moss—CCEBS, Student Services
Tel: 5-0031
Office: 208 Mills House

Presently this office is involved in developing a Black Guidance Counseling program for Third World Students. The goals inherent in such a task are multiple. One of the more urgent and practical priorities for students in CCEBS is the need for academic reinforcement programs. To that end I am attempting to design a study hall structure; wherein significant academic support and growth will be assisted through various tutorial and counseling relationships and/or contracts.

Further, I am charged with the responsibility for developing an Advocational Counseling Service for CCEBS students. This task entails searching for employment career opportunities for minority students as well as contacting high schools in the state of Massachusetts.

Academic Affairs Committee

The Academic Affairs Committee of CCEBS in conjunction with Orchard Hill sponsored two courses one in Science Methods and one in Reading Methods. This committee has a commitment to assist in meeting the educational needs of CCEBS students. With the help of our Director Dr. McCoy who with Alan Davis of Orchard Hill, Dr. Rarry Kaufman and Carol Mirada these course offerings became possible. This is the second semester of the courses. The first semester they were held in New Africa House and funded by outside sources and second semester in Orchard Hill funded by Orchard Hill.

Many of the students have never had methods course and were concerned particularly since the reading and math needs of minority pupils are so severe. The complaints were so persistant we had to develop our own options. The obvious question comes to mind had we presented the concerns to the proper officials in the school of Education. The Answer is if it had been remedied we would not have created these courses. The students concerns were so traumatic that rather than force an issue we created the option. Most of our students say there is no credibility in the School of Education.

At the insistence of the Academic Matters Committee of CCEBS the CCEBS Counseling Component is in the process of developing an entire curriculum of courses of study for black counselors. This is another area of serious concern and has a high priority. With no Black faculty in this area at the School of Education we must initiate our own affirmative action.

The Academic Matters Committee Chairman and the Co-Chairman of the Black Science Society, the president of the Society for Black Psychologist and two other student leaders are presently in leadership and administrative training to insure effective program delivery on behalf of CCEBS students.

All of our energies and program behavior are in co-operation and conjunction with the CCEBS Director and his staff.

Thousands Protest Busing

BOSTON (AP) - Several thousand women and some men snarled traffic in downtown Boston Tuesday marching on the State House and City Hall in an angry protest against forced busing to desegragate the city's public schools.

The demonstrators marched from Harrison Avenue and Herald Street to Boston Common, held a 45-minute rally there in front of the State House, then went to City Hall Plaza demanding to see Mayor Kevin H. White and back to the State House shouting for Gov. Francis W. Sargent.

Neither White nor Sargent appeared though the crowd chanted long and loud for them to come out.

Protest Court Order

The demonstrators were protesting a court-ordered racial balance plan drawn up by a state task force. The plan, which would cross-bus black children into white neighborhoods and whites into black neighborhoods, is being considered in hearings before Dr. Louis Jaffe, a Harvard Law School professor who was named hearing examiner to consider the state Board of Education plan.

Some demonstrators sat in the middle of Beacon Street fronting the State House. Others jammed up to the front gates. Some of the crowd got part way up the front steps but police pushed them back and barricaded the iron gates.

State Sen. Joseph Timilty and former U. S. Rep. Louise Day Hicks talked to the crowd from the steps in an effort to calm the demonstration. Timilty said they could get what they wanted only by peaceful means.

"Our Rights"

Many in the crowd carried signs and placards. Some of them called for "Our Rights." Other signs said "Stop Forced Busing" and "We Won't Go, Never."

At City Hall, where the crowd completely filled the Plaza, some tried to get into the building but all doors were locked except one that was guarded by police.

At length, unable to see Mayor White, the demonstrators marched around the building singing "God Bless America," then went back to the State House nearby.

Four members of the Boston School Committee led the march from the South End, through Park Square and up Beacon Street to the State House.

One of the organizers of the protest, Mrs. Fran Johnnene, president of the Hyde Park Home and School Association, told the crowd that under this plan "the neighborhood school as we know it will no longer exist."

N.E. Meat Boycott

Farmers, Wholesalers Upset

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The national meat boycott continued in New England Tuesday with more politicians calling it a good idea but some farmers and wholesalers saying they weren't so sure.

Legislators went to the home of the governor New Hampshire for pancake breakfast Tuesday, but there were no sausages or bacon on the table. The governor and his wife say they're joining millions of others fed up with the high cost of meat and won't buy it for a week.

Farmers Worried

But in Vermont, farmers said they were worried about just the opposite—that meat prices might be going down.

Gov. Meldrim Thomson told New Hampshire lawmakers that he was joining the boycott "to protest an economic system that makes it difficult and often impossible for many of our people to include meat in their diet because of its high cost."

The governor, who regularly hosts state officials at breakfast, said he is against quotas in food production, high costs and inefficiency of transportation, sale of grain to foreign countries, low tariffs on food imports, foreign fishing vessels in American waters and a system that discourages young people from working on farms.

Beef Dinner Planned

But in Bridport, Vt., the National Farmers Organization planned to hold a roast beef dinner Tuesday night to protest the protest.

"If the meat boycott were to force the prices down for the farmer," said Mrs. Paul Blair, a spokeswoman for the organization, "it would mean that more farmers would go out of business, and in the end, the consumer price would be much higher than it is now."

Some New England meat dealers were also unhappy about the boycott.

Louis Lavin, head of the Springfield Beef Co. in Springfield, Mass., said the boycott and the new federal price ceiling on meat have cut his business in half.

Lavin called both the boycott and the ceiling "ridiculous."

Meat Demand Down

In Manchester, Conn., the Manchester Packing Co. reported that demand is down about 20 to 25 per cent since the boycott began. But a spokesman said the price of wholesale beef still seems to be rising.

A spokesman for Grote and Weigel Meat Products in Bloomfield, Conn., said farmers may hold back their livestock from the markets. And this, he said, could lead to a shortage and higher prices after the boycott.

The Internal Revenue Service, meanwhile, said it had begun contacting food firms in Massachusetts to make sure they are complying with ceiling regulations.

An IRS spokesman said they are checking the accuracy of stores' ceiling prices.

Purity Supreme, a supermarket chain in eastern Massachusetts and New Hampshire, stocked no meat on Monday and said business was better than ever.

"The reaction was excellent," said Walter O'Brien, a vice president. "We had a better than normal Monday. People came in who don't ordinarily shop at Purity Supreme."

The chain went back to selling meat Tuesday, but O'Brien said it "isn't selling as well as it usually does."

"It's Time to Quit"

The executive secretary of the Massachusetts Retail Grocers Association said Tuesday that consumers have won the meat- boycott battle, but now it's time to quit.

Gas Demand To Exceed Supply

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) - A spokesman for Independent Gasoline distributors in New England predicts that gasoline demands soon will outstrip the supply.

Wilfred H. Hall, executive director of the independent Oilmen's Association of New England, said Monday his investigation has shown that the total amount of gas they will deliver to distributors has increased to seven.

Hall predicted that a shortage of about 2 per cent of the total demand soon will "begin to show up at the retail level."

He said supply quotas have been imposed by Exxon, Amoco, Getty, Mobil, British Petroleum BP, Texico and Cities Service CITGO.

Mobil, Texaco, Citgo and BP already have announced plans to hold the line or to cut back gasoline distribution levels based on sales of last April. Hall predicted that shortages could be as much as 10 per cent at certain times because of the timing of deliveries. Hall made his comments in an interview published by the New Haven Register.

Muskie Rebut Blacked Out

WASHINGTON (AP) - Democrats reacted sharply Tuesday to refusal by the nation's television and radio networks not to carry "live" the Democratic response to President Nixon's broadcast speech of last Thursday.

Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield told the Senate the networks "are preventing Congress from becoming again a co-equal branch."

House Majority Leader Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass, accused the networks of having "defaulted on their responsibility to the public."

Muskie's speech was rejected by all three television networks for Monday night broadcast, but the publically-funded National Public Radio, a network of non-commercial radio stations, did broadcast it live.

In Amherst, the speech was delay-broadcast by WFCR-FM from 10 to 10:30 p.m. Monday night.

"The networks refused to cover this event live," Mansfield said. "One network even raised questions about what was to be said.

"This is a particularly interesting inquiry, especially in view of recent controversy on censorship of news broadcasts," he continued.

"No such questions are asked when a President seeks time to address the American people simultaneously on all networks," Mansfield said.

He said the networks "appear to be responsive to threats by members of the executive branch but show no appreciation for an attempt on behalf of Congress to be responsible in shaping the public perceptions and determining significant national decisions."

Computer Foul-ups, Foul-ups, Foul-ups

By JAMES F. DONOHUE
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) - Computers will do a lot for a man if he doesn't die laughing first.

Or if they don't screw up and off World War III.

A computer foul-up once brought the world to the brink of the ultimate catastrophe-nuclear war.

That was on Oct. 5, 1960, when computers at the Ballistic Missile Early Warning System.

BMEWS at Thule, Greenland, reported radar siting of a flight of missiles coming over the horizon from Russia and heading toward America.

American defenses went on Red Alert. Crews of Strategic Air Command planes across the world stood by, ready for the order to retaliate.

Fortunately, the computer's interpretation of what radar had seen was not taken for gospel. A man intervened at Thule, checked the readings and reported radar "had picked up not a squadron of rockets but a large earth satellite . . . called the moon."

While there are no reports of a computer actually killing somebody, there are stories like the one told by Rex Reed, the movie critic.

Credit Card Problems

He was trying to use his department store credit card to buy sheets in New York when two store detectives came up and said, "You're under arrest. You're using a stolen credit card. Rex Reed is dead."

Reed flashed all is identity cards and finally the detectives apologized. But they tore up his card anyway.

"Our computer has been told that you are dead," the men said. "And we can't change this."

While not fatal, computer foul-ups can be majectic pains in the neck.

Take the case of John T. Swarens, who came out of his factory job in Jefferson County, Ky., at quit ting time to find his car gone.

He notified the police who reported Ford Motor Credit Co. had repossesed the car because Swarens had not kept up on the payments. Swarens hitchhiked home.

Car Repossesed

Swarens was not behind in his car payments, but a computer in the Ford collection office in Louisville got it into its electronic mind that he was.

Twice, before the repossession incident, collection agents had come to Swarens' home and demanded payment. Twice he had shown them his cancelled checks as proof of payment.

On their third visit, Swarens lost his patience, refused to show any more checks and chased the men away. Then his car was repossesed.

Swarens ended up taking Ford to court, and a jury awarded him $7,000, including $5,000 punitive damages.

The Kentucky Court of Appeals, uphold the award, said: "Ford explains that the whole incident occurred because of a mistake by a computer. In this computerized age, the law must require that men in the use of computerized data regard those with whom they are dealing as more important than a perforation on a card.

This potential for mischief in computers worries a lot of people, including Harvey Matusow, 50, of London, author and self-appointed president of the International Society for the Abolition of Data Processing Machines.

"The computer has a healthy and conservative function in mathematics and other sciences," Matusow says, but "when the uses involve business or government, and the individual is tyrannized, then we make our stand."

War Against Computers

Matusow recommends guerrilla war against computers, was as fiendishly sophisticated as the machines themselves.

He tells consumers to pay bills that come on computer cards promptly, but to overpay or underpay by a penny or so. That drives computers into a state of hysteria, he says.

Or he tells consumers to cut extra rectangular holes in the computer cards they get. Matusow claims to have altered a magazine subscription card that wav.

The next thing he knew, he says, he began getting 23 free copies of the magazine each week with a note thanking him for using the publication in his current events class.

Perfume Affects Computers

Matusow recommends that women, driven mad by department store computer foul-ups in billing or delivery, visit the store's computer room wearing "a lot of the cheapest perfume they can find."

He says computers, which must operate in a "clean air" environment, will be brought to a whirling stop by the perfume.

The victims of computers are not without their sympathetic allies among the users of computers.

William M. Fine, president of New York's Bonwit Teller, was quoted as saying, "I wish I could put my arms around every customer our computers screw up and say, "There, there, we'll figure out a way between us to make the computer cry, for once."

The users of computers have taken their knocks, too.

More Computer Goofs

The Wall Street Journal reported a story about a wholesale grocer who said in court that his computer "almost put us out of business."

"When a customer ordered a case of cereal, he might get a whole roomful. And the bill for it might make him think he had bought a shipload," the grocer said.

"In some cases," he said, "it refused to charge at all. The item was shipped, for all intents and purposes, free of charge to the customer."

Then there are the frequent newspaper ads, like this one from Korvette Stores in New York: "Computer Runs Wild! Huge Overstock of Luxury Carpets."

Business has begun to suffer in recent years from computer crime.

Walston & Co., a brokerage house in New York, was victimized to the tune of $250,000 over eight years by a thief who programmed the company's computer to transfer money from a company account to two customers' accounts-his and his wife's.

By the time the thief had been discovered, he had become a vice president of the company.

The New York brokerage firm of Carlisle & Jacquelin was billed of $81,120 the same way, by a data processing manager who had the computer write checks to ficticious persons and send them to his home address.

Sheldon Danzinger, head of a management consulting firm in New York, told the Wall Street Journal that a computer expert "could steal a company blind in three months and leave its books looking balanced."

KOREA, VIETNAM...
Where to defend the U.S. next?

In ROOTS OF WAR, author Richard J. Barnet looks at the forces in American life that have kept this country at war for more than a generation. To change our pattern of killing in the national interest, to sever the roots of war, involves more than just a change of leaders or policy. It involves sweeping institutional changes within our society. The New York Times called ROOTS OF WAR "eloquent, important, and timely." Now in a Penguin paperback edition. $1.65

OTHER IMPORTANT NEW PENGUINS:

THE RIGHT TO BE DIFFERENT: Deviance and Enforced Therapy. Nicholas N. Kittrie. A landmark book, examining enforced therapy for deviants from the social norm — alcoholics, drug addicts, sex offenders, juvenile delinquents, and others. $2.25

HUMAN INDENTITY IN THE URBAN ENVIRONMENT. Edited by Gwen Bell and Jacqueline Tyrwhitt. A series of readings on the conflict between the urban environment, with its manifold problems, and the needs of the individual. Among the contributors: W. H. Auden, Buckminster Fuller, Margaret Mead, and Arnold Toynbee. $4.95

TO LIVE WITHIN. Lizelle Reymond. In this new addition to The Penguin Metaphysical Library, the author tells the gentle and compelling story of five years spent in a Himalayan hermitage, where her teacher was the great guru Shri Anirvan. $1.75

THE ART OF THE MIDDLE GAME. (Reissue). Paul Keres and Alexander Kotov. Translated by H. Golombek. An analysis of defense and attack in the middle game by two brilliant chess players. $1.45

OUTLAWS OF AMERICA: The Underground Press and Its Context. Roger Lewis. A comprehensive look at today's counter culture as reflected by the underground papers — from mysticism, rock music, drugs, and communes to Women's Lib, Gay Lib, the SDS, and the Black Panther movement. $1.85

POST-WAR JAPANESE POETRY. Edited and translated by Harry and Lynn Guest and Kajima Shozo. $2.45

Information About CCEBS

Financial Aid

Be Sure All Forms Are Signed And Dated Where Requested

A new application must be filed every year, whether or not you have received aid previously.

The deadline for filing applications is April 12. Applications received after this date will be late and may not receive consideration.

Single Students

1. Applicant's parents must provide the Financial Aid Office with a certified copy (by the IRS) of their latest United States Individual Income Tax Return. (Do not send copies of W-2 forms). Parents who filed their returns in Massachusetts may obtain a copy of their return by sending $1.00 for each page requested to the Internal Revenue Service, 310 Lowell Street, Andover, Massachusetts 03812.

2. The Financial Aid application should be completed by the parent and returned directly to CCEBS Financial Aid Office, Room 218 New Africa House.

Married Students

1. The Financial Aid application should be completed by the student applicant and returned directly to the CCEBS Financial Aid Office, Room 218, New Africa House.

2. A copy of a marriage certificate and a birth certificate of each dependent claimed must also be submitted.

3. Husbands and wives should complete separate applications.

Independent Students

1. Students who are independent of parental support must use the special financial-aid form for independent students.

2. Independent students must show that they have not been claimed as deductions for tax purposes by their parents for the past year. Students who cannot provide this information will not be considered as independent students.

3. For each dependent claimed on your application a birth certificate must be submitted.

Full Time Work Study for Summer

For those students interested in full time employment during the summer under the College Work Study Program, please write the Letter FT in the block for Summer Sessions on the upper left hand corner of the front sheet of the white form.

Awards Sheet

Financial Aid

Applications for financial aid for the academic year 1973-74 are available in Room 218, New Africa House or through your dorm counselor.

Dependent Status

Any student who lives at home or in any other manner receives assistance from his or her parent or legal guardian.

Independent Status

Any student whose situation is one of the following: (1) Over 25 years of age; (2) Married; (3) An orphan without a legal guardian; (4) Supporting a dependent(s).

Any student wishing to apply for independent status must have an interview with Mr. Don McLaughlin by April 13, Room 218, New Africa House.

Notes Concerning Financial Aid Awards

Funds available for financial aid (scholarships, grants, loans) are distributed each year on the basis of student financial need (as determined by College Scholarship Service computation of parents' confidential information and by policies and procedures established at the University). Also taken into consideration are the number of applicants for aid, the amount of money available, and the need of individual applicants.

Subsequent Aid

Those awarded aid are eligible to apply for further assistance throughout their undergraduate years at the University as long as their academic records are satisfactory and their need continues. New applications must be submitted each year. Aid in any one year does not guarantee similar aid in subsequent years.

Responsibilities

A satisfactory academic and personal record is a prerequisite to the continuation of their financial aid during the second semester. If a student leaves college during the course of the first semester, any scholarship or loan assistance will ordinarily be withdrawn.

Please report any significant changes in your financial situation as soon as they occur, including (a) any scholarships or other awards you have received or may receive from other sources for use at the University of Massachusetts and (b) increases of $1,000 or more in the income and assets your parents reported on their confidential statement. It may be that because of parents' increased ability to contribute or due to receiving aid from other sources that your award may be adjusted. Failure to notify this office may result in the loss of financial aid at a later date.PLEASE CALL THIS PARAGRAPH TO THE ATTENTION OF YOUR PARENTS.

All financial aid awards are submitted to the Treasurer of the University for credit on the University fee bill. Any amount remaining may be withdrawn in cash.

Guarantee Loan Program

The Federal Government has promoted a loan program to supplement the National Defense Loan Program. Loans are obtainable from commercial risks or credit agencies in amounts up to $1,000 per year. Providing parents' income is under $15,000, the Federal Government will pay the interest on the loan while you are in college. Visit your commercial bank or credit agency and ask about this program if we have been unable to meet your total need.

College Work Study Program
(Summer or for the academic year)

Any student interested in work study must note at the top of their financial aid application whether they desire summer work study or academic year work study or both.

To qualify for work study a general guideline is: any student whose parents earn under $7,500 as verified by their parents 1972 Internal Revenue Tax Return. This is a very general guideline. A student who is an orphan would also qualify. The federal government has limited funds it allots to the University therefore the most needy students who apply are granted work study first. You still might qualify if you are from an extremely large family and your parents earn a little more than $7,500.

If you are grented summer Work Study you must sign an agreement to save a certain amount of your earnings for next year. According to a memorandum from the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare: "Summer employment under the College Work Study Program must result in savings which can be applied toward academic year costs." This same memorandum detines the purpose of the program: "To enable students to earn ths funds they need to attend college." The amount of your savings depends on your job and the earnings involved in your particular case. If you decide to work a full 40 working week then you are not allowed to attend summer school, this is allowable according to the guidelines.

Any further questions concerning Work Study for either the summer or academic year should be directed to: Mr. Gerald Miller in Room 232, Whitmore, (5-0801)

Please Note That: All awards are contingent upon the receipt of funds from the state, federal government, and other sources.

Black Scientist Society

During the current semester the Black Scientist Society formulated a tutorial component which is beneficial to all minority students in the "hard sciences" at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst. This component supplies immediate tutorial services at the request of the student and gives him or her the discipline needed to be successful in the sciences. Since the society's main objective is, striving for academic excellence, this tutorial component has proven to be an important entity towards its execution.

The society is in the process of planning some meaningful programs for the next academic school year. Some of these programs will be:

1) Composing a library which will include scientific journals, a collection of old exams for the purpose of preparation for current exams in the hard sciences, tape references, magazines and articles that expose the student to more minority success images in the scientific fields.

2) There is the intention of setting up workshops in the inner city to allow society members to explain to the Black and Spanish- speaking Committee the importance of science to all minority people. (These workshops will have various demonstrations and many lecture series.)

3) Also movies and success models in industry will be scheduled periodically. There will be annual Fall receptions welcoming incoming freshmen and transfer students with the intent of increasing the number of persons enrolled in hard sciences and interested in increasing the society's membership.

Spanish Speaking Component

Within the CCEBS Program there are an ever increasing number of Spanish speaking students with particular needs. The purpose of our Program is to allow them to progress academically concurrently with achieving English proficiency, while avoiding the frustrations associated with academic delays. With the rapid increase of Spanish speaking students in the CCEBS Program we have become more aware and attuned to the specific needs of these students. A partial answer is the development of the Spanish Speaking Component of CCEBS.

The major obstacle faced by these students is their limited command of the English language. To overcome this hindrance we are offering English as a second language. In this course they progress according to their individual ability, aiming for the goal of proficiency by their junior year.

Not only do we strongly encourage, but we also actively support the students' cultural pride in their own heritage. Hence our counseling program indicates to them the existence of courses in the general university curriculum which illuminate that heritage, as well as important features and events in the ethnic community. If an individual desires to contribute his talents to the Spanish speaking community, he will obtain all the support we can offer.

With the assistance and cooperation of individual departments at this campus, the Spanish Speaking Component will attempt to institute and coordinate core requirements which are taught in the Spanish language. This will achieve the aforementioned goal of enabling the students to advance academically while at the same time acquiring a proficiency in English.

Services

The Spanish-speaking component's main concern this year has been the establishing of contacts within individual departments in this university that will lead to the setting up of courses in Spanish. This had been done through professors or graduate students that are bilingual. Due to this effort, the following courses are now available to Spanish- speaking students:

Spanish for Spanish Speakers-Prof. Pedro Algarin
CASIAC 101: Study Skills in Spanish—Prof. Pedro Algarin
Anthropology 104 (Monografia) in Spanish—Ms. Helen Norman
Zoology 101: Introduction to Biology in Spanish (Sept.)—Prof. Francisco Scudo
History 120 (2 semesters)—Lecture in English; Discussion section in Spanish—Prof. Roberto White
History 131A (second semester)
Geology 100—Lecture in English; Discussion section and textbook in Spanish—Prof. Donald Doehring
Physics 100 in Spanish—Mr. Angel Lopez
Arts (Murals & the Community) Popular—Prof. Leonel Gongora

In conjunction with the Skills Component, the following courses are offered for Spanish-speaking students:

English as a Second Language (2 semesters)—Ms. Elba Rivera, Ms. Aida Beekman
CASIAC 111—Math in Spanish—Mr. Fernando Colon
Math 110 in Spanish—Mr. Fernando Colon.

Due to the small number (50 of Spanish-speaking students enrolled in this university, no more classes can be set up at present. More classes are being negotiated for September, when, hopefully, we will have more students.

It is very important to explain that the setting up of courses in Spanish, even if they are to be offered on a permanent basis, is, at best, a beginning. In order to meet the growing needs of Spanish-speaking students, this component is planning for the future with heads and chairmen of the individual departments. The goal is to recruit Spanish-speaking graduate students and eventually to hire Spanish-speaking professors so that each department can offer bilingual classes. This step would not only help the Spanish-speaking population at the university, but would greatly enrich the educational future of all Spanish majors.

On an everyday basis, this component helps any student that walks in with a problem. If the nature of the problem permits, the student is channeled to the CCEBS component that is in charge of that specific area (counseling, tutoring, etc.).

Together with the organization "Ahora," this component helps to disseminate all the information necessary to enable more Spanish-speaking people to apply to this university.

BSPA

The Black Students Psychological Association is a campus-wide student organization designed to allow students to meet for the purpose of investigating concepts and theories as they relate to psychology.

The purpose of the organization is to explore and analyze those problems and attitudes prevalent in American society which seem to inhibit rather than develop human potential, especially in Black children. We also hope to offer a perspective on Black Psychology through use of films, lectures, guest speakers, etc.; all relating and defining Black psychology from a cultural viewpoint, not offered in the "normal" course of our education.

There is no special eligibility to meet with us-an interest in psychology is preferable, not mandatory.

For information contact: Greg Somerville, Fifth floor in Tobin Building.

Tutoring

by Mariano Trujillo, director

The tutorial component or "academic instruction" component is concerned with recruiting and hiring tutors in any given area of the university, for all CCEBS and informally with Upwardbound students.

Supportive services, such as tutoring are necessary to the culturally different student not only because most of our students are either Black or spanish and therefore "culturally different", but also because most of the CCEBS students come from inferior schools. These inferior schools are ill-prepared, statistically have poor teachers and poor learning facilities and equipment.

In addition, our students have been "disadvantaged" for academic competition with white-anglo-students, because of the systematic exclusion of "images" in the educational curriculum and of bias testing. Bias testing has resulted in lower performance scores in all forms of school "battery" tests, achievement tests, and most certainly in so-called intelligence tests. As a consequence of this educational and social oppression, our students are not as "academically" prepared for university level education as they might be.

The CCEBS Program was founded and developed to insure that "disadvantaged" minority students survive in the university.

We felt that if left "unattended" they would surely as a group not survive.

The tutorial component serves to complement other supportive services, such as academic counseling, personal counseling, and study skills, as well as the individual students' weaknesses in a given subject.

The tutorial component tries to meet individual needs. The component is flexible in attempting to meet the needs of either black students, spanish students, single or married students. For example, when we talk of "images, we feel that the best method of learning and importing knowledge is through peer-groups. We feel that CCEBS students will learn faster and more efficient, not only through their peers, but also if the tutor is of the same ethnic background with similar experience. We try to hire Black tutors for Black students. We try to provide spanish-speaking tutors for spanish students.

In addition, we try to provide bi-cultural tutors as well.

Because knowing how to speak

Inconvenience

The Hatch used to close at 10 p.m., but now it will shut its doors every night at 7:30 p.m. The reason for this is simple: a steady decline in late-night business made it uneconomical for the Hatch to remain open for the additional 2 1/2 hours each night.

Besides forcing late-night snackers to patronize the more expensive Coffee Shop, the early closing hour also resulted in laying off some student help with little or no notice.

Although the Hatch will be closed early for only a six-week experimental basis, it seems to be causing inconveniences for those that used to work there and those who habitually ate and studied there until 10 p.m.

Furthermore, it is ironic that the least expensive of the snack bars is the one which is being closed early, and not the Coffee Shop which is not in line with many students' budgets.

Objectivity

Every morning, the Massachusetts Daily Collegian makes the 20-mile trip from Ware to the Student Union, dining commons, and dorms of UMass.

It may seem like a mysterious process, but the paper is simply the work of a group of students who take the events of the day both on campus and off and try to put them together in some form that will make sense and hopefully inform other members of the UMass community.

One of the biggest complaints about the way the Collegian is put together has to do with objectivity—or the lack of it—in the paper, and what the Collegian does when it feels this objectivity threatened.

Objectivity is generally defined by members of the press as presenting both sides of an issue fairly—such as giving spokesmen for both sides an opportunity to speak, or not printing a greater number of stories presenting one side of an issue than another.

But there's another important facet to objectivity—what is presented as pure fact in a story, and what is presented as "opinion" and has to be attributed—that is, "So-and-so says the Collegian is irresponsible," instead of just saying, "The Collegian is irresponsible."

Obviously, it comes down to what you call fact and what you call opinion, and this is where the objections come over objectivity. One person's fact is another opinion, and vice versa.

Many people in the last few weeks have said the Collegian, and most "establishment" or "liberal" papers are not objective at all, but write, edit, and present the news from a definite bias, just like the opinions they take such pains to attribute to a source.

This is, of course, true. Anyone works from an established set of viewpoints, whether they be reactionary or radical. However, that doesn't mean that objectivity is entirely useless.

To abandon objectivity completely, the Collegian would have to take a stand on everything the paper covers, whether we know enough about it or not to do this.

For instance, if we abandoned all pretense of objectivity we would have to make a decision on who was right and who was wrong on such stories as debates in the Student Senate. Or how about a more complex and delicate situation on campus, such as last December's occupation of the School of Education, the issues of which are still unclear?

The Collegian might have the background to choose the right side—or might not. How about an issue farther away, such as the crisis at Wounded Knee, or the Watergate affair? Those close to the issues, both on campus and off, might have clear cut ideas of who was right and wrong, but how about relative strangers to issues?

One way—and the method we are committed to at the Collegian—is objectivity, flawed as it may be. Although complete objectivity is a myth, it's a worthwhile ideal to work towards.

The King Of Love

It was more than a century ago on this day, April 4, that Martin Luther King died.

To tame the savageness of man
And to make gentle the life of this world.
Let us dedicate ourselves to that
And say a prayer for our country
And for our people.

Bobby Kennedy eulogized King with those words that day.

One of my teachers—I forget who, I think it was Mr. Vignone—used to post those Time magazine covers on the bulletin board. He always used to call King a "great orator".

The Lorraine Motel in Memphis. If they don't wear crew-cuts or flattops in the South, they wear Glen Campbells.

"Dr. King, do you hear me? Dr. King, do you hear me?" Jesse Jackson shouted as he cradled King's bloodied head.

No one knows if the garbagemen King was marching for are any better off in 1973.

King once prayed for his God to "save me from the paralysis of crippling fear".

It was evening in Framingham, Mass., and I turned the television on to channel 7 when he died.

I don't remember where I was when Malcom X died. "Give it to us yesterday," he cried about his heritage and his rights, "and that is not fast enough."

In 1963, Miss Mang left the classroom for a minute, while the student teacher was rambling on about English or something. Miss Mang returned and said, "Children, I don't know how to say this, how it could happen in our day and age, but the President has been shot." During the next period, German class, we looked out the window to the front of the school to make sure the flag was at half-mast.

Unaware of governmental processes, we debated who was next in line—Rusk or McCormack. That was on the bus home.

A little later, I was eating breakfast and listening to WBZ radio, when they announced that Bobby Kennedy was shot. "He'll hang on," I thought. "How could he die?"

Bobby spoke about Alexander and Luther and Jefferson. "These men moved the world, and so can we all," he said.

These kids who are freshmen and sophomores now, and even juniors, they don't remember. They didn't march in Washington, they don't remember the Freedom Singers and Oginga Odinga. They remember Muhammed Ali for his defeats, not for his heroism against the war and for his race. They grew up with Johnson and Nixon, and cannot conceive of a time when it was great to be an American, when freedom was not just another word. For them, Dylan and Elvis and the Beatles always were, and Elvis is the guy who sings Hawaiian spirituals in Nashville. They boycott meat, not lettuce, or I.T.T.'s Hostess Twinkies.

Perhaps that's why Nixon won; people stopped believing in dreams, and their children never learned they existed.

In Louisville, when they teach about the 1960s, the kids, white and black, sit back, bored. Something's been lost, and nothing's been gained, except perhaps a cynicism, dope, beer, and the Grateful Dead in loud stereo.

I don't know how to keep the Movement and the dreams alive. It's been more than a century.

Folks, you'd better stop and think,
'Cause we're headed toward the brink,
What's gonna happen now
That the King of love is dead?——Nina Simone

The Universal Criminal

There's a criminal loose in our society. He's not a murderer, and he's neither thief nor traitor. He's not even a sexual assailant. In fact, his only crime is that he talks too much. He talks to anyone from the Police Chief of a small town to the President of the United States. He talks to anyone from a farmer to a businessperson, from an artist to a construction worker. In short, there are very few people in our society that he has not yet talked to.

He doesn't talk for anyone in particular, but rather, he represents a large variety of people ranging from the Mafia to the Clergy; from the Teamsters to the Grange; from a corner store in Amherst to the International Telephone and Telegraph Corporation. He talks for war and for peace; for Democrats and for Republicans; for liberals and for conservatives.

However, his crime is not what he talks about, but the mere fact that he talks. Lately, he's been doing quite a bit of talking to people like Richard Nixon and Nguyen Van Thieu, and he's been talking for groups like the Cattlemen's Association and the U.S. Department of Defense. In fact, he's been doing so much talking lately that people are beginning to wonder if he'll ever shut up. Whatever the case, he must be stopped from talking, but no one seems to really want to stop him. It seems that every time someone tries, he talks them out of it. It's amazing how much influence he has. I'd say he has more influence than anybody I can think of.

Someday, perhaps, everybody will realize that he serves no useful purpose, and they'll put an end to him. But until then, I'm sure he'll keep talking to anybody who cares to listen. There would be no problem if people would stop listening to him, but there's very little chance of that. So, for now, he will continue traveling around the world, talking to people in every different language. He will continue to influence every great decision, and to wield power in every different direction. He will continue to know that there is no force more powerful—no voice more listened to—than that which comes from his mouth every day.

There's a criminal loose in our society. He's not a murderer, and he's neither thief nor traitor. He's not even a sexual assailant. His name is "Money" and his only crime is that he talks too much.

Spring Fervor

I think that it is now time to safely conclude that winter is definitely through for another year. I can tell because there is more mud than snow. Also, every time I wear my suede jacket, it rains.

Spring is here. Yeah and far out and all that. But what are we supposed to do with the vast amount of energy that we've been storing up during the past few months? El presidente got us out of Southeast Asia just in time to avoid the usual annual spring demonstrations, so that crosses protesting off the list of things to do. And we certainly can't waste all the nice weather that's on its way by sitting indoors at classes, can we? Oh, what to do, what to do?

But wait a minute. We can always partake in some intramural activities. They're kind of fun, and they are good exercise. Yeah, but that means that we have to borrow the equipment from Boyden and someone is bound to rip off a bat and then the athletic fee will go up some more.

There seems to be a great amount of restlessness among the inhabitants. To me, spring denotes rebirth, newness, and color. There is a lot of energy around, but no one seems to know quite what to do with it.

Sue and Martha have commented on the fact that what this campus lacks most is color. And after taking a good look around this place, I certainly have to agree with them. Campus Center grey does nothing for my bouncing bluejay consciousness. Cement City has ripped off my right to blossom.

I cannot appreciate a beautiful day of spring newness in my English class while peering at a concrete waffle. I wish someone would take just one can of red paint and throw it at the Campus Center. Even that would be an improvement. Someone once told me that the beauty of constructing cement buildings is that they don't have to be painted. However, someone neglected the fact that you have to look at these buildings.

With the approach of spring, I feel nothing but reproach for the new Fine Arts Center. Here lies a contradiction. The new building will house creativity, art, yet it is one of the grossest pieces of architecture that I have ever seen. The only visual pleasure that comes from the building is the shadow from the chapel next to it.

Let us not even discuss Southwest.

The sterile environment that the designers of this University have created has stifled my spring creativity. I mean, it's spring, I want to go out and bounce around but I'm afraid of bumping into the concrete. I wouldn't mind too much if it were at least visually stimulating.

Perhaps that's what wrong with this place. Maybe if the sight of Herter was more conducive to a springlike atmosphere, I wouldn't be so hesitant upon entering said edifice. Sue and Martha had a good idea for the fox hole of the new library: turn it into an outdoor cafe. Then at least our 28 story phallis will have some character.

Our environment is what we respond to most. It is now spring, our living conditions should be beautiful. Lo and behold, it is spring, but this beholder eyes no beauty. If beauty is only skin deep, then this campus is extremely shallow. What we need is some color. After all, it is spring.

What Will The Boycott Accomplish?

To The Editor:

Never have I seen so many people take such decisive action on a matter about which they have such little information and knowledge as they have over the current meat price controversy. Consumers are justifiably upset because they are asked to put a larger portion of their incomes into meat, and this has caused upset by the President. Consumers have proposed a boycott for this week, uncertain of what it will do or how it will do it. The primary concern is that it will do something. It kills me that journalists across the country would accept this as rational, save a few papers that can devote considerable energy to business and The Wall Street Journal. It also kills me that the Collegian has accepted this on the basis of one Associated Press report on the housewife scene and an Oliphant cartoon. The boycott has turned the President's ear and he is reacting with a price ceiling for retailers and wholesalers. He has not offered an explanation either.

The beef industry is generally composed of four segments: growers, feeders, packers, and retailers. What the consumer sees is a high price at the supermarket, and he assumes that the grocer must be raking it in. What he does not understand is that in a competitive market such as food retailing the grocer cannot afford to overcharge. Meat packing is slightly more concentrated, but their customers are generally more selective. Feeding and growing is cooperative but scrutinized by the Departments of Agriculture and Justice. The "fat cat" myth is grossly inflated.

What went wrong? Vince Butlet, president of the Arizona Cattle Growers Association said, "With no control on feed prices I cannot understand how Mr. Nixon is going to control beef prices." Soybean and corn are the primary feeds for cattle. The price of soybean had risen 89 per cent in the year ending last March. The price of corn had risen only slightly. This is a significant part of the feeding season of the meat in the stores today. There are rumors that try to explain this increase: the government's miscalculation on subsidy payments to curtail production, and the natural gas shortage causing failure to dry the grain before it rotted. Regardless, it appears more expensive to produce livestock these days. Charles E. Ball of the Texas Cattle Feeders' Association maintained that beef costs 47 cents to the feeder and the market pays 46 cents. "This doesn't give much economic incentive."

What will the boycott accomplish? Retailers will have to take a loss for this week, at least on their meat counters. Packers will not buy until they are sure of a stable market. Feeders will hold onto their stocks longer than what is most profitable until the storm blows over. Likewise will the growers be cautious. All this points to less production, and you know what that means.

The President thinks he can change the market favorably from the top, applying pressure on the grocers and the packers. If he retains his controls until next fall and the prices do not fall naturally, the larger firms will be forced to cut production (the smaller firms with high short-range priorities being already upset.) And consumers will definitely not like a meat shortage, even at prices they can afford. And if the prices do fall naturally, well, the President's redundancy is obvious.

What this affair best illustrates is American bourgeois obstinancy and heavy politics. Americans will pay dearly for more expensive cars, clothing, and homes, but not for food. "Have you ever seen a car price go down?" quipped one meat packer. Politicians make decisions according to these incongruities. The more militant people behind the boycott may deny it, but President Nixon has played them right into his own hands.

Racist Satire

To The Editor:

While recognizing that satire is a time-honored journalistic tool, your attempts to satirize Chancellor Bromery and New Africa House were better examples of poor taste than satire, more Al Capp than Jonathan Swift.

Of the many issues on campus which could be satirized-faculty unionization, faculty reaction to changes in tenure and the campus architecture (a satire in and of itself)- we couldn't help wondering why campus blacks were honored with not one, but two servings of your attention? Could it be that the presence of a black Chancellor is more than a little disturbing to many? And could it also be that, to many, New Africa House represents a threat rather than the long overdue and necessary addition to the academic community that it is? You know better than we, but the petulant, sophomoric tone of the two articles was not able to hide a certain antagonism.

We would not contend that The Collegian was consciously racist in its satiric attempts, but the effect of that satire was racist, for it can only encourage the open expression of the racism we all know to exist on this campus. It is not farfetched to think that some misguided soul may now believe that he has the approval of The Collegian to scribble racial epithets on campus buildings.

That the Collegian was within in its rights to publish such is not at question. (The right of the press to be free of censorship is unquestioned.) What is at question, however, is the fact that the Collegian did not consider carefully enough beforehand the ramifications of its "satire." As the campus organ, your responsibility is great and if you feel that Chancellor Bromery should be attacked on racial grounds, then do it openly and not hide behind distasteful stereotypes. If you feel that Bill Hassan and New Africa House should be criticized, then do so forthrightly and not from the safety of an "April Fool's" joke. What you would call satire, we can only see as a sniper attack of the most cowardly kind.

We would hope that an apology to Chancellor Bromery and the black community of this University would be forthcoming from you. If your intent was not racist, say so, and let this be a lesson to the entire University community that the American disease of racism, which this University has been earnestly fighting, is yet among us, even if it disguises itself as an April Fool's day joke.

Vets Helping Vets

To The Editor:

The Vietnam war is over for most of us; but for those veterans in V.A. hospitals it may live on forever. These veterans have but a few bright spots in their present lives; they need attention and respect; they need to be able to forget.

This is one chance out of many that we, as veterans of the Vietnam era, have to help our brothers and to show that there are some who still care and still think of them. They talk all the time of softball teams that play there and how much they enjoy it and wish they could play.

We are looking for people to go to the Northampton V.A. hospital and play softball for and with the patients. If you are interested in helping your brothers please get in touch with Art Shelley at the Veterans Affairs office in Whitmore at 545-0803 or Brad Armstrong in Holyoke at 534-0070.

Remember we can help them because we know what they went through.

The House Mouse

To Commuters and Area Tenants:

Is the lack of repair getting you down? Well, cheer up. The House Mouse is out and in it this month we feature an article of how to legally withhold your rent for repairs.

We have other little bits of information you might be interested in. Some of the other articles in this issue include explaining your lease to you, the history of rent control in Amherst and an informative article on day care alternatives for mothers attending the University.

Where can you pick up this free magazine? Where you find your daily Collegian, in downtown Amherst at Louis Market, Augies Smoke Shop, Cronopious Book Store and Hastings Newstand. In North Amherst at Watrobas' and in Northampton at Wallys and Lizottes on Main Street.

If you like the March issue and didn't get a copy of the first one (with the Mass. Sanitary Code) which appeared in February, we have copies in the Commuter Assembly office in the Campus Center, Room 112. If you would like to make suggestions, comments or have a question—you can call us at 545-2145.

Prison Reform

To The Editor:

In regard to Mr. Gromeleski's attack on Commissioner Boone, it is disheartening to find a university student reflecting the warped mentality of many prison guards, to whom prisoners are vicious animals who can only be controlled by clubs and chains.

One fact that is often overlooked in dealing with the problem of prisons is that they are to a great extent lawless institutions— in the sense that the guards (not the prisoners) are under few restraints. Most rules are set arbitrarily by administrators, and are applied, or ignored, arbitrarily by the guards.

Few persons are fit to wield such power over other human beings ("all power corrupts . . ."), and it is not surprising that persons of limited education and inadequate training, still governed by the social prejudices of a lower middle class background, should be tempted to abuse this power and to resent efforts to limit it.

Two things are essential to prison reform: first, legislative, or perhaps judicial, guarantees of certain basic human rights for prisoners; and second, the appointment of intelligent, educated, and specially trained "corrections officers"—as they might then be properly called. Governor Sargent and Commissioner Boone are on the right track.

Loans For Abortions

To The Editor:

Where would you go if you needed the money for an abortion? Where would you go if your girlfriend/wife/sister needed an abortion, and there were no funds available?

At the present time, there is a loan fund on campus that helps those that are in need of a loan for an abortion. It is called the Medical Emergency Loan Fund. We have a small amount of money with which we can work. If the fund doesn't grow—soon— we won't be able to make many more loans. We won't be able to help anyone.

This week, we are asking the university community to show its support of the Medical Emergency Loan Fund. There is a table set up on the Concourse level of the Campus Center, where donations will be gratefully accepted. Please come and help us give women the right to choose, the right to control their own bodies.

Cleaver On Move

By ARTHUR EVERETT
Associated Press Writer

PARIS (AP)—Former Black Panther leader Eldridge Cleaver's on the move again. He's been denied renewal of his American passport since 1968, when he fled the United States upon revocation of his parole after a gun duel with Oakland, Calif., police.

Cleaver, 38, spent eight months in Cuba, then visited North Korea, China and North Vietnam. He finally settled down in exile in Algeria, only to wind up under house arrest. Last December he went into hiding.

Now Cleaver has applied for political asylum in France. He told Premier Pierre Messmer through an attorney that he has been "persecuted because of his action in favor of liberty."

ROME (AP)—The not so wonderful wizard of Rome is off to see the judge.

Antonio Battista, 44, president of the Italian Association of Wizards, has been arrested and charged with fraud.

Police said he promised jobs and success in love but lacked the wizardry to fulfill his pledges.

BRIGHTON, England (AP)—All it takes to go on living, says Georgina Colyer, is to "keep cheerful and happy." A little nip helps too.

Cheerful and happy, the widowed Mrs. Colyer sipped a glass of sherry at the Old People's Home here Tuesday in celebration of her 110th birthday.

Infirmary Problems

Something new has been added to the Health Services. The Health Services Advisory Board has begun to staff a desk in the reception area of the Health Services. The staff is available to disseminate information and handle problems encountered by students while at the Health Services.

Although the staff is not of a professional nature, they are students who have been trained in Health Services procedures, and they can direct you to the proper person to speak to. This desk is staffed from 9:00 A.M. to 5:00 P.M. Monday through Friday, and it is there for the benefit of the students.

Wanna Stitch?

Ms. Philomena Cook will be offering a one-credit colloquium on creative stitchery and advanced crewel on Thursday evenings from 7:00 - 10:00, beginning April 5, in the fifth floor Piano lounge of John Quincy Adams tower.

Lobbyists' Chapter Formed

Members of Citizens for Participation in Political Action (CPPAX) will hold their first Amherst chapter meeting tonight at 7:30 P.M. in Room 178 of the UMass Campus Center.

The meeting was called by Kenneth Mosakowski, a member of of the Executive Board of the state wide citizens' lobbying organization.

The main item on the agenda for tonight's meeting concerns local reaction to President Nixon's proposed budget cuts in domestic programs, particularly economic assistance programs funded under the Departments of Agriculture; Housing and Urban Development; and Health, Education, and Welfare.

Another item on tonight's agenda concerns expansion of the present meat boycott in the Pioneer Valley area.

All concerned Amherst residents are urged to attend.

LOSE 20 POUNDS IN TWO WEEKS!

Famous U.S. Women Ski Team Diet

During the non-snow off season the U.S. Women's Alpine Ski Team members go on the "Ski Team" diet to lose 20 pounds in two weeks. That's right — 20 pounds in 14 days! The basis of the diet is chemical food action and was devised by a famous Colorado physician especially for the U.S. Ski Team. Normal energy is maintained (very important!) while reducing. You keep "full" — no starvation — because the diet is designed that way! It's a diet that is easy to follow whether you work, travel or stay at home.

This is, honestly, a fantastically successful diet. If it weren't, the U.S. Women's Ski Team wouldn't be permitted to use it! Right? So, give yourself the same break the U.S. Ski Team gets. Lose weight the scientific, proven way. Even if you've tried all the other diets, you owe it to yourself to try the U.S. Women's Ski Team Diet. That is, if you really do want to lose 20 pounds in two weeks. Order today. Tear this out as a reminder.

Send only $2.00 ($2.25 for Rush Service) — cash is O.K. — to Information Sources Co., P.O. Box 231, Dept. ST, Carpinteria, Calif. 93013. Don't order unless you expect to lose 20 pounds in two weeks! Because that's what the Ski Team Diet will do!

PLAY THERAPY

With the advent of "Midterm Mayhem", the emphasis upon just plain fun has reached a low point. But, let's face it, all work and no play made Jack a brilliant, but neurotic, boy. Don't take any chances. Relieve the pressure of papers and exams now, or anytime between the hours of 9 a.m. and Midnight at the Hampden Games Room.

College Priest To Wed

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) - The former president of Providence College has asked Pope Paul VI to release him from his priestly vows so that he can marry.

The Rev. William Paul Haas, O.P., has left the college and the Providence diocese, as is usually required by church authorities in Rome in such cases, according to a spokesman for his religious order.

The Rev. Ternece Quinn, O.P., provicial of the Dominical Province of St. Joseph, disclosed Father Haas' request Tuesday in New York City. Father Quinn said he made the disclosure in order to give Father Haas "an opportunity to seek academic employment."

A spokesman for Father Quinn said Father Haas, Providence College authorities and the bishop of Providence had seen Father Quinn's statement in advance and approved it.

The Providence Journal quoted Father Haas as saying he plans to marry Pauline G. Burke, a former administrative assistant who also served as his secretary at the Dominican college. Both Miss Burke and Father Haas are 47.

"I love to teach," Father Haas told the paper. "It is the most rewarding experience I know, and I feel I can make a very real contribution to society and the church through teaching."

Father Haas served as president of Providence College from 1965 to 1971, and taught at the college for a year after stepping down as president. He has been denied permission to stay at Providence as a married Lay Professor, Father Quinn said.

Father Haas presently is a post-doctoral research associate in Boston University's philosophy department.

Fund Drive Aims At Alumni

Recognizing the need for increased support of public education in the Commonwealth, the University of Massachusetts Amherst Alumni, under the direction of Mr. Edwin Rossman, Vice President of the Daniels Printing Company in Everett, have launched a fund raising program utilizing a phonothon as the central technique.

The Phonothon will be directed toward the 11,000 UMass Amherst Alumni of the classes of 1895-1971, who live in the greater Boston area.

According to Mr. Rossman, "This is the first time the University's alumni have undertaken a major campaign in an effort to raise funds for student scholarships and financial aid." He commented further that, "This drive can prove to be a successful effort on the part of the University's alumni to supplement the University's presently inadequate financial aid resources."

Starting April 2 and continuing for several weeks thereafter, more than 650 alumni of UMass-Amherst will be phoning their former classmates from a central phone bank at the University's Waltham Suburban Experiment Station.

Edwin Rossman, director of the Phonothon, hopes the phonothon campaign will help financial aid at UMass.

We respectfully proclaim the opening of a superlative tobacco shop for the most refined tastes.

With all due modesty, we are pleased to announce that New England's most complete tobacco emporium is now available to discriminating smokers in Amherst and its environs.

Here you will discover a truly unique line of pipes collected from every corner of the globe. Our cigars are all imported as well. In addition, we carry a distinctive selection of masculine gifts. We are also knowledgeable in the art of blending the world's finest tobaccos.

Admittedly, we cater mainly to the carriage trade. (In fact we are located in The Carriage Shops.) However, if you are satisfied with only the finest in smoking equipage, your visit here will be most rewarding.

Photographic Essay On Display In SUB

"Of Travels" another photographic display by student-photographer Josh Gordon has been set up in the hall, just outside the Student Union Ballroom and will continue until April 28th. The 85 pictures which make up the display are combined with some blank verse and arranged into a photographic essay. The author feels that photographs arranged in such a way have more impact. Most of the photography and blank verse were done on a cross-country trip taken this summer.

Last year at about this time Josh's essay "The Transition Generation" was on display in the same place here at UMass. It has since traveled to Clark University (Worcester, Mass.), Mt. Holyoke College (S. Hadley, Mass.) and Syracuse University (Syracuse, N.Y.).

Josh feels that his new essay is better photographically but his older one made you think more. Curious of what other people think he has generously included a graffitti board at the end of the exhibit for people to write their comments and reactions.

There will be a presentation of audio-visual work done by Josh Gordon as part of Earth Week on April 25 at 9:00 P.M. in Room 168-170 of the Campus Center.

Dinosaur Bones Uncovered

A paleontologist from the University of Utah has uncovered the remains of what he thinks may have been the largest dinosaur that ever lived. The April SCIENCE DIGEST reports that James A. Jensen uncovered bones belonging to a plant-eating dinosaur of the Stegosaurus family whose size he estimates to be over 50 feet tall, 100 feet long from nose to tail and about 80 tons in weight. These measurements were deduced from a study of two matching shoulder blades, the pelvis and five vertebraes of this creature which he found in southwestern Colorado. "This is by far the most enormous creature ever known to walk upon the earth," he says. "If such an animal were on the earth today, it would have to stoop over to look into a third story window."

by SYDNEY OMARR

"Could you, in your column, tell us where the moon is, at least once in a while it not each day? Is it not true that an entire horoscope should be checked where marriage comparison is concerned?"—G.R., Chicago, Ill. Answer: Today the moon enters the zodiacal sign of Taurus at 6:59 a.m., Pacific Standard Time. You are correct. The horoscopes of the individuals involved are necessary for answers to the questions concerning success or failure of a marriage. There are many instances of successful alliances between Scorpio and Aries. But it is a Fire-Water combination!

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Accent is on what you get for your money. Protect your interests. Build for security. Cancer is involved. Family member should be consulted. You are on brink of making discovery which will involve travel.

NHL Players To Fight Merger

TORONTO (AP)—The National Hockey League Players Association is prepared to fight any proposed merger of the NHL and the World Hockey Association, Alan Eagleson said Tuesday.

"We already have consulted anti-trust counsel in Washington, and I will be meeting with them later this week," said Eagleson, executive director of the players' association.

Eagleson spoke at a news conference following rumors that Ben Hatskin, owner of the WHA Winnipeg Jets, and Bill Jennings, president of the NHL New York Rangers met in New York Sunday to discuss a merger.

"They want to destroy the players' right to bargain . . ." said Eagleson when asked why the mature NHL would want to take the fledgling WHA under its wing. "Salaries in the National Hockey League average about $44,000 this year, up from $31,000 last year, and it's all because of the competition.

"Going by what happened in football when the National and American leagues merged, I would say that salaries would be back on an average of $30,000 within a year if the NHL and WHA merged."

NHL President Clarence Campbell said he was aware of the meeting but it had no official status as far as the league is concerned.

"Any comment on the subject would have to come from the people who took part in it," he said.

Jennings was unavailable for comment, but it was believed one area of concern was player salaries which have soared since the WHA was formed and lured some of the top players from the NHL.

"Here we are trying to put together a better reserve clause with the NHL owners, at the owners' request . . .," Eagleson said when first he got first word of the talks. "We're trying to do this for their benefit more than ours."

"They tell us that they're happy to be working with us on one hand, and with the other hand they're trying to stab the players in the back."

Cards Dump Sox 3-0

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP)-Reggie Cleveland, a young right-hander with great potential, dazzled the Boston Red Sox for eight innings and Diego Segui mopped up Tuesday in pitching the St. Louis Cardinals to a 3-0 exhibition victory.

Cleveland allowed only an infield hit by Ben Oglivie and retired 14 batters in order in one stretch. He then gave up three hits in the seventh and eighth innings with his longest pitching effort of the spring.

Cleveland, who had put together 12-12 and 14-15 seasons in two years with the Cardinals, had a big edge on Boston's Lynn McGlothen, who allowed 10 hits and all the Cardinal runs in seven innings.

McGlothen, who struck out five and walked only one, gave up a run in the fourth.

A single by Reitz, a double by Ray Busse and a single by Lou Brock provided St. Louis two insurance runs in the sixth.

The Red Sox put runners on first and second with two out in the second, but second baseman Ted Sizemore saved a run with a diving stop of a sharp grounder by Doug Griffin.

Bob Veale, a 37-year-old left-thander, continued to amaze observers with another fine relief job for the Red Sox. He struck out two in the eighth inning.

The loss dropped the Red Sox under .500 with a 13-14 pre-season record. St. Louis ended its Florida campaign with a 13-11 mark.

The Red Sox wind up the exhibition schedule at Winter Haven with a game against the Montreal Expos Wednesday. John Curtis will start against the Expos.

Can Hawks Stop Hondo, JoJo?

BOSTON (AP) - Lou Hudson and the Atlanta Hawks left Boston Monday sure of one thing - John Havlicek isn't going to have another night like he enjoyed on Sunday.

"I'll tell you one thing," Hudson said of the Boston Celtics Havlicek. "He won't score 54 points again."

Havlicek's 54-point bust Sunday night sent the Celtic breezing to a 134-109 victory over the Hawks, giving Boston a 1-0 advantage in the best-of-seven National Basketball Association quarterfinal play off series. The series resumes Wednesday night in Atlanta.

Havlicek's performance broke Celtics scoring records and had the same effect on the Hawks efforts. Every time Atlanta got close to the Celtics. Havlicek let loose with a barrage of jump shots off the patented Boston fast break.

"I think we will stop Havlicek," said Atlanta Coach Cotton Fitzsimmons, adding that by "stop" he meant holding the Celtics captain to 30 points.

To stop Havlicek, and his run and shoot compatriot, Jo Jo White-who had 24 points Sunday night-the Hawks will have to slow down the Boston fast break.

Throughout the game Sunday, Havlicek and White capitalized on the Hawks slow defense retreat by popping jumpers from 15 feet. Between them, Havlicek and White connected on 39 of 60 shots from the field, including a 24-to-36 performance by Havlicek.

"This certainly had to be my greatest shooting night in my pro life," Havlicek, a 10-year veteran, said. "I never shot like that before." Havlicek credited his performance to the Celtics fluid offense.

"There was so much movement that I was getting open all the time," he said. "You know that I'm not a one-on-one player. We just kept getting situations where I had the open shots."

Come Wednesday night, Fitzsimmons said, Hudson, like Havlicek a 6-5 forward and guard, will be assigned to the Boston captain.

"I know I'mm going to play Havlicek the next time," Hudson said. "It should be a good match up."

Fitzsimmons said he would also stick with a defensive alignment which places forward Jim Washington guarding Celtics center Dave Cowens, allowing Atlanta center Walt Bellamy to roam under the basket.

"We'll play Washington against Cowens in the rest of the series because he's quick, is capable of keeping Cowens of the boards and can go out and cover him," Fitzsimmons said.

Tom Heinsohn, the Celtics coach, allowed as how that defensive alignment was just fine with him, believing it will free up either Don Nelson or Paul Silas to roam against the taller, but slower Bellamy.

"Let them worry about Cowens," Heinsohn said of his 6-9 center, the NBA's Most Valuable Player. "Bellamy isn't used to playing outside defense with picks and so forth," and he'll have to do just that if he watches Nelson or Silas very closely.

Oh Ye Of Little Faith

Oh ye of little faith. Down in New York there is a blow-hard named Red Smith who fakes a boxing column every time there is a heavyweight fight. His latest detraction to the boxing columnists omnibus was a piece in Monday's Times headlined "Decline and Fall."

Smith, an obvious red-neck who could have only been offended by Ali sticking his long black middle finger in the face of the Army, pronounced Ali dead quicker than an impoverished mortician.

If Smith did this, then he, with all the logic of his mind's capacity, should believe that Joe Frazier is an athletic apparition. Frazier won the Olympic Gold Medal with a broken thumb. If a broken jaw put Ali in a pugilistic grave then Frazier has been dead since the summer of 1964.

But enough of Red Smith. Let his ineptitudes speak for themselves.

The facts of Ali's ability to continue fighting are more than plain. He is old. So was Sonny Liston. So was Joe Louis. So is Floyd Patterson. So is Gerry Quarry. So is Emile Griffith. Old champions that quit like Louis and Liston are not champions in the true sense. They are something else.

Although Ali's comeback has not been anything worth great admiration, the fact that he has fought consistently and given people like Ken Norton the chance of a lifetime is to his credit. Norton is twenty-eight, very close to the age when average boxers need to begin looking around for something else to do besides fight for a living. The purse Norton won last Saturday was six times what he had ever earned before. His name is now being mentioned as a contender for the title (incredible though it may seem).

Ali is not as much a money fighter as he was before the draft hiatus, although by now he has made enough to support he and his family for several lifetimes. Critics forget that fighters are first of all athletes, whose monetary return is based on public demand for their skills, not greed.

Again comebacks are only remembered when they are full of triumph. If Marvin Barnes had come back into the Providence-Memphis State game and aided his losing team to win he would have received twice the applause he did for coming back and helping them lose. The point here is not Barnes dislocated knee, Ali's broken jaw, or Frazier's broken thumb. It is the will to win that makes them capable of transcending the pain and go about the business of being championship material.

So Muhammed is quiet. Joe Frazier is wondering what he'll say now. Ali is out a few million dollars, but boxing is so much better because of him, his refusal to be a patsy of the WBA and the Army, and his attraction of some respectability to a sport that has been threatened with demise for the last thirty years.

What's up for Ali? He has hit a rut in comeback road. He may quit, but he won't throw the towel in because he lost to a no-name. He'll quit because he realizes perhaps that he has nothing more to contribute to a sport that he rejuvenated and kept healthy for ten years longer than many of his predecessors could ever dream of doing.

UConn Proposal May Kill YanCon

By STEVE CROWE

In a move that might be the fatal blow to the Yankee Conference, the University of Connecticut Board of Trustees has proposed the removal of almost all scholarship restrictions within the conference.

UConn athletic director John Toner presented the proposal to the trustees on March 23rd and the following day, the trustees endorsed it.

The proposal calls for a change in the conference scholarship policy to the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) standards. The present Yankee Conference policy allows schools 80 scholarships over a period of four years; the NCAA allows 105 football and 18 basketball cholarships over the same period of time.

Connecticut Trustee Robert Taylor said last week that UConn was looking to an excelled athletic program.

"In the past," Taylor said, "it was decided that we didn't want to excel in UConn athletics, which made many graduates unhappy. In the past we led the way in one direction (keeping restrictions on the scholarship program), and now I hope we lead the conference in the other direction."

It is expected that Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and perhaps New Hampshire will join with Connecticut, but that the remaining three teams in the conference, Vermont, Boston University, and Maine, will oppose the move. The latter three are on "financial need only" programs and have not shown any desire to change that policy.

If the proposal is passed by the board of athletic directors, it will then have to survive a review by the presidents of the schools in the Yankee Conference. The presidents have already come out in favor of a "need only" policy for the conference, but have not actually enforced the issue.

The proposal might die in the presidents' meeting room, but if it does survive, some interesting problems would occur, possibly even the destruction of the Yankee Conference itself.

Vermont, BU, and Maine would have no way of competing on the same level of the other schools if the others went out on aggressive recruiting campaigns. And, on the other hand, UMass, URI, and UConn might not even wish to keep those teams on their schedules.

Also, the problem of where to get the extra money to recruit more players on scholarships will arise. At the present time, UMass is operating to near capacity within their athletic budget. A rise in the student athletic fee wouldn't seem likely at this time as the Student Senate has recently called for a cut in the present budget.

There is some indication that the 49-16 Minutemen rout of the UConn football squad last fall was a factor in the decision of the Trustees. According to Dave Solomon, the sports editor of UConn's newpaper, the school's fans, students and alumni, began to ask questions about their athletic program.

When telephoned last night, Solomon was in the middle of writing a column on the scholarship proposal. He was in favor of the proposal and looked forward to getting out of the Yankee Conference (which, he said, was recently rated 17th out of 17 conferences in the nation). He felt, however, that the proposal would not get past the University presidents.

See tomorrow's Collegian for related story.

Surely You Jest

After about the eighth time he had not gotten the American League MVP award when he should have, Ted Williams told a writer 'Who cares. That's something someone gives you. I'm not interested. I'm more concerned about things you earn, like the battling title."

Williams took it as he should. MVP awards are nice, but they don't reflect the true nature of their name. Rarely is the MVP truly the Most VALUABLE Player.

More often he's the best on the best team, or the most spectacular, or someone who's accomplished some incredible feat, like Roger Maris' 61 home runs.

This year's selection of Bowdoin's Dick Donovan as Division II's Most Valuable Player fits right into that list of "Surely you jest" MVP's.

Now, Dick Donovan is a helluva hockey player--which nobody can deny. And his work in the playoffs, especially against UMass, was impressive. But to say that he was more valuable than Pat Keenan isn't realistic.

"Ah, come on," you're going to say, here's the classic example of self-righteous UMie sticking up for his friend even though the facts point the other way.

But they don't.

Pat Keenan had to be the Most Valuable Player in Division II and anybody who watched him, or knew what he meant to UMass hockey, or could look at his statistics and add 1 and 1 couldn't see it any other way.

The facts first.

Keenan scored 43 goals this season, 43 out of the total of 141 the team scored. He led the team in power play goals, had six hat tricks (including a couple of four-goal games), and killed penalties. More than a couple of times he scored three out of four UMass goals, or four out of five, and ended up as 99% of the UMass offense.

And don't think the impressive stats came easily. He was working with two linemates he'd never played with before, one a freshman and the other a guy who'd come off a terrible season the year before.

Billy Harris and Lonnie Avery both contributed to the scoring success of their line, and both had good seasons, but any way you look at it Keenan made the line go.

He had personal problems as well, almost quitting school during intersession.

So what happened?

For one thing, Keenan's been faced with a bad attitude rap since he's been here and couldn't shake it this year. You don't get a reputation like that for nothing, but this year, it wasn't anywhere near the truth. Nobody busted ass to win any more than Keenan, and although he's the type of guy who can smile and be civilized after a loss, nobody hated to lose any more.

Another thing that might hve done him in is the final outcome of the playoffs. The Minutemen received the number two seed and didn't make it to the finals. Every one points the finger at Keenan and says, "Where was the big gun when you needed him?" And granted, he played poorly against Bowdoin.

But UMass never should have gotten that second seed in the first place. Their record just wasn't that good. Keenan, and the entire team for that matter, was up against the eight-ball to begin wity. As far as Bowdoin game is concerned, no one played well. It was one of those nights.

The big thing though, is this. The Minutemen finished the season with a 14-11-2 record. That's far cry from last year's Division II championship record. Even so, it's frightening to think of what it would have been without Keenan's 43 goals.

I've heard the critics, and evidently the people selecting the MVP have too, saying "Oh, they'd be a better team without him." That's horseradish.

Keenan will be missed by UMass hockey, and how much probably will never be determined, in much the same manner as his worth while he was here was never really appreciated. He's been All-America twice, and that's fine, but it's a shame he didn't get the big apple this season.

Keenan's problem may only have been that outside of Amherst UMass is still a relative hockey unknown, and some people just couldn't fathom a UMass hockey player as an MVP, or it could have been just that someone didn't like him.

I'm inclined to believe the latter.

Canadiens Confident Of Easy Victory

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Montreal forward Pete Mahovlich hopes the record-smashing Canadiens can hold the score down against Buffalo's Sabres when the Stanley Cup playoffs begin with four games Wednesday night.

"Really, I hope we don't win by big scores," he said. "That hurts a team. I'd like to see 3-1 or 4-2 games, where we're working all the time and not getting high on ourselves."

Montreal, after losing only 10 of 78 games during the National Hockey League season, is favored over defending champion Boston to take the Stanley Cup back to Canada.

The Bruins regrouped after early-season woes to finish second behind the Canadiens in the NHL East and are picked to handle the skidding New York Rangers in best-of-seven opening series.

Buffalo will be at Montreal and New York at Boston. Western Division King Chicago hosts the St. Louis Blues and the Philadelphia Flyers will play on home ice against Minnesota.

Montreal's physical worries have slackened. Yvan Cournoyer has a torn stomach muscle and Guy Lapointe a sore ankle, but both will be in the lineup at the Forum.

New York isn't so lucky. Defenseman Rod Seiling is out with a busted collarbone and several other standouts including Vic Hadfield, Brad Park, Bruce MacGregor and goalie Ed Giacomin are limping with injuries.

Park has an inflamed knee and Coach Emile Francis rested him during two season-ending games so the flashy Ranger would be ready for the Boston series.

The Rangers contested Montreal for the Eastern Division lead early in the season, but faded to finish well behind the runnerup Bruins.

Bobby Orr is skating well again, Phil Esposito is ready and 44-year-old wonder Jacques Plante has been tough in the goal. Thus, the Bruins are again operating with an air of confidence.

Although Stan Mikita still has problems skating to his left on a hell broken in early February, the Chicago Black Hawks are in good health and heavily favored in the Western series against St. Louis.

Talk Of Ice Facility

The UMass ice-skating, hockey facility situation has come into the limelight once again. Athletic Director Frank McInerney, Assistant Bob O'Connell and Hockey Coach Jack Canniff have been meeting with a private contractor over the possibility of building a skating facitily.

Experiments are presently going on as to the feasibility of building such a facility on land which is available adjacent to Route 116. Whether the soil is suitable for such a facility is not known at this time.

The rink would be built by the private contractor and UMass would rent the facility on a yearly (or multi-yearly) basis. Results of the soil testing should be known soon as well as specifications on the size of such a facility.

Keenan, Riley All Div. II

NEW YORK (AP) - Dick Donovan of Bowdoin was named Most Valuable Player in Eastern College Athletic Conference Division II hockey while Rookie of the Year Tom O'Connell led a four-man contingent from Vermont into the All-Star squad.

Donovan, a senior forward who averaged 2.16 points per game, won MVP honors by eight points over Vermont senior forward Pat Wright in balloting by coaches announced Monday.

Other Vermont players on the honor team are John Murphy, a sophomore defenseman, and senior Steve Eckerson, the leading goalie who held opponents to an average of 2.61 points per game.

Also named to the squad were forwards Don Riley and Pat Keenan of Massachusetts and Tom Cadigan, Norwich; defensemen Mark Bousquet of American International and John Taussig and John Vigeron of Bowdoin and goalie Bill Cantwell of Norwich.

Life can be difficult for Student Senate Donna Stevens secretary, particularly when debate drags on, people can't be heard, and what was that last vote on, anyway? The Senate last night plowed through the budgets of the Collegian and Spectrum, and shortly after 12 remained mired in the budget of campus station WMUA.

Collegian, WMUA Passed; Spectrum Slashed

By STEVE FINE

The Student Senate last night began its annual consideration of budgets of SATF (Student Activity Tax Fund) funded groups by passing the Collegian's $211,370 budget and cutting the budget of Spectrum, the campus literary magazine, from $26,075 to $13,971.

In a meeting lasting until 1:20 a.m., the Senate also approved an increase in the area government tax from $4.00 to $6.75 and heard Faculty Senate President David Boothe speak against faculty unionization.

The motion to strike the Spectrum budget came after Senator Nick Apostola proposed to cut the magazine down to one issue.

Financial Affairs Committee head Paul Hamel agreed, citing the expensive printing processes the Spectrum staff employed to produce the magazine. He cited specifically the four color printing process and the four page fold-out that appeared in this issue. "This magazine can achieve the same quality like "Drum" with less money," he said. "Drum" is a magazine produced to be geared to a Black audience. This year they are asking a raise in their SATF (Student Activities Tax Fune) from $23,000 to almost $33,000.

Ed Meek, Editor of the magazine later said that he thought the Senate was not representing the interests of the Students when they cut its budget. "We were not given a chance to defend the existence of the magazine," he said.

Meek also said that the Senate was moving in a bad direction "by seeking to fund only service oriented organizations and neglecting cultural groups like Spectrum. He urged all students to speak to their respective senators about the continued funding of Spectrum.

The most drastic cut in the Collegian budget was made in the "Unanticipated Expenses" account. The account was cut from $4,000 to $3,000.

Barry Cohen, Chairman of the Senate's Governmental Affairs Committee, who sponsored the move saw it as a move to save money "wherever we can".

Senator Jim Gold, the ex-Collegian editor-in-chief believed that since the account was meant to meet unanticipated expenses, it was impossible to cut since it was not known what the money would be spent on next year. "You have to take into account the fact that prices will be going up next year," he said.

In addition to this cut the Senate also voted to cut a $500 trip the Collegian Editor-in-Chief, Managing Editor and Business Manager were going to take next semester. They also voted to pay the assistant managing editor a salary which adds up to $480 for 32 weeks of work.

In his speech to the Senate Faculty Senate President David Boothe summarized his reasons against faculty unionization on campus.

"With the unionization of faculty there will become an antipathy between administration and faculty. Now there will always be a confrontation between them," he said.

Boothe stated that he regards the UMass administration as discharging the functions that the faculty have little interests in. He said that in the past most of the administrators had been ex-faculty members at one time.

"Now that collective bargaining will become involved with the intricacies of collective bargaining they be more concerned with management than academics. The new participants in University policy will diffuse and divide the University rather than help build it," he said.

Boothe then asked the Senate whether the University desired the publicity surrounding the Salaries of the highly paid faculty members. "Do we want to publicize the best paid facultypositions in the country? With the fiscal squeeze in Boston at this time, this will definitely erode support in the legislator," he said.

The vote to increase the salaries of WMUA's Program Director and Chief Engineer from $25 to $35 for a 40-week period passed.

A proposal to freeze the funds of WMUA until the problem of its interference on Orchard Hill, by Senator Joe Smith was defeated.

The decision to grant an increase in the Area Government tax from $4.00 to $6.75 came after a long debate about the decentralization of the Senate to give more power.

S.G.A. President Larry Ladd saw it as a necessity since the Student Senate was formed to accommodate a much smaller population than it does now. "Area Governments must serve the needs of the students, because we're too big to do it now. When there were only a 1,000 students here it was easy to know all their needs. Now there are 18,000 students we are becoming more unaware of the needs of the student body. The Centralization of the Student Senate has made us guess at what those needs are," he said.

Estelle Michelon, a member of the Budgets Committee said however that the raise from $4.00 to $6.75 was just another tax increase on students.

This according to Bill Staton, returning Senator said the tax raise really didn't matter since the students rap the benefits of the groups they now pay for.

Trustees Move For More Faculty- Student Input

By BILL DENSMORE

WORCESTER—The UMass Board of Trustees yesterday approved a new governance plan stressing faculty and student input in the decision making process.

The plan, while affirming "the legal authority of the Board (of Trustees) in governing" UMass, outlines "areas of authority and responsibility" for faculty, students, the Chancellor of each campus, and the UMass president.

Under the statement, a time limit is also set for administrative review of actions taken by campus governing bodies before those actions take effect. Multi-campus committees are also formed for budget and long-range planning, to be composed of faculty members, students, and representatives of the president and chancellor.

In other action, the trustees postponed a vote to restore academic credit to campus ROTC programs, and appointed five new professors on the Amherst campus.

Both UMass President Robert Wood and board chairman Joseph P. Healey hailed the document, which Wood praised as "ensuring that major interest groups will participate in the decision-making process of the University."

Healey said the document would "encourage more, rather than less, student participation," but said it would require the "goodwill of everybody" to work.

The plan was drafted by a committee of faculty, students, and administrators from the three UMass campuses (Amherst, Boston, and Worcester) under the chairmanship of Prof. Robert Wellman of the School of Education.

Wellman called the policy "a first big step toward accomplishing Pan-University management." He also said the new document clarifies in some respects issues which proposed faculty unions have refused to come to grips with.

On the ROTC issue, the Trustees committee on Faculty and Educational Policy reported it had decided last Friday to postpone a decision on the re-extension of academic credit to Army and Air Force ROTC (Reserve Officer Training Corp) programs on the Amherst campus.

Credit for the program had originally been withdrawn last spring after the mining of Haiphong Harbor by President Nixon. At a meeting Tuesday night on campus, opponents of ROTC considered a plan to discourage any Trustee vote reinstating credit.

In the appointments, Dr. Harvey B. Scribner, Chancellor of the New York City public schools, was appointed to a full-time professorship in the School of Education with tenure. Harvard Professors Samuel S. Bowles and Herbert M. Gintis were also given tenured positions on the economics faculty, beginning in the fall of 1974.

Also appointed to the Economics Department were Steven A. Resnick and Richard Wolff, both currently teaching at the City College of New York.

All four are Ivy League scholars who interpret economics in a political "radical" mode, rather than more conventional theories.

The appointment of Dr. Scribner to the post of the School of Education comes as observers speculate that the school's dean, Dwight W. Allen may resign within a year because of a feeling that five years is long enough to spend in one post. Allen has been unavailable for comment all week.

Provost Robert W. Gluckstern claims Scribner is "definitely" not interested in an administrative post, though he will teach educational leadership and administration when he comes to this campus in the fall.

Scribner served as Vermont Commissioner of Education before taking the New York City chancellorship. He initiated the first voluntary school busing plan in the nation as superintendent of the Teaneck, N.J. public schools in 1961. He is a native of Maine.

Semple: Nixon Robbing Congress' Thunder

By HUGH OWEN

Robert A. Semple, Jr., a reporter for the New York Times Washington Bureau, said last night why many people feel President Nixon has become the most "powerful leader in the world with the exception of Mao Tse-tung."

According to Semple, Nixon has been able to accomplish this through the decline in Congressional efficiency. Congress is, said Semple, a broken mirror in which the nation cannot recognize its own image.

President Nixon has grasped this flaw in Congress and capitalized upon it, said Semple. "Nixon stated in a recent speech that "Congress represents diverse and scattered interests and that only the President truly represents a full majority," said Semple.

Nixon is trying to strengthen his power by weakening the Congress, said Semple, which is not a unique maneuver to the Presidency.

Nixon's strength, said Semple, is the product of four decades of a momentum of power sporadically flowing to the Presidency. He attributed this flow of power to the past half century of war policy which has prevailed in this country.

According to Semple, Nixon has used his powers unconstitutionally in three ways.

—This foreign policy towards the War in Indochina. This was not a declared war and therefore unconstitutional.

—he has invoked a policy of executive privilege which goes beyond its proper bounds.

—he has impounded 8-14 billion dollars from Congress.

The impoundment of funds from Congress has, said Semple, raised the most serious cries from Congress leader Carl Albert.

Semple places much of the blame for Nixon's actions on Congress itself. He described Congress as a case study in institutional self destruction.

"The seniority system in Congress makes senility respectable. Congress also refuses to abandon or review programs it has created which are failures", continued Semple.

If the Presidents preceeding Nixon have been slowly acquiring more and more power why do we single out Nixon as the scapegoat?

According to Semple there are three reasons.

—what the Presidents before Nixon did that might have been unconstitutional Nixon is doing all at once.

—there is no way, short of impeachment, that we can make Nixon accountable for what he is doing. He no longer has to keep an eye on the polls and is able to do as he pleases.

—his critics are not reassured by his style. He is and never has been open to the press and the public.

There are only two ways for Nixon to become less powerful, said Semple. One, which is truly not feasible, is for Nixon to voluntarily relinquish part of his power. The other, said Semple, is for Congress to undergo some minor reforms which would make it a more efficient body of power.

'Severe Incursions'

Press Attacks Cited

By BRIAN COYNE

Ed Fouhy, producer of the Walter Cronkite CBS Evening News, said yesterday, there have been "several severe incursions" into the freedom of the press by the present administration, but he does not foresee any strict limitations being imposed as do some of his colleagues.

Fouhy, a 1956 graduate of UMass, spoke to students at Pierpont House on television journalism in one of a series of presentations he is giving this week as a guest of Southwest Residential College.

He cited the Caldwell decision by the Supreme Court, whereby a newsman is not exempt from revealing his sources before a Grand Jury investigation, a revision of the criminal code making it a felony to disclose or receive classified documents, and challenges to the licenses of two Florida television stations who have broadcasted stories embarrassing to the administration as threats to the news profession.

"There is an atmosphere of attempted intimidation of the news industry."

Fouhy said that the government and the press were "natural adversaries" under the constitution. This is evidenced by Vice-President Agnew's attack on "instant analyses" of presidential speeches, meaning the government would prefer uncritical television.

Fouhy was CBS bureau chief in Saigon during the Johnson administration and said he found no direct censorship from the government on what could be reported. But he added that the military did find some of controlling the news, though, because they provided the transportation for newsmen. If something was going on they did not want reported, they did not give them access to the area.

The selection process of the news to be aired, Fouhy said, was just about the same as any other media. It is based on the appeal to a national audience.

He maintained that television news is much better today than 10 years ago, even though there are not as many documentaries being made. "There are fewer documentaries, primarily because documentaries don't get mass audiences," Fouhy said. The shift now is toward news magazine programs, such as "60 Minutes" and "First Tuesday."

His major criticism of the news industry is that there is not enough air time. He said the half-hour time slot is generally insufficient. He would prefer an open-ended slot which would allow broadcast time for whatever news that was important.

Fouhy also said news staffs were not large enough or sufficiently funded to permit as much extensive coverage as he would like.

Today at 1 p.m., Fouhy will present a slide show and talk on "China: Nixon, Mao, and Cronkite," in the Pierpont main lounge.

Tonight at 7:30, he will be part of a discussion with Dan Melley, University public affairs director, and faculty from the Mass Communications department about press-government relations. It will be held at Hampden Student Center in Southwest.

New American Movement Symposium

Racism Seen In Tax System

By DENNY MATTEAU

"On going oppression of Black people is not limited to defacto discrimination in the job market and among the petty bourgeoisie, but is intertwined in the tax system.", said Mr. Edward Greer as he spoke in Dickinson Lounge yesterday afternoon.

His lecture, entitled "Taxation and Racism: Big Steel, Little Steel in Gary, Indiana," and which stems from his forthcoming book, is part of a symposium being offered this week by the New American Movement.

According to Mr. Greer, the present property tax system places the bulk of the tax burden on the urban poor. "Seven eights of local government revenue comes from the property tax," he said, "and this tax is not justly proportionate. It is mal-administered, and this maladministration is intrinsic, not fortuitous."

"Industrial facilities are routinely underassessed, sometimes at 50% value, whereas individual homes are often assessed at 80 to 90% of their value. Apartment houses are overassessed. Since the landlords can simply pass tax increases onto their tenants, they are not motivated to protest reassessment," he said.

"Even where there is no actual corruption, the threat of removal, or a slowdown in production, and therefore unemployment, heavily influences re-assessment. It is this threat which makes Black municipal reform in individual locales almost impossible," he said.

Mr. Greer was director of the Office of Program Co-ordination and a member of the Cabinet of Mayor Richard Hatcher in Gary, Indiana during 1968-9. He is currently teaching at Rockefeller University and Wheaton College.

C.C. Board May Get Paid

By CINDY GONET

The Campus Center Board of Governors will vote today on a four-point proposal which, if adopted, will provide the Board of Governors with $1,000 per month in paid positions.

At the present time neither board members or officers are paid.

The proposal, formulated last week by a special committee chaired by board Secretary-Treasurer Bill Worden, consists of four recommendations:

--that the board chairperson, currently Rich Nelson, be paid $200 per month; the vice-chairperson, currently Frank Cotter, be paid $150 per month; and the Secretary-Treasurer, currently Worden, be paid $150 per month.

--that board committee chairpersons be paid $25 per week. There are currently five committees within the Board of Governors.

--that funds used for payment be drawn from unallocated capital which would include a renovation account of $50,000 for the Campus Center and a general expense account.

--the stipulation that no member of the board who is being paid will be able to hold a position in the Campus Center for the duration of his term on the board.

The committee was originally set up by the board on March 3 and consisted of Worden, Jay Denning, a committee chairperson, and Howard Levin, a board member.

Worden said last night that he was "optimistic" about the proposal's chances of passing the board at tonight's meeting.

No Evidence That White House Chief Linked To Watergate

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Senate Watergate investigating committee said Wednesday that "as of this time it has received no evidence of any nature" linking White House chief of staff H.R. Haldeman to political spying.

The two-paragraph statement from the panel's chairman and vice chairman came on day after a Republican member said Haldeman is closely linked to that spying and should resign.

Sens. Sam J. Ervin Jr., D-N.C., and Howard H. Baker, R-Tenn., the committee heads, said they were concerned with news accounts said to have come from committe sources "inferring that Mr. H.R. Haldeman was involved in the break-in and bugging of the Democratic National Committee Headquarters at the Watergate..."

"In the interest of fairness and justice the committee wishes to state publicly that, as of this time, it has received no evidence of any nature linking Mr. Haldeman with any illegal activities in connection with the presidential campaign of 1972," the statement said.

Haldeman was called on to resign Tuesday by Sen. Lowell P. Weicker Jr., R-Conn., one of the three GOP members of the seven-member panel.

He told newsmen that some of those whose involvement in the case is known have said "we just didn't do anything without checking with Mr. Haldeman."

Weicker said Haldeman has to accept over-all responsibility because of his chief-of-staff position.

Earlier he had said Haldeman was fully aware of "the personnel and policies" that lay behind the Watergate bugging.

But he has not directly accused Haldeman of illegal activities.

Weicker's office Wednesday issued a five-word reaction to the new development which read, "I concur with the statement." Aides refused to comment further.

Haldeman's name was reported by sources to have come up during the secret testimony last week of James W. McCord, convicted Watergate burglar.

One source said McCord indicated Haldeman "had to know" of the espionage activity.

There was activity also in federal district court as four convicted Watergate defendants, all caught inside Democratic National Committee headquarters early in the morning of last June 17, went before a grand jury.

Their lawyer said they would tell what they knew of wider political spying but indicated that might not be very much.

Since their trial the four have refused to answer such questions, pleading they lacked immunity from further prosecution.

But chief U.S. District Judge John Sirica granted them such immunity Wednesday and ordered them to talk.

Great Decisions

Mid-East In Limbo

The Great Decisions 1973 panel last night concurred that the present stalemate in the Middle East will continue.

The program, last in this year's series, was held in Webster House main lounge and broadcast over radio station WFCR. Luther Allen, department of Government, UMass, sedved as moderator. The panelists were: Robert Haddad—professor of history and religion, Smith College; N. Gorden Levin—American Studies professor, Amherst College; Leila Meo—professor UMass Department of Government and a native of Jerusalem.

Panelist Haddad said, "The current limbo (in the Middle East) will continue," and gave numerous reasons for that forecast.

There is no combination of Arab forces that can at this time threaten Israel's security, according to Haddad.

Haddad also stated that any negotiated settlement could endanger Israel's nationalistic feeling and fragment opposing forces within Israel.

The impending oil crisis in the West, if no settlement is reached has, Haddad believes, been blown out of proportion by the media.

Agreeing with Haddad on these points, panelist Levin also said that while the U.S. has remained "totally identified" with Israel, the U.S.'s influence in some Arab countries has not been weakened to the extent Egypt, Syria and Libya would like it to."

Levin also said that the Soviet Union does not now support an Egyptian offensive into the Sinai peninsula.

Levin coupled this observation with the statement that the Arab guerrilla movement has been weakened since the late 1960's.

The U.S. would not like to see a negotiated settlement in the Middle East now because their influence over Israel and Arab oil producing states would be weakened.

Ms. Meo cited the continuing use by Israel of its occupied lands.

"There are", Meo said, "altogether in Arab occupied territory over forty eight settlements."

Also, according to Meo, Israel is continuing to build highways, farms and vacation resorts on occupied territory. Ms. Meo said that Israel is now conducting seismographic tests on the occupied territory in order to find oil.

"The Israelis," Meo said, "are willing to use the natural resources of the Arab's lands and therefore are not willing to enter into negotiations except those based on Arab capitulation."

Egypt's Sadat has tried two sources of military aid, Meo said. He asked the Soviet Union for MIG 23 airplanes, an offensive threat, and sounded out western European countries, particularly France and Great Britain, for arms and missle defense systems.

Meo continued with the opinion that Sadat, in order to solidify his position domestically and bring the Middle East question out of the status quo state it is in now will create "a crisis situation, which could get out of hand."

Meo described the Soviet Union's position in the Middle East also. "The Soviet Union," she said, "profits tradewise in Western Europe as well as with the United States. It is concerned with China at this point and has shown itself to be willing to lessen its influence in the Middle East."

Clearly, all the panelists agreed, Egypt is to gain the most from a negotiated settlement. Egypt would like, according to panelist Levin, to negotiate an Israeli pullback from the Suez Canal, even if it is a distance of twenty five miles.

It was the panelists' opinion that the other countries involved are too powerful and stand to gain too much by a continuation of the present stalemate to allow a negotiated settlement at this time.

The program, "The Middle East After the Soviet Withdrawal from Egypt: Can 'No War No Peace' Continue?" concluded with a short question and answer period.

Pierpont: It's A Steal

By BARBARA VOORHEES

Have you ever shoplifted?

If the actions of one dorm's residents are any indication of UMass students actions as a whole the chances are good that your answer would be yes.

77% of the Pierpont residents who were asked this question, answered in the affirmative.

Joyce Epstein, Pierpont resident and member of last semester's P-10 Criminal Justice course, surveyed 35 randomly selected residents as part of her course work.

46% of those surveyed said that they shoplifted regularly while 31% said that they had shoplifted once or twice.

When asked what type of stores they usually shoplifted in, 41% said small, independent stores, and of these 10% specifically cited the Campus Center Store. 77% said that they shoplifted at stores such as Zayres and Bradlees; 48% at department stores such as Jordan Marsh; 11% at supermarkets.

Over half of those who had shoplifted did it spontaneously while 11% planned their steals and 33% did both.

67% said that they shoplifted things which they could afford but were overpriced.

Of those who shoplift regularly, 59% take under $5 worth of items a month; 29% take between $5 and $20; 12% take over $20 worth.

When asked what might deter them from shoplifting, 54% said store detectives; 51% said hidden TV cameras; 37% said that they were deterred by their morals.

Embarrassment and exposure were cited by 66% as the punishments that would deter them from shoplifting while imprisonment was cited by 31%.

51% said that peer group pressure had no influence on whether or not they shoplifted.

One of those surveyed said that he shoplifted "mostly because of outrageous prices--especially books at the Campus Center store to counter its outrageous fee."

A person who had never shoplifted said, "I do believe in ripping off machines (candy, cigarette, etc.) and have lost moral support to such ventures."

Protest Rally

A rally to protest continued aid to South Vietnam is scheduled to be held in front of the Student Union at 1 p.m. today. Picket lines and rallies are being held throughout the U.S.

South Vietnam President Thieu is currently visiting the U.S. and Tuesday ended two days of meetings between Thieu and President Nixon. Nixon has pledged continued U.S. economic assistance and told Thieu, "You can be sure that we will stand with you."

Today's rally will be chaired by Doug Hanson of the Student Mobilization Committee and will include such speakers as SGA President Larry Ladd, Del Raysor of the Greater Boston Peace Action Coalition, and Mary Smith of the Young Socialist Alliance.

House Banking Committee Approves Price Roll-Back

By EDMOND LEBRETON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—Legislation to roll prices, interest rates and rents back to the levels of Jan. 10, the end of Phase 2, was approved last night by the House Banking Committee.

The measure directly challenges President Nixon on the economic controls issue and is headed for a House floor fight, probably about April 17.

After beating down propositions for a limited freeze and an opportunity for Nixon to present another program, the committee ended an 11-hour session by voting 21 to 9, largely along party lines, to send the measure to the House.

Before voting 26 to 12 to set the ceiling on all prices and interest rates, the committee annulled a day-old decision to set the limit on food prices at the level of May 1, 1972 and on other prices and interest at March 16, 1973.

The May 1 food price standard was supported particularly by Republican strategists on the committee who aimed at producing a bill so drastic it would be rejected in the House and Senate. It was proposed by a Democrat, Rep. Frank Annunzio of Illinois, but other Democrats contended it was unrealistic.

Nixon wants only an extension of his discretionary control powers, which expire April 30. Democrats, denouncing his Phase 3 program as a failure, are insisting on writing stiff standards.

Democrats on the committee closed ranks Wednesday and defeated Republicans in a series of parliamentary moves that cleared the way for the sweeping provisions rolling prices to Jan. 10, the day Phase 2 ended.

In other wage-price developments Wednesday:

—The congressional Joint Economic Committee said grocery store food prices will probably rise by 10 per cent this year. Under adverse farm conditions, prices could go higher unless special measures are adopted, the report said.

—The National Association of Home Builders recommended to a Cost of Living Council hearing that mandatory price controls be placed on the lumber industry.

—Presidential assistant Peter M. Flanigan told a House committee that the United States will enter bookings but will not completely remove a $6-billion balance of payments deficit this year.

Before the House Banking Committee action, Secretary of the Treasury George P. Shultz said Congress should simply extend the President's control powers — not to slaughter the law the way the House is trying to do or the Senate is trying to do by imposing amends or changes that did not be workable.

Farm And Meat Products Higher Than One Month Ago

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Consumers are paying more for hamburger meat, frankfurters and eggs than they did a month ago, according to an Associated Press multicitied survey, but farmer prices are down.

The AP checked the prices of a basal and nutritional items on a sample shopping list in a dozen cities on March 1 and calculated them a month later.

The second check came April 1—the first shopping day of the month, the first shopping day of the nationwide meat boycott to lower prices and the first day of an increased for newly imposed price ceilings on beef, veal and pork.

The increases in hamburgers and all-beef frankfurters reflected higher meat prices in general. Frankfurters and eggs in nine of the 12 cities surveyed with increases ranging from about a cent per unit in Seattle to 16 per cent in Minneapolis, N.H. The price of a pound of chuck ground beef went up in seven cities, rising 5 per cent in Seattle and 11 per cent in Atlanta.

Asked about the increase in the price of hamburgers in so many places, a spokesman for the American Meat Institute at Chicago said, "It's pretty much a supply and demand thing."

A spokesman for the National Association of Food Chains said there was "no really significant reason" for the increase.

Egg prices also were up following recent rises in wholesale costs of eggs and poultry. Medium white eggs cost more in eight cities, were down in two and were unchanged in two. The increases ranged from 3 per cent in Providence, R.I., to 21 per cent in Minneapolis.

Butter prices declined in five cities. Decreases ranged from a per cent in Detroit to 7 per cent in Providence.

Most sampled items remained unchanged on the milk which stayed the same in every city checked.

The cities checked covered a wide geographical area, is evenly that of most and results were used. If the checked the was not available, the closest thing to one type of product was checked. The stores surveyed were supermarkets rather than discount operations or small specialty shops.

Albuquerque, N.M., reported the largest number of price rises—six. Salt Lake City, Utah had the fewest—none.

In line with the general rise of living, food prices varied from city to city. Dropping from markets, the type of neighborhood involved and local retailing practices contributed to the variation.

Egg prices on April 1 ranged from a low of 47 cents in Detroit to a high of 61 cents in New York with an average in the dozen cities, higher than 55 cents in Providence and 51 in in Dallas with a 50-cent average, and cheap were 48 cents in Chicago, 50 in Seattle and 51 in New York with an average of about 51.

Senate Approves Ceiling

By JOHN LENGEL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate yesterday approved a tough Democratic package to put a ceiling on the federal budget and to sharply curb the President's powers to impound money appropriated by Congress.

Sen. Sam Ervin's proposal touting amendments was approved 51 to 37 and his $200 billion budget ceiling passed 56 to 31.

The Ervin actions came on amendments to the federal debt-ceiling bill, which probably will be voted on later this week.

At the same time, the House finish the administration will another attempt by voting 215 to 40 to set up a complete new lending program to aid rural electric and phone systems.

The key vote came on an effort by the administration to substitute a measure giving President Nixon more flexibility to manage the money involved. It failed 50 to 101.

The House tacked on to the bill an anti-South Vietnam aid amendment that would bar use of the domestic program to funds outside the United States.

The amendment, sponsored by Rep. John M. Ashbrook, R-Ohio, was approved on a voice vote after House Republican Leader Gerald R. Ford of Michigan termed it "redundant, irrelevant and unnecessary."

Ervin said, however, he wanted to be sure no program money is used to promote rural electricity in North Vietnam.

The legislation would create several new guaranteed loan programs and set up a rural electrification and telephone revolving fund composed of various assets and would require loans to be full extent possible.

The battle stems from Nixon's decision to left a Rural Electrification Administration system of direct loans from his funds of 2 per cent interest.

The Senate's vote on the impoundment amendment came after it defeated two Republican attempts to kill and water them down by 5 to 1 margins.

After the vote Ervin told a news conference he believes he has the votes to override a presidential veto if members "vote in the future as they did today."

And "it also proves Congress is just as serious as the President is about the use of the government to set its financial house in order," Ervin said. The impoundment right was only one of several amendments claimed before the Senate as a bill which normally backs up the declaration of the debt-ceiling which went into effect in February.

"This provides that Congress will retain the power of the purse," Ervin stepped to the Senate in defense of his impoundment amendment.

Republicans said, however, the Senate was voting away the White House's chief weapon to fight inflation without putting anything in its place.

Sen. John Tower, R-Tex., said the bill has the effect of changing "the chief executive to the chief clerk.

"You is a mandate to spend," said Tower, "without regard to efficiency, common sense or economy."

Nixon wanted a ceiling on the budget but no restrictions for now on how to spend or cut federal program money.

Ervin estimated that President Nixon has impounded $12 billion in funds appropriated for highways, hospital buildings, health programs and other projects.

The package included a new debt-ceiling on the budget, $200 million less than the President asked in his budget. This lower figure was adopted on a voice vote after Sen. Edward Muskie, D-Me.

Even the amendments allow the President to make proportionate across the board cuts to get the budget within the ceiling. If these are judged by the comptroller general, Congress will not act.

Second, if the President impounded more program money, he would be required to notify Congress within 60 days. If Congress did not approve within 60 days, the impoundment would be nullified and the spending would take place.

Mississippi Flooding Climbs To Record

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Property damage estimates from the floodwaters of the Mississippi River system swelling to 12-year-record water climbed toward $10 million Wednesday.

More than seven million acres from Illinois to Louisiana were inundated.

Damage was estimated at $10 million in an area of about one million acres flooded between Hannibal, Mo., and Cairo, at the southern tip of Illinois.

Sagging sandbagging crews worked around the clock at Winfield and St. Charles, Mo., upstream from St. Louis, where the waters of the Mississippi and Missouri rivers joined forces.

The crest at St. Louis, expected Friday, was forecast at 40.5 feet, the highest in 170 years.

Unofficial at Winfield were 1,500 acres of corn flooded and about 1,500 persons who live in mobile homes near the rising waters of the Missouri.

Gov. Dennis Walker of Illinois estimated damage to public buildings and roads alone at more than $5 million.

At the Mississippi inched toward crest levels near St. Louis Tuesday without the assist of the Missouri River and at St. Charles it rolled across.

Further downstream, river communities and officials took precautions for high flood levels.

Army engineers in Vicksburg, Miss., calculated that floodwaters in the Mississippi system covered more than seven million acres in seven states. Some of this was flood control acreage, purposely and aide to save the overflow, but was levels have acreage.

Officials said this included more than 100,000 acres of farmland in four western Kentucky counties.

Viet Cong Hold M.I.A. Bodies...

By DENNIS NEELD
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP)—North Vietnam and the Viet Cong said Wednesday torture stories from former American war prisoners threaten to interfere with return of the bodies of prisoners who died in captivity and the search for U.S. servicemen listed as missing.

American officials tended to play down the statement in the belief that the Communists made their statement more "for the record" than as a sincere indication of their plans.

The Communist warning came as the four-hourlong meeting of twelve-party military team charged with accounting for hundreds of missing Americans said with humility of the remains of those killed in action or who died while held prisoners.

"These guys are dead and the Communists have very little leverage in the matter," said a spokesman for the U.S. team.

The North Vietnamese and Viet Cong delegations returned to return they called their "humane treatment" of POWs and protested charges to "distortion" of that policy.

Several former American prisoners have contributed on their return home that they were beaten, tortured and held for months in military confinement under charged tactics that their complaints were corroborated by the U.S. government.

The Jan. 27 Paris peace agreement provides that both sides will help get information on military and civilian personnel listed as missing in action, with the graves of the dead, and return their remains to their countries of origin.

Hanoi has given the United States a list of 16 servicemen it claims died in captivity. The United States has listed 1,168 servicemen who were killed in action in Indochina where bodies have never been recovered and another 1,000 simply as missing.

...South Viets Ask For More U.S. Aid

By RICHARD BLYSTONE
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP)—President Nguyen Van Thieu's list for American economic aid calls for "considerably more" dollars than current U.S. forecasts, informed sources said here Wednesday.

Thieu gave the aid requests to President Nixon during their meeting Tuesday in San Clemente, Calif. But presidential news secretary Ronald Ziegler said the administration will adopt specific aid programs only after consultation with Congress.

Neither the Saigon sources nor Ziegler provided firm figures on how much the South Vietnamese are asking.

American authorities have estimated that economic reconstruction from last year's North Vietnamese offensive alone would cost $500 million. Government sources also have said Saigon eventually hopes to get $1 billion of the $1.5 billion in twelve reconstruction figure that has been widely mentioned but never confirmed.

Regardless of any larger peacetime reconstruction, South Vietnam and Thieu's regime depend heavily on American economic and programs that last year contributed more to get out of the government's income and enabled it to balance its per year deficit.

Officials of the U.S. Agency for International Development (AID) hoped for as much as $500 million for Vietnam economic operations in the fiscal year that begins July 1.

They scaled down their requests to $375 million as foreign aid was also increasing opposition in the U.S. Congress, but economists say the latest figure is about as low as it can go.

The continuing resolution under which South Vietnam receives AID funds for fiscal year provides about $600 million. This is in addition to military aid, for which the Nixon administration has asked $1 billion for the next fiscal year.

Result To Meet Nixon

West Germany Still Loyal

By ANTHONY CHAPPLE
Associated Press Writer

BONN, Germany (AP)—Chancellor Willy Brandt will meet President Nixon in Washington early next month to assure West Germany's continued loyalty to the Western alliance shortly before the Social Union's party that Brandt's Brothers gave a cool hack.

Brandt will assure Nixon "with all urgency" that Germany-American friendship remains unchanged and is supported by the great majority of West Germans, Brandt's Social Democratic party said Wednesday.

The surprise announcement of the summit came shortly after the opposition party charged that Brandt has failed to suppress alleged anti-Americanism in his party.

A Bonn government spokesman said Brandt and Nixon would discuss U.S.-German relations, U.S.-European trade, monetary issues and North Atlantic Treaty Organization questions including forthcoming East-West talks on security and troop reductions in Europe.

A statement issued by Brandt's Social Democratic party said the Brandt-Nixon discussion is taking place at the invitation of the American president.

The date has been officially announced the President's first visit to Bonn. But it is widely expected to be about two weeks after Brandt sees Nixon.

The party statement said that by seeing Nixon soon, Brandt could then go ahead with his East-West peace policy in his summit with Brothers.

Brandt has met Brothers twice in the Soviet Union, in 1971 and 1972, the last and with Nixon in December 1972 at Key Biscayne, Fla.

The announcement of Brandt's trip to Washington came less than a week before the opening of a conference of Brandt's party at which its militant left wing is expected to press demands for a U.S. troop pullout from Germany.

The leftists, who are critical of U.S. policies, also want cancellation of Bonn's payments to help offset the U.S. cost of maintaining the 400,000 troops here.

Brandt's regime is said to fear that such demands will hurt chances in the U.S. Senate who want to unilaterally reduce the American troop level in Germany.

Family Aid Timetable Revised

By JOHN CRISTOL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Nixon administration revised Wednesday on its earlier forced to withdraw nearly $600 million a year in federal welfare funds from states with ineligible or overpaid recipients.

The Department of Health, Education and Welfare announced that four regulations to be published soon will give states a new six-month timetable (beginning next year) to correct errors in the aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) program.

As originally proposed last December, federal penalties applying to both AFDC and adult assistance would have begun this year.

Frank C. Carlucci, HEW undersecretary, said the administration was not retreating on the principle that errors must be reduced, but was conceding that the original timetable "was not realistic."

"One of the real problems in the original proposal," he said, "was that it would have created disincentives for states to maintain good quality control mechanisms."

"Thirty-four states had retained the prestigious Washington law firm of Covington & Burling and threatened to sue to an attempt to block the original proposal.

Under the new regulations, states will be given three six-month budget deadlines beginning next year to reduce errors. Failure to meet a budget would result in a proportionate loss of federal money for that period.

States also will be allowed error rates of 3 per cent for ineligibility cases and 4 per cent for overpayment cases. The original proposal would not have permitted any error tolerance.

"Use of these tolerances is a matter of judgment," he said. "We felt it would be a mistake to set states up for failure by maintaining good quality control mechanisms."

Caution In Cambodia

WASHINGTON (AP)—Secretary of Defense Elliot L. Richardson said Wednesday "the possibility exists that the situation might become dire enough in Cambodia to require a U.S. air supply lift for Phnom Penh."

U.S. officials elsewhere said reports from the U.S. Embassy in Phnom Penh indicate the Cambodian capital is quiet and that an increased allied attack by Communist forces appears to be unlikely.

But these officials balanced the review assessment with a note of caution. That is, they said, the possibility of an unexpected military surge should not be discounted.

Also, they noted April 14 is the Cambodian New Year and that judging by past Communist holiday attacks in South Vietnam it is an opportune time for a big military push.

Richardson said U.S. bombing in Cambodia is aimed at preventing guerrillas from cutting off road and river supply routes into Phnom Penh.

Relief For Your Decay

Is Just A Spray Away

By I. E. LEARY
AP Science Writer

BOSTON (AP)—Dental researchers at Tufts University say they have invented a chemical squirting gun that painlessly takes the place of drilling to fill cavities.

The gun and chemical successfully remove 90 per cent of all tooth decay, along with the need for most drilling, in tests on humans, researchers said.

The chemical, a chlorinated glycine, is known as GK-101. It is used in the form of an alkaline water-based solution to wash away decay. But its inventors are not sure why it works. Reporting on treatment of more than 95 patients, the researchers said Wednesday that their 90 per cent success rate probably will go higher as they develop their technique.

In 77 per cent of the cases treated, they said, patients were free of pain and discomfort. In all cases of pain reported, they added, the patients described it as "slight" or "little."

Speaking before the Tufts University School of Dental Medicine Alumni Association, the researchers said that extensive animal and human testing done by themselves and independent laboratories has shown that GK-101 produces no apparent adverse side effects.

Dr. Joseph H. Kronman, professor of orthodontics, and Dr. Melvin Goldman, associate professor of endodontics, said both their chemical and their applicator compliment one another and neither is as effective in removing tooth decay when used separately.

From the studies done so far, the researchers said, they conclude that GK-101 works by some unknown chemical reaction and is aided by the mechanical action of the applicator.

"While we are still not certain of the exact nature of the action of GK-101," Dr. Goldman said. "Preliminary data indicates that it does degrade protein."

"The pump and the mechanism that is used to direct the stream of the liquid on the tooth's surface has a specific mechanical action," he continued. "That is, the removal of caries decay seems to be a double-barrelled action. It is partly mechanical and partly chemical."

The researcher emphasized that the GK-101 technique does not eliminate all drilling. They said their technique does not work as well if the decay is not well exposed to the chemical spray.

To establish good access and, in some cases, shape a cavity so that it will hold a filling, the researchers said drilling may be necessary.

Dr. Kronman said some dentists have been skeptical about GK-101 since he and his colleague revealed its discovery last year. He said this is because the researchers refused to reveal its composition until now and had little human study to back up their claims.

"This also is a different concept from what has happened before," Dr. Kronman said. "In the past, chemicals were used mostly in the prevention of decay. This is one of the first attempts we know of to use chemicals to remove decay."

"Dentists will accept it," he added, "but dentists are mostly from Missouri—you have to show them."

Dr. Kronman said that an advantage of disclosing the nature of GK-101 and their test results now "is that people in other labs can work on it, check out data and even improve on" the GK-101 method.

Elaborating on their clinical studies, the researchers the GK-101 spray quickly and easily removed most decay from the surface and minor cavities of the teeth.

In larger, more difficult cavities, Dr. Goldman said, the solution was applied for two to three minutes and the decay softened enough for large portions of it to be removed with light pressure from a sharp instrument, usually without pain.

Fla. Blackout Still Mystifies Engineers

MIAMI, Fla. (AP)-Airport guards switched to battery-run metal detectors and dry ice companies reported business booming Wednesday as a 170-mile stretch of the Florida Gold Coast experienced a massive power blackout for the second straight day.

Florida Power & Light Co. officials said Wednesday's blackout apparently resulted from the same as-yet unexplained problem that caused five generator plants to shut themselves down Tuesday.

Asked if there was a possibility of similar failures in the near future, FP&L spokesman Jack Francis said, "I wish I could say no, but I can't. We have no idea what's causing this. Even our engineers are not agreeing on what they think is wrong.

"The demand for electricity has nothing to do with it. We were producing 4,400 megawatts of electricity when we had the failure. We lost 3,300 megawatts immediately. During the political conventions in Miami Beach last summer we produced 6,600 megawatts with no trouble," he said.

Citizens from White City 100 miles north of Miami to Islamorada in the Keys 70 miles to the south opened windows in an attempt to keep cool as temperatures ranged into the 80s. An FP&L spokesman said most customers got their electricity back within two hours Wednesday as compared with six hours on Tuesday.

In Miami's Coconut Grove district, most shops were deserted and workers went to the park.

Lory Snipes, an FP&L spokesman said the nuclear generator at Turkey Point apparently has been shutting down for some unknown reason, and this has caused other generating plants on the Gold Coast to follow suit, also for reasons unknown. Snipes said FP&L was withdrawing the Turkey Point nuclear generator from all service

Belly Dancing Gains Popularity

By ROBERT B. ROBINSON
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP)—Attired in grass skirts and other bare trimmings, more than 1,000 women in the Boston area are belly-dancing their way to a healthier, happier, sexier life.

The women, ranging in age from 8 to 60, are taking a seven-week belly-dancing course that teaches the ancient dancing art, one imitated in some Oriental lands and in some American nightclubs.

Interest is high in the course, which two professional dancers offer four nights a week to a series of one-hour classes.

The women are secretaries, students, mothers, housewives and teachers and they all have their own reasons for taking the course.

Mrs. Frank Fushi, a grandmother, dances with girls in their early 20s, although she is entering her 60s.

"I've been associated with a dance school and I like dancing, so I decided to take the course," Mrs. Fushi said.

She said dancing has done wonders for her. "I feel subtle, less inhibited," she said. "But my husband is very shy about it."

Some of the girls in the class didn't tell their husbands or boyfriends when they started taking courses, according to Gigi Brookfield.

"Most of the people who first came here were ashamed," she said. "They didn't tell their husbands or boyfriends, and everytime the door would open they were afraid it was somebody they knew. But, now they are over that. Everybody seems less inhibited."

Mrs. Brookfield took the course, "because I think it is very sexy. I've tried everything, but I think this is the sexiest. I don't care about the physical conditioning aspect of it. Men like to watch it and it is great fun."

"My husband loves it," Dorothy Hollingsworth said. "Right after the first class, he went out and bought me a record so I could practice at home."

Mrs. Hollingsworth, an accountant for the city of Quincy said she is part of a group that decided to take the course.

"Here are four of us from the same office," she said. "Our boss calls us his harem. Sometimes, when we're all alone, we dance around the office."

The youngest students at the Isis Revan Oriental Academy are 8 years old. They take the belly dancing course because their mothers "are interested in having their child learn a skill and express themselves with their bodies instead of being hung up like they are," Miss Revan said.

Warden Takes Sick Leave

CRANSTON, R.I. (AP)—Francis A. Howard, warden of the state prison where rampaging inmates set fires and shattered windows Monday, has decided to take several weeks off to consider his future, Anthony P. Travisono, state corrections director, said Wednesday.

Travisono took responsibility for a report earlier in the day that Howard had agreed to take "extended sick leave" and then would resign. Howard said he had agreed only to take the sick leave.

The corrections director said he called the office of Gov. Philip Noel Wednesday morning after meeting with Howard for about an hour. Travisono said he told Leo McAloon, executive assistant to the governor that Howard had decided to take some time off and "was in the process of thinking about" resigning.

McAloon said Travisono told him Howard was taking sick leave and would resign some time after that.

Travisono said Donald Taylor, deputy director of corrections, would serve as acting warden during Howard's absence.

Asked if he would retain Howard if the warden wanted to remain in his post after his leave had ended, Travisono said they "would talk about it at that point. I'm not going to guess what I'm going to do."

Travisono said he told Howard to call him within three weeks to tell him what he had decided to do.

Taylor is heading a departmental committee investigating the disturbance which left several guards injured slightly.

Prisoners said the three-hour disruption began when Roland Remillard, a deputy warden of the maximum security section, slapped an inmate. Remillard claimed he was knocked unconscious when he tried to break up a fight between two inmates.

During negotiations with Howard and other corrections officials Monday, the prisoners called for the ouster of Remillard. They criticized Remillard as too strict a disciplinarian and praised Howard as being concerned with their needs.

Howard, 49, was a Massachusetts parole officer when he was appointed warden on March 13, 1970. At a news conference at which he was introduced, he said a warden's major task is to "reconstruct and rehabilitate the offenders." At that time he described himself as a "professional correctional person in the modern school of thought."

Last Nov. 25, Howard and Travisono agreed to eight inmate demands, including one of no reprisals, to gain the freedom of a guard who had been taken hostage by inmates. State law enforcement officials later criticized that pledge and said they would prosecute the prisoners.

WASHINGTON (AP)— Sen. George D. Aiken, R-Vt., goes all out for the birds. For several years, the 80-year-old dean of the Senate has been feeding the pigeons on his way into his office in the morning, and when he heads home at night. He has 60 to 70 customers.

"They even look in the window to see when we're coming out," said Aiken. "They love Spanish peanuts. One little hen likes to sit on my hand and ride. . .

"Birds are just like people. They have their own personalities. And they have their own likes and dislikes."

THE HAGUE, Netherlands (AP) - U.S. Ambassador John William Middenforf goes about his diplomatic duties to the inner sound of music.

He has written four symphonies in the past year, the latest "The Holland Symphony" of four movements to commemorate the 25 years of Queen Juliana's reign. She was crowned Sept. 9, 1948.

"Composing is one of my hobbies," explained the 48-year-old ambassador, "and it seemed like a good idea to dedicate something to the queen for her silver jubilee."

WASHINGTON (AP) - Metropolitan Opera soprano Mary Costa's getting a second chance. In the same league. She was scheduled to perform at a White House state dinner Feb. 1 for British Prime Minister Edward Heath. But she fell and sprained her back and had to cancel out.

Now, well again, Miss Costa has been invited to sing at another state dinner being given next week by President Nixon. The guest is also a visiting prime minister, Lee Kuan Yew of Singapore.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) - Women's place was never in the Jaycees until about 60 of them were admitted to the Philadelphia chapter last summer. The chauvinistic national headquarters of the civic organization ordered the chapter to cease and desist in its feminization program by June 15, or face disenfranchisement.

Dome Living

Photos and copy by Karen.

Some of the alternatives do work, dome living is one. Kitty and Jerry started their geodesic dome home in July of 1971. They spent $1500 for the tools and materials to build it, and $3000 for 24 acres to build it on. From their land has come some of their building materials and 15 percent of the food that they needed to live on last year.

Since then they have worked part time to earn the money to add a $1700 well and 11 more acres of land. They cut wood for heat and burn kerosene for light.

As a result of their efforts, they have a two story dome home with a total floor area of 923 square feet, a quiet place in the woods, and a lot of self satisfaction.

Here Kitty and Jerry crank out one of their frequent Mexican dinners for a board of visiting friends. "You have to have a lot of faith in yourself to pursue this sort of life," says Kitty. "I don't have all that much in myself, but I do have faith in Jerry so it's ok." I bet Jerry would say the same thing.

To provide an opportunity for women of all racial, religious, and cultural backgrounds to maintain social relations on an equal level.
To promote moral and personal integrity.
To strive for cultural and intellectual growth.
To encourage unity without the loss of individuality.
To promote these ideals beyond the confines of our individual groups.
If you think these ideals could mean something to you, why don't you look into our sisterhood.

Quartetto Italiano To Be In Concert

Quartetto Italiano, one of the world's ranking chamber music ensembles, will be featured in concert here Tuesday, April 10, at 8 p.m.

This event is scheduled for Bowker Auditorium and is part of the 1972/73 Fine Arts Council Chamber Music Series.

The Quartetto Italiano has graced the international music scene for more than 20 seasons. Members of the ensemble met just before World War II and the actual formation of the group had to be postponed until the war's conclusion. In a recent review, the "London Times" said: "One might expect that the Quartetto Italian, after 25 years together, might be showing signs of staleness or routine. Not a bit of it. To judge from their performance here, their playing is now at the peak of its technical assurance and commitment. Still young, they bring a youthful tang to their performances and add to it the mature musicianship that comes from long acquaintance with one another and their repertory."

For their UMass debut concert, Quartetto Italiano has selected a program including works of Boccherini, Dvorak, Schubert and Webern. Reserved single tickets to the concert next Tuesday evening, are $1.50 for UMass undergraduates and $3 for others, and may be obtained from the Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall, telephone (413) 545-0202. Remaining tickets will be available at Bowker Auditorium one hour prior to the concert.

UMass Bridge Club

Tournament To Be Held

The UMass Bridge Club will host its First Annual Intercollegiate Invitational Bridge Tournament for Swiss Teams April 13 and 14 in the Campus Center. Schools from New England and New New York State have been invited to send teams. So far Union College, Maine, Amherst College, Smith, and UMass have notified tournament director Mark Bennett of their plans to send one or more teams.

For the next two weeks, UMass individual players, pairs, or teams are invited to attend the regular weekly game. The usual Duplicate Play will be replaced by Swiss Team play during this period and it is expected that the new teams will be forming. All faculty and staff, undergrads and grads are invited to play tonight at 7:30 p.m. in CC 165 and to compete in this first tournament.

New Comet: Spectacular

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) - A newly discovered comet will near the sun next Christmas and could be the most spectacular astrophysical event of the century, according to astronomers.

The meteor Kohoutek, now an almost invisible dot 400 million miles from earth, may be bright enough to be seen in daylight, according to the Smithsonian Astrophysical Observatory.

The comet will be closest to the sun Dec. 27 and will be prominent for six weeks before and after then.

When discovered March 7 by Lubos Kohoutek of the Hamburg Observatory in West Germany, the comet appeared as a very faint object without any tail moving slowly against the background of stars in the constellation Hydra.

The comet will be spectacular because of its size, said Dr. Brian Maraden of the Smithsonian observatory. "An object that large should achieve unusual brightness and produce an exceptional tail."

The comet will remain a faint evening object until January 8, it will go behind the sun. It should increase in brightness until Christmas week, when it passes behind the sun again. Then it will re-emerge and achieve its best visibility in mid-January.

UMass Round-Up

Lecture Series; Easter Sunrise

Prof. Yehuda Kott of Technion Institute of Technology, Israel, will give a three-lecture series at UMass next week, April 9, 11, and 13.

All talks will be in room N of the Public Health Building, at 4:30 p.m.

The lectures: Monday, April 9, "Phages as Indicators of Viral Pollution;" Wednesday, April 11, "Rapid Methods for E. Coli Identification;" and Friday, April 13, "Natural Die-Away of Pathogenic Bacteria and Viruses."

Prof. Kott has done pioneer work in the utilization of phages (viruses which attack bacteria) as indicators of pollution in awantic systems. On leave from Technion Institute, he is visiting oustanding American and European centers of environmental studies. At UMass he is a guest of the environmental sciences department, and he will be available for discussion with faculty members and guests.

The public lecture will be preceded by coffee, at 4:15 p.m.

An Easter sunrise service here is expected to have from 500 to 1,000 participants, according to UMass undergraduates who are planning the event.

Members of student organizations, including the Campus Crusade for Christ and the Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship, are working with area churches for the 6 a.m. service on the east side of the campus pond, across from Merrill Science Center. Supporting churches are the College Church of Northampton and Grace Episcopal Church of Amherst. Rev. Paul MacVittie, pastor of College Church, will give the main talk.

Roy V. Johnson is student steering committee coordinator.

The Easter sunrise service is believed to be the first such student-sponsored event on the UMass campus.

Mrs. Melissa Scott Smith, an anthropology student at UMass, has received a Danforth Fellowship for four years of graduate study.

A UMass senior, Mrs. Smith earned the fellowship in national competition. She is a resident of Harlo Clark Road, Huntington.

If you went to a free school (private or public) in elem. and/or high school, I'd like to talk to you for a project I'm doing.

Inflated Salaries

The Campus Center Board of Governors will vote today on a four-point proposal which, if adopted, will provide the Board of Governors with $1000 per month in paid positions. At the present time, neither board members or officers are paid.

The proposal recommends that:
—the board chairperson be paid $200 per month;
—the vice-chairperson be paid $150 per month;
—the secretary-treasurer be paid $150 per month;
—the five board committee chairpersons be paid $100 per month.

While we feel that these people should receive some sort of salary, we also feel that the recommended amounts far exceed the limits of reasonability, considering the time put into the positions.

Using the Collegian Board of Editors as an example, our highest paid position, the Editor-in-Chief, receives only $160 per month. Our Business Manager and Managing Editor each receive $140 per month, while the remaining editors are paid only $100 per month. Most of our editors work between 20 and 40 hours per week.

The funds being used for payment will be drawn from unallocated capital which would include a renovation account of $50,000 for the Campus Center and a general expense account. The purpose of the Board of Governors is to serve the students, and not drain them financially for the sole purpose of mercenary self interest. It would be in the students' best interest for the Board to accept a salary, yes, but not an inflated one.

The Board of Governors should keep this in mind tonight when they decide whether or not to pay themselves.

Moe, Larry, And Curly

They say that Dr. Benjamin Spock is the nation's leading expert on children. After all, his bestselling Magnum Opus, Baby And Child Care, has been a money-making bonanza, and ranks with such classical American technical treatises as The Sensuous Woman and How To Win Friends And Influence People. No right-thinking American would consider denying the good Doctor the recognition he so rightfully deserves. When it comes to the Wee Folk, he knows where it's at.

Maybe they were right when they said that it takes one to know one. Such an assumption seems to be confirmed by the Doctor's extracurricular activities, particularly those in the political realm. As a Presidential candidate and part-time martyr, Dr. Spock comes on as strong as a six-year-old.

During the last presidential campaign, Dr. Spock considered it his duty to inform the American people of the diabolical conspiracies which imperil our way of life. When it came to exposing conspiracies, Dr. Spock could outdo Rep. John Schmitz, his rightwing counterpart and candidate of the John Birch-dominated American Party. Instead of a Red under every bed and crib, the Doctor undertook to expose the sinister designs of greedy capitalists. These money-hungry conspirators, we were informed, were using television as a medium with which to control our minds and pervert our children. The Doctor boasted that for many years he had been in the forefront of the crusade to "purify" TV.

Among the broadcasts which have received the scorn of Dr. Spock are the very popular re-runs of the Three Stooges. In his opinion, they have been the major contributor to anti-social behavior on the part of children. Apparently, it is his opinion that many children will attempt to emulate Moe Howard, the pseudo-sadistic stooge, and attempt to gouge eyeballs and tear out tonsils. (Sabotoogie!)

I recall my own childhood and the formation of some of my own anti-social attitudes. I used to sneak downstairs in my Doctor Denton's at Seven O'Clock in the morning (an act which I am now physically incapable of performing) in order to watch those "really neat" Warner Bros. Cartoons. One day, when I was six years old, Bugs Bunny and Elmer Fudd got the axe in favor of three odd- looking imbeciles named Moe, Larry, and Curly. After overcoming my initial grief over the snub given Bugs and Elmer, I became a fervent fan of the Stooges. And a permanent fan.

Here were three poor suckers, condemned to be underdogs because of their lack of smarts. They were always being exploited and manipulated (victims of coycumstance!), yet they always managed to keep their good nature. Despite their zany antics and weird noises, I found myself incapable of foresaking them.

But many parents, mine included, became dismayed as their children began making wolf-calls early in the morning (WOOB—WOOB—WOOB—WOOB—WOOB), or doing circular gyrations on the floor. This type of behavior seemed, to them, to be highly anti-social. What would the neighbors thing? (Their kids were probably doing it too, NYUK, NYUK!).

Many concerned parents and assorted Carrie Nation's and Dr. Spock's have banded together to pressure stations into cancelling the Stooges. Fortunately, their efforts have been in vain, in most civilized metropolitan areas. The Stooges still prevail, thanks to the courageous resistance on the part of many TV stations, such as WSBK Channel 38 in Boston. American children, generation after generation, will be able to groove on put-on insanity. And I must mention the therapeutic value that the Stooges can have for the post adolescent. Comic relief from the tensions of life is available to all at Four O'Clock on TV Channel 38. Without such therapy, it is doubtful that this newspaper would be published. Many of the Collegian's most important staffers (and editors) are patients of Dr. Howard, Dr. Fine, and Dr. Howard. (WOOB—WOOB—WOOB—WOOB—WOOB—WOOB . . .)

Nixon Is A Phony

Richard Milhouse Nixon. He has talked conservative during his entire political career. But in reality, Nixon has lied to us all. In reality, Dick the prick has done everything he possibly can to destroy the United States of America and merge us into a one-world socialist dictatorship under the auspices of the notoriously pro-Communist United Nations.

To prove my point, one only need look at the facts:

1) He has usurped the powers granted exclusively to the Congress by the Constitution by issuing executive orders which have the force of Federal Law thirty days after publication in the Federal Register. Two such examples are as follows: A) Executive Order 11490 which establishes the Office of Emergency Preparedness which is supposed to control the nation under martial law in case of national emergencies. Two problems arise here. The first is that it doesn't define a national emergency and the second is that it clearly violates the tenth amendment. B.) Executive Order 11647 which creates ten Federal Regions out of the fifty sovereign states. These regions will be run by various government agencies under the Executive Department. These people will not be responsible to the American voter. In fact, they are responsible to only Nixon. They are designed primarily to dissolve states, counties and cities to bring all aspects of government under the control of the Federal Government.

2) Nixon has publicly stated that he is a Keynesian. This is saying that he believes in the economic principles of liberal "fag" John Maynard Keynes. These principles include the vast bureaucracy, the abolition of any standard with which to back the nation's currency, printing of paper money to pay for a deficit budget and more and more government control over the economic system. To elaborate on this point, let me just state that liberal economist John Kenneth Galbraith of Harvard has called Mr. Nixon a liberal.

3) He has pushed for the following program which will call for more government control over every aspect of our lives: A.) The Occupational Health and Safety Acts which has created a maze of "safety" and "health" standards with whatever is left of the free enterprise system will be run by Federal bureaucrats. It selectively chooses its victims whom the Federal bureaucrats will try to put out of Business. B.) He has pushed to increase the Welfare roles by endorsing "ecology" and "OSHA" programs which leave many people unemployed and will, thus, increase the welfare rolls. C.) The expansion of day-care centers which will, under the name of allowing "liberated" women to work, extend government control over the education of children at the earliest possible age. This is consistent with the practices used in Soviet Russia and Red China. D.) Gun control, which is a direct violation of the second amendment of the Constitution.

These are just a few examples of what Nixon is doing to try and collectivise us all in preparation for the planned merger with the rest of the world into a one-world socialist dictatorship under the auspices of the United Nations.

The reason for Nixon's conservatism is that he must wear a mask in order to carry out his plans because he would be impeached if his true intentions were widely known.

Where and how Nixon gets his support and his bureaucracy will be shown in next week's editorial. If anyone is interested and wants to go further than I can in this column, read these two books: Nixon: The Man Behind The Mask and Nixon's Palace Guard. Both of these books are by Gary Allen, the author of None Dare Call It Conspiracy. These three books should give any person the insight with which to know the character of a ruthlessly ambitious person, desiring to be King of the World for life, Richard Milhous Nixon.

Do Not Read This

By STEVE FERBER

Hold it right there. Stop reading this. Now!! Read some news, read some sports, maybe take in the cartoons, but don't read this editorial!

Ah, the power of denial. In its irritating way, denial is a powerful tool. It's annoying to be told not to do something. For years you've heard it from authoritarian figures: "No, Tommy, you can't go out and play," of "No TV tonight, Billy, that'll have to wait."

Human beings derive pleasure from probing into that which is forbidden. Call it curiosity or call it human nature, people seek the thrill of finding out what they're not supposed to.

Psychological studies support the notion of increased desirability of a forbidden act. Asked to rate the desirability of common events such as chewing gum, attending a sports spectacle or watching a television show, subjects worked with a scale running from 1 to 10. Later, each subject received communication forbidding the subjects from partaking in the previously rated acts. Next a re-rating took place. As was highly suspected, numerically higher ratings were given to those acts which were denied.

One can appreciate society's concern for its people (i.e. there are laws against suicide!) but have not the lawmakers overstepped their bounds?

Perhaps we should be grateful to our legislators. After all, they have managed to keep the thrill alive. What would it have been like to see the movie 'Deep Throat' in New York City if it hadn't been brought before the courts and later declared unfit to view? What better publicity has ever served a producer with a new-born play than the label "banned in Boston"?

It appears that legislators work against themselves. While desperately trying to fight the so-called 'evils' in society, they unintentionally end up promoting them.

The intent underlying these laws is clear: to prevent the corruption of the minds of Americans. As virtuous a notion as this may be, the present restrictions placed upon individuals not only fail to prevent corruption, they foster it.

While applicable in many cases, it is unfeasible to carry the notion of denial too far. Take murder laws for example. These are constraints imposed upon the individual by society. Carrying through our hypothesis, the laws against murder make the act of murder more desirable. Therefore we should remove these laws from the books.

Obviously a distinction need be made as to the crime(s) involved. Surely our society could not function with the repeal of laws against homocide or property theft. Sought here is the abolishment of those laws which infringe upon a person's right to do unto himself as he or she so desires.

Legislators should use some foresight, combine it with a perception of human nature and put two and two together—to get four, not three. Not only are these laws failing in their role as deterrents, they are going further, nurturing the very opposite of the laws' intent. Legislators and judges should wise up and leave well enough alone.

Minuteman Mentor Coaxes Home Talent

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY

The individual letters, that when put together spell out the name of UMass baseball coach Dick Bergquist are important ones to others outside UMass as well as to the members of the UMass community. As well as a loving husband to one and father of two, Bergquist is civically orientated, playing an active role in Amherst Little League and the Amherst Hockey Association, two leagues in which his sons are active participants.

Bergquist has been with the UMass baseball program for fourteen years. In 1959, two years after graduating from UMass he took over the reigns of the Junior Varsity baseball squad. After seven years with the JVs he was elevated to varsity coach in 1966. Now he is in his seventh year as varsity coach. It seems that seven year periods have been the rule for Bergquist in his UMass coaching career. Will something special (maybe to do with the Omaha Trail) be in store for Bergquist and his UMass baseball team in this, his seventh year as Varsity Coach. Hopefully the Athletic Department will be hit with an unexpected bill to transport the baseball squad to the midwest for the prestigious College World Series in Omaha.

Being the modest individual that he is, it was hard to get information from Bergquist as to his athletic career as a UMass student. He did admit to being a double letter winner, in baseball and football, which is an admirable accomplishment in its own right.

As a person, Bergquist can be best described as a "really good shit". He's a quiet sort of a guy. Being the charismatic man that he is, he has recruited many a high school baseball player to this University, which is quite a task, seeing as their is very little that UMass has to offer a prospective athlete in monetary and other benefits.

He treats reporters especially well.

With the confidence that Bergquist has about him, this could be a year that the Minutemen reach the end of the Omaha Trail in one piece once again. (It would be the third trip in six years for UMass baseball).

Pitching Figures To Dominate For Diamond 9

By ROY LYONS

A squad that's missing only three players from last season the New England diamond Saturday against Yale, and coach Dick Bergquist expects it to be the start of a successful campaign.

Agreeing with the team co-captain, Eddie McMahon, who spoke earlier in the day at the Varsity M luncheon, Bergquist said the team attitude is one of "quiet optimism".

But underneath the stock answer is something much more telling. "They're tired of coming in second," Bergquist said. And that, indeed, has been the story in recent years. Two years ago Harvard nosed them out as the best team in New England, and, last year, Connecticut topped them in the Yankee Conference race. Both times it cost the Minutemen a ticket to the College World Series, and that's a story that's getting a little old. On paper, it seems it could be different this year.

To begin with, the team returned last week with a fine 5-4 record against the stiffest competition in the nation. They entered Southern California's Riverside Tournament as a "mystery" team, but that didn't last long. Wins over Stanford and Vanderbilt and a near-miss against Arizona State earned them a new label – the "surprise" team.

Junior Steve Newell, batted .385 in the tournament, good enought to earn him a berth on the all-tourney team. Bergquist is counting on Newell to continue his hot batting in the cooler New England weather, and he should get plenty of help. Seniors Mark Palau and Dan Kelly and sophomores Pete Backstrom, Mike Flanagan, and Ron Beaurivage should also provide plenty of scoring punch. McMahon should also wield a hot bat, and he and Backstom provide a lot of speed at the top of the order.

The biggest problem in the hitting department could be a "technical" one. The team's overloaded with lefthanded batters and this could be a problem. Bergquist said he'd juggle the line-up against southpaws if necessary, but emphasized that was a last-ditch plan. He said he thinks his lefties can hit against any pitcher if they're agressive enough and concentrate on making contact at the plate.

The pitching features a trio of starters, a pair of short relievers and a couple of swing men. Flanagan is a fireballing southpaw as well as an outfielder and junior John Olsen and senior Tom White (the other co-captain) round out the corps of starters. Chip Baye and Craig Allegrezza can start or hurl in longer relief stints, and Eric Levine and Steve Merrill are slated for "fireman" work.

Tom White

The biggest question mark to be answered is the rise and fall of Dan Esposito. After a sensational year as a soph, Espo slumped dismally last season and he'd love to prove that last year was a fluke. If he does, he'll probably hit more four-baggers than anyone else.

Three players are nursing minor injuries, but all hope to be ready by Saturday. Allegrezza is having arm trouble, McMahon is hampered by a shoulder injury, and Flanagan has a bruised leg. If Flanagan's leg come around, he may get the starting nod Saturday.

Yale did not have an impressive spring trip down South (1-6), but their pitching was tough, so they could give the Minutemen a real battle. (Their pitching staff gave up a total of only four runs in losses to Southern powerhouses Clemson and Georgia Tech).

Bergquist mentioned four teams that he expects to be the toughest four UMass. In the conference, Maine, UConn, and New Hampshire are all strong. UNH sports a surprisingly good 8-1 spring-trip record. UConn lost little through graduation, and Maine, nothing at all. It adds up to a real dog-fight for the Yankee Conference title. Harvard is a perennial power among the ivies, and Bergquist expects another strong aggregation is gathered down on the Charles.

Come what may, the team will have to beat them all if they want to represent the area in the College World Series in Tulsa. After a couple years of second fiddle, they really won't be satisfied with anything less.

Right now the weatherman may say no, but hopefully come Saturday things will be a bit drier as the Minutemen open their season up north at Earl Lorden Field hosting Yale University. It may be 405 feet to center field but that's a mild swat for a few of Dick Bergquist's sultans. A lot has been said about the pitching, but the Minutemen are just as proud statistically the other 60 feet (from the pitching mound to the plate). They can rifle 'em.

Kathy Lawson Attracts ITA

By EARLE BARROLL

If you thought Julius Erving was a super-super attracting the pros and the $$$$$ when he was only a junior, check this latest inquest from the newest professional money machine, ITA (translated: International Track Association).

The object for this latest raid is a 19-year-old sophomore at UMass who just happens to belong in the same class of track athletes as such luminaries as Jim Ryun, Kip Keino, Bob Seagran and Lee Evans.

Would you sign a lucrative pro contract? Would she? "I'm telling him (Otis Cross of ITA) NO when he calls back," demanded Kathy Lawson yesterday before practice. "I'm only 19 and considered a baby in track circles. I'll eventually sign. In ten years all of track will be professional. But for now I'm getting myself ready for the '76 Olympics."

Kathy Lawson is a world class athlete. She's been to Australia, Europe. You name it, she's been there. Currently she's the number two ranked women's sprinter in the country behind 25 year old Iris Davis having lost to Ms. Davis in both the AAU's and the U.S.-U.S.S.R. meet last month.

If you watched the Summer Olympics you probably didn't hear her name. The reason: "Knees," says her coach Ken O'Brien. "She has a chronic agrivation (a la UCLA's Bill Walton) and from all the heats at the Olympic trials her knees flared up.

Currently Kathy is not only training but competing with the UMass track team. Women's Lib? "No, I don't believe in that stuff," she insists. "The main reason is that there's no women's track team around and if there was there wouldn't be the competition that I would need to keep sharp and improve on my times.

"It has nothing to do with male or female," concurs O'Brien. "We talked it over and felt that the best competition for her around here would be on the jayvee level where her time (23 seconds for the 200) would be competitive with the opposition she'd be facing."

Kathy's next major stop is the Nationals on May 11th at which time the winner gets a free trip to Russia, the losers anywhere's from Munich, Germany to Toronto. She also expects to tour Europe again this summer as she has the past two. And within that time she hopes to elevate herself to the number one sprinter in the country.

"Iris just nipped me at the indoors," she explained. "I'm still young and coming. And she knows it."

Harriers Outlook Keys On This Saturday

By WALT POWERS

It won't take coach Ken O'Brien very long to find out the strength of this years spring track team. This Saturday, at one o'clock, Northeastern and Boston University will invade Lewellyn Derby track, and the battle between these three New England powers could produce the highlight meet of the year.

The outdoor trackmen are coming off of a season that saw them finish fifth in New England and win their second Yankee conference title in a row. From that team, they've lost such key performers as Paul Metallo, Jimmy Graves, and Ed Shaughnessy to graduation. You won't hear O'Brien using this as an excuse, though. "Overall, I'd say that this years team is stronger, depthwise, in every area," said O'Brien.

"We have a plurality of good performers in nearly every event, and fourteen of our top twenty scorers last year are returning. Our success will depend on the ability of some of our good performers to break out of the pack and become great ones. I'm hoping this will happen, and if it does, we'll have an outstanding season."

There are twenty events on the spring track program, as opposed thirteen on the winter, and unlike the winter team, this season's spring team is capable of scoring in all of them.

Depth in the throwing events will come from sophomore Carmen Letizia, who'll throw the shot put, discus, and javelin. UMass is blessed with one of the finest discus throwers in New England in Dennis Boisvert, and sophomore Ed McAleney is a conference class shotputter who'll double in the discus. Gil Sylvia, the school record holder in the javelin, is back, but an aggravating shoulder injury makes him a question mark. Fortunately for O'Brien, Jim Queeney, a steadily improving thrower from Dick MacPhersons football squad, will devote his full time to track.

Tom Gilliams, Pete Ryan, Kelikeni Banda, Mike Geroghty, and Bobby Adamson will give the Minutemen one of the deepest long and triple-jump squads in New England. Mark Hughes and John Osborne are consistent high jumpers, but senior Don McKeough is the team's only experienced pole vaulter.

Weaknesses in the throwing and jumping events should be made up for in the sprin

Captain Tony Pendleton, running in as many as four events, will backbone the sprinters. He'll be running with his brother Marshall in the 100', and Dennis Busa and Tom Beland, two New England class 220' men, join him in the 220', and 440 relay team. O'Brien is hoping for an outstanding season from at least one of his hurdlers. A talented crop of freshmen led by Curt Stegerwald will push veterans Jim Hennessey and John Mounger in these events.

It'll be Steve Levine in the 440. He'll be pushed hard by Peter Trow, last year's conference runnerup. If John Maloney's ankle is healed, he'll be the teams leading half miler. If not, it'll be either Devin Croft, Peter Byron, or Weeden Wetmore.

Six members of a cross country team that finished second in New England, along with Paul Catano and Tom Wilson, will give the minutemen a knockout punch in the distance events.

So there you have it: an abundance of depth, and strength in every area. Add to this mixture a dash of tradition and the home track advantage in four out of five home meets, and you've got the recipe for another successful season.

Tennis Outlook-Best Ever

By SINCLAIR FOSTER

Stronger and deeper than ever, the 1973 version of UMass tennis will be hoping to hand Coach Steve Kosakowski his most successful season ever, in this his 25th year of coaching.

Back from their stay in the sun the Minutemen are sure to continue their Yankee Conference supremacy. Then there are the New Englands, and the post-season tournament towards which the netmen will be pointing.

Coach Kosakowski told with pleasure of this year's prospects. "Everyone is back, and that means we'll have loads of experience. I'm expecting another strong season."

In compiling a 9-2 mark, last year's netmen dropped two away matches, one to MIT, the other to UConn. Thus an undefeated season (at least up north) could be in the making. And that's what Captain Steve Ferber is planning on.

"With the strength that this team has," commented Ferber, "there is no way we should lose any matches. Then of course there are the Conferences. Truthfully I think a sweep is possible, but of course we're playing them at UConn, and they're relatively powerful this year. The season finale is at Williams, the New England Championship. Personally, before Florida that is, I was shooting for fourth or fifth overall. Now I think we can go higher. We played against Williams two weeks ago and fought them pretty even. I'm looking at the top three spots in New England. I just hope everyone else is too."

Besides MIT and UConn, Amherst and Springfield (both away matches) will provide the stiffest competition on the 12-match northern schedule.

Down in Florida there were six Minutemen for six positions. Coach Kosakowski won't have it that easy now that he's back at UMass. Eight players are expecting to be among the starting six. Two people are going to be saying "bye now" to the season.

Back from last year is Ferber, now a senior. Juniors returning are Fred Braley and Mark Brass, while four sophomores will enter their second year of competition in the persons of Ted Donahue, Mike Philipp, Robert Schpeiser and Gary Ney. A newcomer, Don Douglas, (a junior) rounds out the top eight.

Against Williams two weeks ago Kosakowski was joking about the eight for six situation. Said Kosakowski, "I'm just glad I'm not the coach."

Closing fast behind the top men are five eager athletes, all of whom are likely to see action against the weaker opponents on the schedule (i.e. AIC). They are Tom Fentin, Sven Ingard, (his brother plays number two or three for Harvard) Jack Stanton, (all three are freshmen), Bob Serios, (a sophomore) and Steve Donahue (a junior).

With what limited play there was down in Florida, most of the players feel that their games did pick up. Now though they'll have to wait 11 days before meeting Amherst on the 12th. The match drought might temper everyone's psych, but at least it'll keep UMass from getting overtennised . . .

UMass tennis coach of 25 years Steve Kosakowski thinks this season's group is his best ever. His squad will try to improve upon its 9-2 record of ayear ago.

Kosakowski-He Tries To Visualize

By STEVE FERBER

Steven Kosakowski is the UMass tennis coach. He is also blind. Which leads to the obvious question, how does a blind man coach tennis?

"Everyone makes the game of tennis out to be so complicated," explained Kosakowski. "You've got to use deductive reasoning. It's really common sense if you've played long enough. I visualize in my mind most everything that's happening, I ask other players, I try to stress the fundamentals."

Complimenting his technical approach to the game, Kosakowski spoke of player-coach relationships. "I've always tried to keep close relationships. I want to be accepted and be a part. I want to screw around and raise hell, give my players a feeling that they can dish it out to me like I do to them. That's how I coach. I feel I get more from my kids that way. It just isn't my nature to be an authoritarian ruler or dictator."

Has his lack of sight changed his personality, made him more dependent? "No I don't think its changed me at all," stated the coach entering his 25th year of coaching. "I swear just as much as I used to, only now I can't see who I'm swearing at."

But with blindness come changes. "You miss things even though you can visualize them," said Kosakowski. "I'd be a fool to think I didn't miss seeing things. But I enjoy every day, and just hope there is another one."

Kosakowski has a strong attachment to the sport he now coaches. He states quite frankly, "One of the things that keeps me going is tennis." But while enjoying his coaching duties Kosakowski misses playing the game. Also missed is hockey. After all, he used to coach the sport at UMass, before glaucoma set in.

"I always looked forward to the change in season, interacting with the different personalities."

With his close contact to the sports, Kosakowski had much to say about the differences between hockey and tennis players. "As a competitor," spoke Kosakowski, "I would never put a tennis player down or below a hockey player. In fact I'd probably rate him more highly. Tennis is tougher in many ways. There is no place to hide. With five or six kids you can make one or two mistakes. But in tennis you can't make the mistakes and get away from it. You've got no place to hide."

As Kosakowski rounds out a quarter-century of coaching tennis, he finds his teams increasingly more powerful. The difference is balance. "There used to be the time when I'd have to do it with four or five guys," said UMass' Mr. Tennis, "but the last few years I've had six players to work with. There has been nothing outstanding, just some consistent and solid depth."

Kosakowski can still see out of his left eye. His loss of sight has been a slow and steady decline but soon will come the time when sight will leave completely. Will it be traumatic?

"I really don't know," said the coach. "It's been such a slow ordeal that I guess I'd be prepared, but it's hard to tell. I remember well when my mother lost her sight. It was a beautiful day outside and she said that she couldn't see a thing. It was just a complete blackout. We didn't know just what to do or how to react. I was 19 years old at the time and I think it hurt me more than it did my mother."

Recently Kosakowski tred on Floridian soil with six of his tennis players. Commented one of the netmen making the trip; "He takes care of himself. I think it's really something that he left his familiar environment to go on a trip like that. That takes a great deal of courage, and I admire the man for that. He's done anything but crawl up inside a shell and disappear. I just hope he'll maintain his positive outlook on life and keep coaching for years to come."

A couple of thousand fans lined the sides of the upper Boyden Field to watch the Gorillas lose a heartbreaker to Brown University for the New England title last year (pictured here). The same two clubs should vie for the honor this season. The march to Brown starts this afternoon at 3 o'clock with UConn at home.

A Massacre At Massapeukwa

By MARTY KELLEY

Fort Massapequa, Somewhere in the North Country—To this day the British Soldier the world over has to live with the legend. The French and Indian War wasn't decided because of it, but was lauded for it. And they blamed the travesty on the original savages who played this game with cradle and ball called lacrosse. For the game will be remembered at Massapequa. But you had to be there to appreciate it.

The sun was high that Sunday afternoon as the British soldiers wondered why they fired musket rounds in these here Colonies. Not only were the Redcoats hated by the Colonials but as well the first Americans, the natives of the North Country, found the intruders not at all to their liking. And so it came to pass. The hour of the Red Coat was near at hand. The hand of death . . .

It was likened to a traveling art show . . . A band of Gypsies journeying over the nearest rise to entertain the local township. For on this day the British soldiers who missed the sip of London tea were to be put at leisure by the local savages. For there in full view to all in front of the gates of Massapequa, the local savages engaged in lacrosse, the first born American sport. The foreigners were abhored at the sight. They became captivated.

Armed with wooden cradle and covered with but a skimpy piece of loincloth to cover their genitals, the nearly nude athletes all but hypnotized the British warriors as they continued their coarse play as the afternoon trudged on.

With no need for alarm, the Fort became mesmerized and suddenly part of the tragedy that was to develop. Soon to a man King George's men put down their muskets and folded arms and even sat down outside the perimeter of the imaginary field. At last the entire garrison became fan and the gates of Massapequa opened wide which in a precarious manner seemed to invite all of the picturesque North Country within its grasp. Little did the Redcoats know . . .

The game became heated. A Redskin was skulled . . . Beaten to death in a brutal display of athlete vs. athlete. The squaws with their long skirts watched not at all in horror, they knew the sacrifice was well worth it . . . The best was yet to come.

It must have been the middle of third period. But no historian lived to tell. Suddenly like engendered from the wildness of the North Country itself, a shriek . . . And your heart stood still . . . It was a signal . . . The sign of death was christened on the gate of Massapequa . . . The time was now.

It was the ultimate of debauchery . . . For that matter buchery. Out of the loincloth came the tomahawk and the Redcoat caught in dreams of tea and the homeland, became easy prey for the deprived savages. The Redcoats were butchered to a man . . . The Massacre of Massapequa . . . The beginning of American lacrosse.

I guess you had to be there . . .

20 Gals Return For Softball

By DIANE BISSONNETTE

Women's Varsity softball will be getting underway on April 17, when the Minutewomen will come against Bridgewater State in a double-header.

As of yet, no definite team has been selected although an expected 15-20 girls will be returning from last year's team.

Vicki Pagel is expected to be a starting pitcher and first basemen. Another starting possibility is Jennifer Edminster. According to Coach Carole Ogelsby, Edminster, also a varsity basketball player, is a "potentially fine defensive player."

Trying out for the catcher's position are Barbara Doucet and Pat Bradley.

In all, there are 40 girls trying out for 20 positions with much competition for starting spots.

Coach Ogelsby, new to UMass, coached a winning softball team at Purdue University last year, which she brought to the College World Series, an invitational tournament, in Omaha, Nebraska.

Keene State, a team that the Minutewomen defeated last season, won it's first game of that tournament. According to Coach Ogelsby, this seems to say that, "we could have a team that will be competitive with other teams in the tournament last year."

With it's stiffest competition coming from Springfield, Keene State and Worcester State, the Minutewomen should be able to see their strength after meeting these teams.

Although the women's softball team had a winning season last year, they are hoping to improve their 4-3 record by defeating Springfield (who UMass lost 2 games to) and Worcester State.

Golf- A Search For Talent

By STEVE CROWE

The Trevinos, Palmers, Nicklauses are not recruited on this campus. They are discovered.

In the fall, 50 golf candidates swarm the course Hickory Ridge golf course to try to make the UMass golf team; twelve make it.

Along the way, many players who shoot in the low 80's discover that they are not quite good enough. The twelve lowest averages this past fall were all under 80; seven were 77 or below.

There is no recruiting program for the golf team, and no scholarships offered. Sometimes a high school coach will call Coach Fan Gaudette and ask him to help a kid get into school, but most players are found at the try-outs.

Gaudette has most of his squad back this year and looks to. Last year the team finished 4th in the Yankee Conference and 9th in New England. Only one player was lost through graduation.

Sophomore Joe Artman will play No. 1 position. Three golfers will fight for the No. 2 spot; Gary Russell (Sr), Jim Duane (Jr) and David Grygiel (sophomore).

Rounding out the first seven are seior captain Frank Agestino, Pat Sharkey, and Steve Crimmin. Blain Sampson, Bill Rubin and Tim Kurty are reserves.

Usually, three alternates are carried, but this year two swing shifters who weren't around for fall practice, also made it, Richard Olson and John Lasek. Gaudette feels that either of these two may work their way into the starting line-up before the season is over.

"Olson is a "super player from Dedham," according to Gaudette. Last year, he made it to the state finals before bowing out.

This year's schedule features five home matches, all open to the public free of charge.

"Hickory Ridge has excellent conditions and the makings of a championship golf course," said Gaudette of his team's home course.

The opening match is on April 11 against Wesleyan.

Gorillas After Eastern Crown

By HOWIE BLOOM

While the rugby, tennis and baseball teams were soaking up the sun in various vacation spots in the country, the lacrosse squad was getting down to the serious business of solving their coach's problems. You've heard about them -- so many good players cried out for lacrosse that Garber was seeing double trying to figure out where to play everybody. Well, if it fit any purpose at all, the lacrosse team's spring trip served as aspirin for Garber's personnel headache.

Returning from last year's 12 and 4, USILA tourney team will be co-captains and starting midfielders, Hirsch Seidman and Dwight Blomquist. Both were All-Americans in 1972. Jack Moran, a transfer, from Nassau Community College, will fill the third spot on the first line. If the starting trio has to come out for a breather, the Gorillas will lose little firepower with the likes of Joe DiRiso, Gene Hardiman, and Bruce Sibson running on second midfield. All three are good all-around players, and because they are so young (Senior, sophomore and sophomore, respectively) they should get better as the season progresses. And for good measure, the Gorillas have Bob Cormley, Steve Crimmin, and John Martin to work as a third midfield.

What does a coach do after he's lost his entire starting attack from the previous season, and the trio who comprised that line also just happened to have been the team's three top scorers, too? After the customary good cry, he starts looking for replacements, correct? Replacements coming up, in the persons of Fred Michels, Pete Connolly, and Frank Garahan. Garahan is a transfer, and Connolly (9 goals, 9 assists) and Michels (10 goals, 2 assists) were the number 4 and 5 attackmen last season. Their biggest problem is, perhaps, that they haven't played together much. Against Cortland State last Saturday, however, it didn't look as though the trio's lack of familiarity with one another was bothering them much, as the line produced five of the team's ten goals. Backing up the starting three will be Andy Scheffer, a former high school All-American, Jim Curran, and Rich McManus.

Anytime those hundreds of UMass lacrosse fans get riled up enough to begin chanting "defense, defense," the Gorillas will have plenty of personnel at that position to answer their call. Returning from last season will be Bill Blaustein, and All-New England pick as a freshman, and the team's best defenseman. Rich Lally, a transfer from Massapequa, N.Y., and John McCarthy, who is much improved, round out the starting defensive corps. Joining them in making life a little bit easier for the Gorilla's goalie will be Russ Incorvia, Tom Bock, and Bill Will.

And who will be the benefactor of the fine defense? Non other than John Rutledge, a Junior College All-American last season at Nassau Community College. Rutledge had to beat out two men, Jim Haddad and Bob Durlan, to win the starting no. In the season opener at Cortland, the Senior netminder looked sharp making 23 saves in the narrow loss.

The Gorillas, ranked 17th in the country and 2nd in New England, preseason, play probably the toughest schedule of any of the varsity sports teams at the University. Their opponents in their first game, Cortland, was placed 11th nationaily before the season began. Add to them Connecticut, a threat to UMass' Northeast division supremacy, Adelphi, loaded and nationally-ranked, Brown, the top team in New England, Dartmouth, and Fairleigh Dickinson, and there's bound to be a lot of excitement in sotre for UMass lacrosse groupies in 1973.

J.V. Chimps Ready For A Banner Year

By MIKE ELLIOTT

JV Lacrosse Coach Russ Kidd is optimistic about the up-coming season which will open at home against a strong North Country Community College team on April 6th. Last year's team finished at the .500 mark due to goalie problems. However, this season the team is strong in the goal with three netminders. "We have three fine goalies in Bobby Durland, Bill Kind, and Howie Terben," said Coach Kidd. "Durland, who will be our starting goalie, has been working with the varsity."

The rest of the team looks strong also. "This year's team is well balanced," remarked Kidd. "We have a good defense, attack and midfield experience. We have several sophomores and few juniors and most of the starting squad has been working with the varsity."

Basically the team had only one week of hard work before vacation but Coach Kidd feels his team should be ready to face a schedule of the "toughest teams in New England". This season the JV's will play ten games and 4 scrimmages including games against Harvard, Brown, and the Hartford and Fairfield varsities.

This spring's squad is big. "We have about fifty guys on the team and there are extra guys at almost every position." Among the defensemen are: Ben Pearson, Fred Mallof, Frank McKoy, and Dave Boudreau. The attack will have Kevin Corrigan, Rich McManus, and Bob Lorensen. The midfield is also strong with Kevin Sheehan, Larry Knowlton, and Andy Howard and veterans Jack Dacey, Marty Kelley, and Dave Collela.

Kidd has had help in preparing his team from Ron Dumont and Bill Sinclair both former UMass players. One of the reasons Kidd is optimistic about the team is that everyone has prepared well for the season. Kidd said that it has been "a satisfactory experience working with these guys. All of them want to play and we'll give them the opportunity. Everyone has worked hard."

Crew Team Sets Sights on DV

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

Six weeks of college remain, but that is not the only reason that members of the UMass crew team are smiling. The Dad Vail championships, which runs May 12-13 and climaxes the rowing season for UMass, is nearing and the months of preparation will be replaced by weekly regattas.

It all began in September, as the rowers practiced for eight weeks in the fall. Some rowed in the Head of the Charles which combined all levels of rowing. Then, there were two weeks of indoor training at Boston university (Jan. 7-20) to be followed by weightlifting and running, and the arrival of the ergometer.

The ergometer, which cost about $2,000, was purchased recently with funds obtained from a raffle held by the team. This has greatly helped the UMass crew program, as the machine simulates rowing, recording what a man does in the rowing situation. Set up indoors, the ergometer is patterned after a shell. Instead of pushing water, a shortened oar is attached to weights and gauges which mark down the strokes per minute.

Coach Mike Vespoli noted, "The ergometer has made a signifcant contribution to their endurance and the weightlifting has helped the strength."

The long winter was climaxed with double sessions at Princeton. Each crew member paid approximately $50 each for the trip. The hard work and early start on the water (3 weeks earlier than last year) paid off, as the Minutemen shells put on strong performances in scrimmages against the Princeton heavyweights and lightweights and the Rutgers heavyweights. Though they understroked the New Jersey rivals, they kept up with them. Since both schools are considered to be in a better class and UMass rowed in the morning and again in the evening, it was a strong showing.

Coach Vespoli said optimistically, "Based on the amount of work and the eagerness of the oarsmen, I would consider this year's varsity as the fastest ever."

Last year the crew team facing a very tough schedule won only one of four regattas before the Dad Vail. In the Vail, which features eight men and a coxswain shells, UMass finished sixth. The JV-8 was third in its race and the frosh ran a strong second. So, the goal of winning the Dad Vail is not impossible.

Another tough schedule awaits the oarsmen this year, with regattas including Penn (last year's national champ), BU (which is in a higher class) and Trinity. This Saturday the crew team opens its season against Worcester Polytechnical Institute at home. This will be the first time in two years, that a school has ventured to compete against UMass on the Connecticut River course (The finish line is right before the Calvin Coolidge bridge which leads into Northampton from Hadley).

Crew Schedule

April 7	vs	W.P.I.	Home (Conn. R.)
14	vs	Trinity and Ithaca	Hartford, Conn.
21	vs	Boston University	Boston
28	vs	Yale and Penn	New Haven, Conn.
May 5		Callow Cup (NE college championship)	Worcester
12 & 13		Dad Vail Championship	Philadelphia

They're on their way to the Dad Vail. Not really though. That's in six weeks and is considered to be the highlight of the season for the oarsmen. A long season it is. You have to be humble to love it. From September to May the season just never ends. It's pretty hard to imagine varsity practice before breakfast. But it's true. Whether on the Charles or the Connecticut Rivers, the crew team continues to pull for recognition. And this just might be the spring that they get it. They've got the horses this time around. And don't forget. They've also got the ergometer.

Yes, We Have English Football They Call it An Art-Rugby

By STEVE FERRARA

On the cover of the March 5 issue of Sports Illustrated is a picture of what rugby can be: a player's face and shirt-front are covered with blood and he seems to be only semi-conscious from a crack on the head.

Sports Illustrated calls rugby "The Bloody Game."

Rugby is actually English football; it's a mixture of soccer, American football and even a little basketball. It was invented unwittingly by a soccer player who became so frustrated during a game that he picked up the ball and ran into the goal with it.

That happened at the Rugby School in England in 1823.

There are fifteen men on a side and all the players are eligible to run with the ball. Play usually begins with a scrum, where eight forwards battle with their feet to get the ball to the backfield. The scrum is the predecessor of the football line.

The seven backs may run with or kick the ball, but they may pass the ball only backwards. A "try" is scored in the same manner as a touchdown, with an extra-point kick after. A player may also drop-kick the ball through the goal posts while running with it.

Blocking to protect the ball-carrier is illegal and there is more tackling than in American football. The players wear almost no protective padding.

Joe O'Meara said "The public has the wrong idea about the game. It's a rough sport, but it's not violence for violence's sake. You have to keep a cool temper. The point is, when the game's over, you're going to be out drinking with the guys on the other team. That's one of the nicest things about it. You get knocked around a little bit, but it's always in the right spirit."

No one at UMass knows who Joe O'Meara is, but he knows what UMass rugby is all about.

Rugby is hard hitting and violence, but it's also a lot of fun. You're out there to win a game by physically beating your opponent. But after the game you join those same guys for a lot of beer drinking and the traditional singing of obscene songs.

The games themselves are informal affairs: there's an official referee to keep order in the game, but the mood on the field is more like the fun of a Sunday afternoon choose-up football game.

While the action on the field is sometimes savage, the action on the sidelines is a bit more relaxing. Friends and girlfriends of the players watch from picnic blankets or while crowded around the keg of beer supplied by the home team.

UMass rugby is a lot of hard work, but it's also a lot of fun. And that's what sports is all about.

It doesn't look too bloody here but give the game some time, a few collisions, and it gets a bit gory. But it's all part of the sport experience and you only have the English to thank for this fast growing college sport. What does it take to play Rugby? A few prayers. There isn't a chapel down by the sewage plant adjacent to the baseball field. But there is a rugby field. And this Sunday at noon Holy Cross and UMass will be going at it.

Gals Hit The Water

By JOHN BOCK

The 1973 Spring sports season will see the entry of a new women's sport. No, that's a falsehood because Women's Crew is netierh new or a newcomer to the Sports scene at UMass.

The fact of the matter is that Women's crew has been with the university for about a year now but only recently has been recognized as an official Women's Sport by the Administration.

This year the women have been budgeted and have the use of most of the men's team equipment. At the helm this year for the women is Kurt Betchick, a former UMass rower himself, and he has Co-Captains Mary Ann Fernandez (Sr.) and Missy Mayer (Jr.) to provide leadership both on and off shore.

About fifteen women are on the team this year but "We'd really like a lot more to come out," said Co-Captain Missy Mayer. "So many girls think that you have to be really big or a phys. ed major to come out when there aren't really any physical requirements at all, except that the girl be a strong swimmer."

As it is there is only one girl on the team that is a phys. ed major and the girls themselves don't look any bigger or stronger than most. They do work out on the Universal Gym in WoPE, in addition to the work in the tank, but the weights they lift are mostly for toning and endurance.

Why would someone be willing to get up at six o'clock to go out on the Connecticut River and row? In fact, why would they want to go and row at all?

"It's really the best time to row, because you get to see a part of the world that is different from the rest of the day," said Hannah Proctor, a veteran in single sculls, but a newcomer to the eight-woman boat. "It's a different sport, a refreshing one because it's you against one of the elements, instead of you against someone else."

"In rowing you aren't unique-you have to pull together and yet have to think about your own peculiarities of towing at the same time. Like, if you are mad you row really well." And this was from-Debbie Kirchmer, a sophomore and one of the girls who has been with crew since it was started.

"The thing is that we're a crew; we have to work together, we can't miss practice or we let each other down," was the offering by Hannah in response to why they work so hard at a sport that isn't exactly watched by teeming multitudes.

Maybe they should have been rowing a long time ago.

Women's Tennis Revived

By STEVE FERBER

Unusual in its duality of seasonal play, the women's tennis squad gets under way for part two of their 1972-73 schedule, that being the Spring season.

Playing six matches in the Fall, the Minutewomen faced the best and worst of New England's women tennis. They ended at 4-2, with a loss to Smith among the defeats. And guess who they're facing in their Spring opener? Time for a bit of revenge.

The squad Coach Sally Ogilvie has to work with is young and talented. Five freshmen among the top 10 are joined by two sophomores and three juniors.

Returning (from fall play) underclassmen are Ann Foley, Diane Greene, Ronnie Sanders, Muffy Trafton and Karen Wesley, all in the class of '76. 1975 ers are Betty Londergon and Karen Tsyapatsaris, while Patty Heslam, Beth Perkins and Mary Young are the eldest members of the existing squad.

New faces include Karen Dexter, Galen Good, Mary Jo Grasso and Susan White. Coach Ogilvie has yet to get a good look at the four newcomings and a week's time will have to pass before the juggling that The big push in women's tennis is towards the fall season. The spring schedule, which includes five (working on a sixth) matches, might be among the last April ideals for the girls.

And smart they are. The advantages of a fall season far outnumber its spring counterpart. For one the rainmakers aren't as busy come September and for two, most tennis players have been working all summer and are in near top form when the school year begins.

Impressive in fall play were Foley, Greene and Sanders, all of whom played in the top singles positions. In doubles Heslam and Trafton got the highest marks as their undefeated fall season indicates that Ms. Ogilvie will have at least one powerful doubles team with which to work.

MEANWHILE, UP ON THE CEILING . . .

The Fool Replies

To The Editor:

As the April Fool of the Collegian's April Fool edition, and as a person scared shitless of institutionalized and other kinds of racism, I feel it is in order to respond to yesterday's letter from the Afro-Am Department about our satire.

Laughing at our differences, whether those differences are ethnic, religious, or racist, is, I believe, one of our greatest weapons against bigotry and prejudice. When those differences are ignored, either by satirists or by "blind justice", when those differences are shoved under the rug under the guise of "respect" and it is really fear, it is indicative of a society which is refusing to face up to its problems.

I feel that it is better to laugh at sterotypes when those sterotypes are motivated out of a genuine respect of difference, than to silently believe that those stereotypes separate "Them" from "Us".

As it was, we did not single out blacks for satire. A careful perusal shows that the following people and groups were viciously slandered in a spirit of humanism:

Joel Stoneham, the Dining Commons, Polish people, John Lederle, the Campus Police and David Johnston (twice), the Managing Editor's sister, the Boston Globe, the 15-year old Perfect Master, Maharishi Mahesh Yogi, the Greek Orthodox Church, the Roman Catholic Church (twice), Black Muslims, the New York Stock Exchange (twice), Don Kent, Jews (twice), Robert Wood, Franklyn Phillips, Eleanor McGovern, Matt Tackeff, Bob Estelle, Marty Kelley (twice), the Editor-in-Chief, Greeks, the School of Education and other schools and colleges, Walt Disney, Larry Ladd (three times), the new library, socialists, John Birchers, Americans, the faculty efforts at unionization (twice), the officers of the Faculty Senate, the drinking age, Chancellor Bromery, fraternities, the New Africa House, white racists, the Student Senate, the Vice-Chancellors, the 3 Stooges, the Athletic Department (many times), Nixon, Italians.....ad infinitum.

I am especially proud of our satires of myself (the April Fool), my dormitory, the "Avengers", and that bastion of democracy himself, Rep. Louis Morini.

To be sure, there were people and groups and nationalities we missed. (Too late, my next door neighbor suggested we attack heterosexuals and Teddy Kennedy).

But wait 'til next year.

Meat And The Consumer

To The Editor:

A few weeks ago Mrs. Virginia Knauer, Director of the President's Committee on Consumer Interest suggested that the consumer fight rising meat prices by eating more organ meats, study newspaper ads for best buys, use a shopping list and other harmless tactics as a means of reducing the cost of food. While these ideas are good in themselves—home economists have advocated these same ideas for years without success—it is thrown up as a smoke screen to the real problems. I knew we had a real problem when Mr. Nixon said that boycotts are not "an effective use of what we call people power." What he was saying is that the boycott could become an established American practice like the peace marches of the 60's. Just as the peace demonstrations put pressure on him to pull out of Vietnam and sue for peace, the implications of mass consumer activism must be distasteful to the President indeed.

While it is true that the Russian wheat deal and poor weather last year helped to drive up the cost of meat, it is time that the American consumer realize that, first, a significant percentage of the consumer's food dollar is spent by super food conglomerates on advertising, merchandising, promotions and packaging. In short, they are using your money to whet your appetite, through advertising for artificially flavored and colored, puffy fruity-whirles for breakfast. It is no coincidence that some of the fattest salaries in the food industry are paid to advertising and marketing experts.

The second problem is the fact that Americans consume more high quality protein in the form of meat, as they consume more of just about everything else, per capita than anyone else in the world. How long can this country continue to use land to grow crops for animal consumption? The present boycott may indeed reduce or at least stabilize the cost of meat but it doesn't face up to the inevitable consequences of what the meat shortage signifies. The fact, pure and simple, is that Americans are going to have to reduce their consumption of high quality protein in the form of meat. Put another way, Americans are going tohave to have to learn to live without meat every day. There simply will not be enough to go around.

What really disturbs me is the fact that the present meat boycott is essentially a white-middle class phenomenon. High meat prices has always been the rule with the 25 million poor and elderly in our society. The same people who would not take to the streets to protest the death and destruction of the peoples of Indochina are now suddenly and spontaneously taking to the streets and using the same tactics of the people that only recently they called long-haired-hippy-pinko-freaks. While the crimes of injustice to a people 10,000 miles away could not reach their moral consciousness, a 30¢ rise in the cost of a pound of hamburger at the local supermarket did.

I hope that the power of the consumer boycott will catch the public's imagination and consumer groups will develop at both the local and national level. But I also hope that the boycott will awaken in the conscience of the American people that they are meat eaters only because most of the world goes to bed hungry each night.

That Mess

To The Editor:

Once again I'd like to thank the Collegian for showing an interest in the paper recycling project that is happening on campus. The project is presently "stalemated", so we need all the publicity and interest we can get to keep things alive while technical difficulties are ironed out.

Concerning the article in Tuesday's edition, I would like to comment on a few statements which may have been misleading. First, unfortunately, we have not been able to expand the program to the dorm areas as yet. This is due to the shortage of dumpsters, as explained by the article. Some dorms have been able to carry out small, individual projects because of the presence of dumpsters which have been in their areas since the beginning of the project. We have not been able to supply any extra dumpsters yet because of the fact that the Physical Plant has had to utilize some previously "recycle" ones for other purposes. As stated before, the project dumpsters were only on loan until more permanent ones could be provided—either by the Physical Plant or by the CEQ. It seems as if no one has any money.

Second, Eva Schiffer of the Sierra Club did not, contrary to the article, "found CEQ", but she is the person most instrumental in initiating the paper program. From her original impetus, CEQ merely assumed the functional responsibilities since 1) members of our organization did plan to organize some kind of paper recycling anyway and 2) it is more feasible and practical to work through an RSO group in a case such as this. In essence both the CEQ and Eva (or Mary Barnard who is taking care of things while Eva is on sabbatical) work together in a coordinated effort to develop and expand this program.

Third, I do hope that the 'graphic photo' accompanying the article conveyed and meant to convey the frustration, problems and set-backs we have been experiencing constantly with this project—and was not meant as a reflection of disorganization or apathy on the part of those who have been working so hard to maintain this project's status. I hopw it also was able to convey the absolute necessity of continuous responsibility and cooperation of those people who start a recycling project. That picture illustrates why recycling in the dorms wasn't begun first—volunteer help tends to be highly irregular and sporatic. Consequently that mess. However, we have shown this year that organization and persistance is most definitely possible in the dorms—and interest runs high. More dorms will be included in the program as soon as possible.

Don't Fence Us Out

To The Editor:

We the undersigned have been strong supporters of the athletic fee; that is, until Tuesday night April 3rd. On this night we were evicted from WoPE gymnasium at 8:30 p.m.—after only one half-hour of recreation. Boyden gymnasium was also closed at this hour.

We were told that both facilities would be closed for the duration of the semester. There were at least 25 students evicted, each of whom has paid his athletic fee. Considering the amount these students have paid in their athletic fees, it seems the facilities could be kept open for the next six weeks. How much can the bill for the lights and one attendant be?

Poor Taste

To The Editor:

We were both very disturbed by the letter in Monday's Collegian "commemorating" Adolf Hitler. April Fool's joke or not, the fact that someone chose to treat the subject of genocide lightly shows very poor taste. It is a very tragic memory for many people and therefore not appropriate for sarcasm.

Laughing At Ourselves

To The Editor:

It is indeed unfortunate that some members of the Department of Afro-American Studies found remarks about Chancellor Bromery and the take over of Mills House that were made by the Collegian Staff (April Fool's Issue) to be a better example of poor taste rather than humorous satire as a time-honored journalistic tool.

In a letter to the editor, some people expressed their belief that the Collegian's satiric attempts "....can only encourage the open expression of racism..."

I am dismayed that anybody was offended by what the Collegian Staff considered "harmless joshing" in the form of satire. Satire to me represents one of our last and most effective means of combatting racism. We have already seen that the abolition of racism cannot be legislated and that the change must take place in the minds of men. I am not saying that racism is humorous. It is a serious matter for blacks as well as whites. But the only way to eradicate it is to get it out into the open: to see whites' stereotypes as well as blacks'; to see how absurd we really are. I believe that if we can laugh at our prejudices, they cease to be harmful. I don't mean just the prejudices concerning blacks and whites, but between all races and ethnic groups. What I have said here is the main premise operating behind such celebrated programs as 'All in the Family' and 'Sanford and Son'.

The "ramifications of its (the Collegian's) satire" was not to approve of the "scribbling (of) racial epithets" on campus buildings nor to be "an attack of the most cowardly kind". It was a well-intended attempt (but seemingly unsuccessful) to show the absurdities inherent in whites as well as blacks concerning prejudice and racism, issues that will eventually have to be dealt with whether we find them humorous or not.

Measles Climbs

BOSTON (AP) - State health officials report a sharp increase of measles in Massachusetts, 1,826 cases reported so far this year compared with 61 reported by the same time last year.

"I guess you could call it an epidemic," said Dr. George Waterman, assistant director of the Massachusetts Communicable Disease Division.

Officials say Quincy is the hardest hit community, with 196 cases reported in the city's 32 schools. Health authorities planned to distribute measles vaccines to 2,600 students at Quincy High School and Quincy Vocational Technical School this week.

The vaccine has already been administered this year in a number of communities, including Marlboro, Lowell, Somerville, Everett, Tewksbury and Reading.

5-College Slavic Festival To Be Held

The Five College International Folk Dance Club and the UMass Slavic Languages Department are jointly sponsoring a Slavic Festival for the weekend of April 7 and 8. There will be a series of workshops on Polish Folk Dance and Balkan Folk Songs. The Polish Folk Dance workshops will be on Saturday, April 7 at 1:30 and 7:30, the Folk Song Workshops will be on Sunday, April 8 at 1:00 and 4:00. All workshops will be at the UMass Student Union Commonwealth Room. In addition, there will be a concert by the Five College Folk Dancers and Ajde New Haven Ensemble Sunday evening at 8:15 in Buckley Recital Hall at Amherst College. Folk songs and dances from Poland, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, Bulgaria, Romania, and Hungary will be performed. A $.50 donation is requested for the performance at Buckley, all other events are free.

The Five College Folk Dancers is an offshoot of the Five College International Folk Dance Club, which meets weekly at Smith College on Fridays. The performance group consists of students from Amherst College, Smith College, UMass., Amherst Regional High, Northhampton High, Amherst Junior High, and from schools in Greenfield and Hanover, New Hampshire. The group is in its second year of existence. By contrast, Ajde New Haven Folk Ensemble has been in existence for ten years. It has its own orchestra and its own singing group, which makes it a truly integrated folk ensemble. This will be Ajde's second appearance at Buckley Recital Hall, its first appearance last year was a resounding success.

The Polish Folk Dance workshop will be conducted by Dr. Morley Leyton from Temple University in Philadelphia. An internationally recognized authority on and teacher of Polish dance, during a year's stay in Poland in 1970, Dr. Leyton worked with Mazowsze, the Polish State Song and Dance Company. His performance group, the Janosik Dancers, has won critical acclaim throughout the Middle Atlantic States and has been awarded many prizes in festivals in Poland. Dr. Leyton and his group were invited to perform at one of the Inaugural Balls in Washington D.C., having been selected by the Smithsonian Institution. Dr. Leyton will be presenting both national and regional dances.

The Balkan Singing workshops will be led by Miss Anabel Graetz of Laduvane, a folk group from Boston which specializes in folk songs from Eastern Europe. Miss Graetz will introduce the basic technique of the traditional styles of singing in the Balkans in her first workshop; in her second, she will present some more advanced techiques as well as review what she has previously taught.

my goal or purpose to express an opinion on the merits of any particular landlord's policy nor the advisability of any particular course of conduct. It is the purpose of this column to try to simply state the most common laws that may apply to the relationship - and their ramifications. Each person must choose his own course of conduct. Some people have special circumstances that may not be covered here. The following are general rules for terminating a tenancy.

Lease Tenancies

1. Leases have specific terms during which they apply. Nonpayment of rent during the lease term is a breach by the tenant and the tenant may then become liable for the entire remaining rent of the term. Security deposits may not properly be used for "last month's rent" except if the landlord agrees in writing. Remember, if you are not in breach, the landlord must return your security deposit plus legal interest (less damages caused by you) within 30 days or be liable for double the amount withheld.

Leaving?

2. If you want to leave your tenancy you should explore subleasing or assigning for the duration of your absence. Many tenants sublease or assign their tenancies every year. However, those who fare the best do so with consent of their landlord. With such consent the substantial effect is the replacement of one tenant with another so that the parties who leave are released and the new tenant assumes full responsibility to the landlord. Properly done, there should be an adjustment on security deposit if there is any damage. If the landlord is required to bear any costs (preparing documents, making inspections, advertising or the like) they are costs that may properly be passed on to the tenant.

3. In virtually every case, I have found that in the past direct negotiation with most of Amherst's landlords will result in less anguish, loss of the least amount of money (if any), and a more reasonable solution than most alternatives.

4. If you do abandon a lease, these things may happen: (a.) suit for the entire balance of the rent; (b.) Loss of Security Deposit; (c.) Suit for damages not otherwise covered; (d.) In some cases, parents may be involved which does not mean they will necessarily be liable; and (e.) Hassles over property left behind which again does not mean that the landlord has the right to "ransom" your belongings, which initially, at least, he does not.

Abandon Lease

5. If you abandon your leashold the landlord may indeed sue, but there is also some obligation to try to rerent the premises. Regardless of the reason you leave, you should make sure (by mail or directly) that the landlord knows you have left for good and that he has the keys. Otherwise, you will be liable for rent until the landlord finds out you have left or gets a court order to enter your apartment (at your expense). Also, until he legally knows that you are gone the apartment can't possibly be rerented. If it is rerented your obligations substantially cease. The cost of rerenting (advertising, etc.) is also your liability, however.

6. If you have problems with your particular situation, try to work them out or get help as early as possible, so that you have a reasonable chance of finding new tenants.

Finally, it is worth remembering that technical defects in the premises that have been long-suffered will probably not serve as valid grounds for mid-Spring lease breaking. The usual rule is that a complaint must be made when the defect occurs, then if the situation is not corrected the tenant may promptly leave, but if the tenant stays the right to leave may be lost.

No Lease Tenancies (Tenancies at Will)

If your tenancy is an oral tenancy or simply one where you pay monthly rent without any written lease, it is called a "tenancy at will." A tenancy at will may be terminated by either party giving written notice to the other party that the tenancy is terminated. The termination is effective at the end of the next full rent period after such notice is given. For instance, notice given on April 5 where rent is due on the first of each month is effective on the last day of May. No reason need be given for terminating, but the notice must be given within the time restrictions. The tenant is liable for rent for the period until the notice is effective at the end of the next full rent period. If you are a "tenant at will" and you expect to leave the end of May, now is the time to give your notice to your landlord. As in other cases, security deposits should not be used as rent without the landlord's approval and failure of the landlord to return a security deposit is cause for a doubling penalty.

Please do not wait until the last minute to adjust tenancy problems.

Beaver II

BOSTON (AP) - A private group called Boston Tea Party Ship, Inc., plans to moor a replica of the British ship Beaver II in Fort Point Channel between Boston and South Boston this year as part of the Revolutionary War Bicentennial celebration.

The Beaver II was one of three ships raided by colonists on Dec. 16, 1773, in the Boston Tea Party.

By SYDNEY OMARR

"I feel that the ideat man of the zodiac is Leo. The Leo man I know is ambitious, intelligent, optimistic and has an abundance of pride. Besides being strong and masculine, he is sensitive, warm, romantic, charming and sentimental. So, girls, if you want a man you can depend on and a man that will take great pride in you and what you stand for—find yourself a Lion and live happily ever after in his kingdom."— Lisa van de Wall, Burbank, Calif.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Expand horizons. Your financial situation will be reinforced in positive manner. Two friends, one jovial and the other martial, figure prominently. Social activity accelerates. Be aware of potential.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Tests, challenges are featured. One who pulls strings of authority is concerned with what you do, how you do it. Be thorough. Show that you care. Be forthright. Don't seek excuses. Put yourself on the firing line. You will be rewarded.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Be ready for change, travel, variety. Virgo person is in picture. Secret is exposed. Key is to be analytical. Piece together bits of information for complete story. Long-distance communication tends to be garbled.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Friends and money could make an odd mixture. Know it and don't start something you can't finish. Family member deserves diplomatic treatment. If kind, you get results. Otherwise, you create opposition.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): If perceptive, you are able to discern truth. Pisces individual plays key role. Mate, partner demands attention. You are drawn between wanting to co-operate and a need to be alone. Know that being alone is not the same as being lonely.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You are able to verify some beliefs. Older person proves valuable ally. Accept help when it is offered. Don't permit pride to block progress. Accent is on communicating, outlining personal priorities.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Emotions, passions, impulses are all in picture. Nothing now is apt to happen halfway. It is all or nothing, with accent on love, children, basic creative drives. Aries person figures prominently. You could be involved in heated debate.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Avoid affixing signature to any document until all aspects are clarified. Take nothing for granted. Leo is likely to be in picture. Be independent, selective. But also realize that patience now is a prime requisite.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Finish rather than begin projects. Find better ways of distribution, communication. Avoid rushing, especially in traffic. Relatives tend now to be argumentative. Conserve emotional energy.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You may be spending too much for too many of the wrong things. Key now is to evaluate, analyze and reinforce sense of direction. Check with Sagittarian. Much aid can be obtained "behind the scenes."

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Be thorough. Perceive meanings contained "between the lines." Friend may be overly optimistic. Realize it is easy for others to take risks—at your expense. Heed one who has experience and maturity.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You have more prestige than might be imagined. Persons in high places are "high" on you. Know it and act like you know it. Where there was inactivity, a staleness, there now can be vibrancy and creative action.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are a natural investigator, a writer and a reporter. You are dynamic, attractive to opposite sex and you have a tendency to be comineering. You draw to you many born under Gemini and Virgo. June should be an especially significant month for you in 1973.

Red Sox Head Home For Season Opener

WINTER HAVE, Fla. (AP) - The Boston Red Sox, confident of winning the American League pennant, broke training camp and headed for home Wednesday after heavy rains and gusting winds forced cancellation of their final exhibition game.

The Red Sox didn't have to wait long before calling off the scheduled game with the Montreal Expos.

The area around Winter Haven was inundated. Just a 50-foot walk outside left a person looking like an Olympic swimmer, fully clothed.

Some players ran in the rain. Others worked out in a rooftop batting cage. However, everyone welcomed the rest, awaiting Wednesday night's flight to Boston.

"It's time to go home," Manager Eddie Kasko said. "We're ready to start the season. I just hope the weather up north will be kind. We want to get off to a good start."

General Manager Dick O'Connell, Player Personnel Director Hayward Sullivan and Kasko remained close to the phones.

The Red Sox had a problem they hoped to resolve.

Kasko had 28 players on the roster, three over the limit allowed on opening day Friday when the Red Sox host the New York Yankees.

Relief pitcher Don Newhauser had an option left and figured to be among the roster casualties, going to Pawtucket of the International League.

Veterans Sonny Siebert and Bill Lee also were considered expendable from the 13-man pitching staff. However, the Red Sox were having difficulty in getting waivers from other clubs in order to swing some sort of a deal.

It was learned that one club had refused to waive, even though it didn't want the player involved - either Siebert or Lee. The club has been friendly with the Red Sox over the years, but the American League's new designated-hitter rule has put all teams in a bind.

Teams in the league are overstocked with players. High-salaried players not particularly needed figure to be major casualties.

Many will be looking for work when the season opens.

"The new agreement with the Players Association certainly isn't helping some of the guys," one baseball spokesman said. "We used to be able to put a player on waivers three times before losing him. Now we can do it only twice.

"It hurts a team trying to make deals, but it hurts a player even more. The player finds himself out of work, and the way things are going jobs are tough to find in our league."

The Red Sox will work out at Fenway Park, weather permitting, at 1 p.m. Thursday, and they hope to get on with the job at hand-shooting for the East Division title which they lost by only half a game last year to Detroit.

Fencers Win

By MIKE ELLIOTT

Over the vacation UMass was represented by its fencers in three major competitions.

On March 24, Sue Uhl and Sue Pannel fenced in the women's division of the Under - 19 Sectional Qualifying event with Uhl placing second and Pannel, third. Bob Woolner took the first place medal in the men's division. All three fencers will be among the 200 entries competing in the North Atlantic Under - 19 Sectionals on April 28, at Berkshire Community College.

On March 31, Bob Woolner, fencing in the Class A division of the Brass City Tournament, placed third out of 35 entries.

On April 1, Sue Uhl and Sue Pannel competed in the Hudson - Berkshire Foil Championship for women and Bernie Desautels fenced in the men's event. Both Uhl and Pannel fenced well, placing fourth and fifth respectively with Uhl qualifying for the Nationals in Tucson, Arizona. Bernie Desautels, fencing in a tough competition, lost 2 bouts in the finals to finish third. However, Desautels qualified for the Nationals for the second year in a row.

Rozelle For Sudden Death

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP) - Commissioner Pete Rozelle said Wednesday he favors a sudden death playoff over a two-point conversion if any changes are made in National Football League rules.

"I think sudden death would provide more impact and bring more excitement to the game," Rozelle said at a news conference at the NFL winter meetings.

The sudden death proposal is one of several which Rozelle said would be reviewed Thursday.

"We've had some concern about the sudden death from the television networks," the commissioner said, "but they say they will go along with it." Rozelle said judgment calls on the part of officials might be eliminated by the adoption of a rule requiring pass receivers to have only one foot in bounds if they have possession before stepping out, and also of the double-touch rule. The latter would permit a pass receiver to double-touch a ball on a reception without requiring a defender to touch it in between.

The double-touch proposal also would permit two eligible receivers to touch the ball on a play without a defender touching it.

The labor-management council met in closed session Wednesday and Rozelle said there possibly would be discussions on collective bargaining for new player contracts.

On league expansion, the commissioner said he would not rule out further league growth by 1974, but added any committee he appoints would find itself with a great deal of work. He denied that any plans had been made for large-scale expansion after the merger of the National and American leagues.

Seattle Building Dome Stadium

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP) - Seattle has bet $29 million that a domed stadium in Washington's damp climate can attract a professional footbal or baseball team.

But with no takers so far and construction of the stadium underway, 35 Seattle lobbyists set up shop here this week at the National Football League winter meetings with an eye toward wooing a team to Seattle.

"If we don't get an NFL franchise, we could almost paint the stadium white and put a head and tail on it," Gerald Schlatter, stadium project manager, said in an interview Wednesday.

Schlatter said NFL owners aren't the only ones looking over the stadium, which will hold 65,000 persons when completed in 1975.

Gorillas Host UConn Today

TWO AGAINST ONE is hardly fair in any sport but common in lacrosse. It's especially fair when UMass is in the goal ready to prove why they are one of the brighter spots in the Spring sports scene.

By MIKE ELLIOTT

Garber's Gorillas, more formally known as the UMass varsity lacrosse team, open their 1973 season at home tomorrow at 3 o'clock against the University of Connecticut.

Coach Dick Garber expects to see a much improved UConn team. "UConn has strengthened themselves on attack and defense" remarked Garber. "The have three big attackmen who are very good dodgers as well. They have improved their defense by returning to defense a guy named Dale who last year was named to the all Long Island team as an attacker."

Last year's game against UConn was not as close as the score indicated. The team may have had a letdown against the Huskies. "UConn was up for our game and I think our players were looking toward the games against Brown and Harvard." This year the Gorillas cannot afford such a letdown against Connecticut.

The annual Connecticut - Massachusetts lacrosse game is a continuing rivalry. Both Garber and UConn head coach Nate Osur played on the same Springfield College team. Assistant Huskies coach Joe Morroni is a former UMass player himself. Coach Garber has prepared his squad by practicing hard and by scrimmaging some tough teams. He said, "The team played well in the second half of the game against Cortland State and they should continue to improve."

Garber has planned his strategy for tomorrow's game and he intends to include a new attack formation. He plans to get the ball to Fred Michaels and Frank Garrihan. "If we can get the ball to these attackmen they should be able to score," commented the coach. "We will also try to move the ball in and out from the wings to the crease."

The starting lineup for tomorrow appears to be: John Rutledge - goal; defense - Billy Blaustein, Rich Lally, and John McCarthy; midfield - John Martin, Jack Moran, and Hersch Seidman; Attack - Fred Michaels, Peter Connolly, and Frank Garrihan. Dwight Blomquist will probably be missing from the lineup due to a pulled hamstring muscle in his right leg. Blomquist, who is the Minutemen's leading scorer, will be missed. However, the midfield will be strengthened by the return of John Martin who is expected to be able to go at full speed. He is just coming off a recent back injury. Coach Garber also plans to rotate four or five defensemen and attackmen.

He expects to see some new formations displayed by Connecticut. "Connecticut is a well coached team," he said. "They always show some new wrinkles. If they want to, they can play a slowed-down game. They may also throw a zone defense at us instead of the regular man-to-man defense."

Dick Garber feels that his players have to control the ball to win." We have to gain control of the ball and get it to our attackmen. If we can do that we can score. We must also pass well.

Daily Collegian SPORTS

LaCrosse, Baseball Varsity M Feature

By MIKE BROPHY

Two spring coaches highlighted the Varsity M Club weekly luncheon yesterday as baseball mentor Bergquist and lacrosse coach Garber were on hand to shed some light on their respective spring sports.

Meatballs were on the menu so it came to pass that many people temporarily ignored the meat boycott. Baseball co-captain Eddie McMahon was on hand along with hitting standout Steve Newell and both players shed light on their own views of the trip. Newell compared it to a week long dream and he hopes, "that it continues right on out to Omaha."

Coach Bergquist then expressed his thoughts on a Yale team that he promises to be tougher than their 1-6 record indicates. He noted that, "They were playing teams like Georgia Tech and Tennessee and not losing by big spreads."

The program was then turned over to the chief Gorilla of the lacrosse team who complimented his men for the courage they displayed against Cortland in losing 10-8. He noted that once the attack jells they will once again possess that potent fast breaking offense that used to rack up 16 tallies a game.

Both coaches expressed optimism as far at their spring outlooks were concerned. Both are looking ahead to post season play but realize that they have long and important regular season slates ahead of them now and will take them one at a time.

As far as the door prize goes, Coach Russ Kidd walked off with fourth bottle of the year.

Celtics, Knicks Win In NBA Playoffs

ATLANTA (AP) - John Havlicek and Paul Silas triggered a 10-0 Boston spurt early in the second quarter, leading the Celtics to an easy 126-113 triumph over the Atlanta Hawks Wednesday night.

The win gave the Atlantic Division champions a 2-0 edge in their National Basketball Association Eastern Conference semifinal playoff.

Havlicek, who scored 54 points in Boston's opening game victory Sunday, contributed 29 while Jo Jo White added 24 and NBA Most Valuable Player Dave Cowens had 20.

Cowens and Silas dominated the backboards by grabbing 25 and 17 rebounds, respectively. Pete Maravich led the Hawks with 20 points while Lou Hudson had 27.

With White hitting 10 points, the Celtics raced to 29-13 margin after the first 12 minutes in which Atlanta hit on only five of 33 shots from the field, a .152 percentage. Boston ripped off the first nine points of the game before the Hawks could score on a Maravich jumper after three minutes had gone by.

Game No. 3 will be played at Boston on Friday night.

BALTIMORE (AP) - Bill Bradley and Willis Reed combined for 39 points and led the New York Knicks to a 103-96 victory over the Baltimore Bullets Wednesday night.

The Knicks took a 3-0 lead in the best-of-seven National Basketball Association Eastern Conference semifinals, with game No. 4 scheduled in Baltimore Friday night.

Rangers Bombard Bruins 6-2

BOSTON (AP) - New York exploded for four goals in the second period, including a pair of tallies by Walt Tkaczuk, while limiting the Bruins to only three shots on net as the Rangers took their opening round Stanley Cup game 6-2 over the Bruins Wednesday night.

Bruce MacGregor and Brad Park also flipped goals past Bruins goalie Jacques Plante in the National Hockey League contest at Boston Garden. Park also scored two goals for the night.

New York bombarded Plante with 12 shots in the second frame and 31 for the night.

The two teams traded goals in the opening period, Boston's Doug Roberts drawing first blood when he poked a rebound past Ed Giacomin at 14:21 and Park blasted a shot from the blue line past Plante on the power play.

MacGregor got his goal at 7:26 of the second period after a scramble in front of the net and Park slapped a 35-footer at 8:53. Tkaczuk came out of the penalty box, immediately picked up the puck, took two strides and shot past Plante at 11:48. He got his second at 15:55 when he shot through two defenders and Plante in front of the net.

Pete Stemkowski got New York's final goal when he took a apss from Dale Rolfe, skated to about 30 feet in front of Plante and fired at 3:11 of the third period.

Derek Sanderson, used little in the game, picked up a pass from John Bucyk, skated in and across in front of the net and flipped a buck hander past Giacomin.

Giacomin stopped 29 shots from Boston, as the Bruins were outskated by the Rangers throughout the game.

Tatum Optioned

—The Boston Red Sox, seeking ways to get down to the 25-player limit while trying to swing a deal, sent veteran relief pitcher Ken Tatum to Pawtucket of the International League Wednesday in a surprise move.

The Red Sox obtained waivers on Tatum and assigned him to their Triple-A team, while sending another reliever, Don Newhauser, on option to Pawtucket. Tatum, acquired from the California Angels in a trade involving now-retired Tony Conigliaro in 1970, has been a disappointment with the Red Sox.

Steve Crowe

UConn and the Big Time

When you want something bad enough, you ask for twice as much. This is the way of politics and may very well be the underlying reason why the University of Connecticut is advising the Yankee Conference to "adopt the NCAA standards as to grants and aides and remove all other conference restrictions."

In an article which appeared in yesterday's Collegian (written by this reporter) it was announced that a "UConn proposal may kill the Yankee Conference." When Connecticut's athletic director John Toner asked the Board of Trustees to endorse his proposals, it looked as through he was pushing UConn athletics right up into the so-called "big times."

This might not be the case.

As everyone knows, this is hunting season for college recruiting and certain restrictions in the Yankee Conference scholarship policy can ruin a coach's chances of landing the "blue chipper" (the superstar) in a close race with an outside school.

The Yankee Conference does not allow a school to give an athlete any more money than the "catalog cost": tuition, room and board, and fees. In the NCAA standards, schools can also pay for the recruit's books and give him a $15 per month "laundry allowance."

Suppose a player is torn between two similar schools, both offering him the full free ride, the fame and glory, and all those other things athletes look for when they go to school; and suppose one school offers him extra money for books and laundry service. Where will he go?

Obviously, he will go where the money is.

Toner had previously tried to get the athletic directors to allow the scholarships to cover book costs, but was turned down.

The way he probably sees it is if you want to compete against the big schools in the world of recruitment game, you have to play under the same set of rules.

The other proposal is "that the athletic director take all steps necessary to insure that the University of Connecticut proceed to play all inter-collegiate athletics in the University Division of the NCAA."

Yankee Conference football is in the college division at the present time. UMass is playing to the capacity of their budget, without even using the entire 80 scholarships allowed over the four year period. The NCAA allows 105 football and 18 basketball awards over the same period of time.

If the Yankee Conference decides to go on to the university scale in all athletics, the schools will probably have to increase their scholarship budgets.

But again, that rhetorical question arises, "Where do we get the money?" The athletic departments would be faced with an almost impossible task of scraping additional funds from non-existent sources.

UConn doesn't even have a scholarship fund like UMass' Barber Scholarship Awards. All of their scholarship money comes out of the financial aid office. A certain percentage of the total grants must go to the athletic program, maybe 10-20%. There probably won't be any increase in this assistance e ,er. So where will UConn get their additional money from?

There are two possibilities: either (1) they will be establishing a scholarship fund of their own or, (2) (and this just might be the case), they have no real intention of going on to a bigger program.

Toner who could not be reached for comment, probably doesn't even want to expand his program. All he really wants is a chance to fight with the other schools on an equal basis when he's fighting for the "blue chippers."

C.C. Board Votes To Fund Its Officers

Last night the Campus Center Board of Governors voted itself salaries. Susan Condon, a member of the Board (pictured here), abstained from the vote.

By CINDY GONET

The Campus Center Board of Governors last night voted to begin salaried positions of $1425 for fiscal year 1973 for its officers.

Formulated last week in a special subcommittee, amended and passed, it was approved that the Board chairperson be paid $175 per month; the vice-chairperson be paid $150 per month; and the secretary-treasurer be paid $150 per month.

Other action taken by the Board included a recommendation in Executive Session April 12 for the reduction of the Campus Center fee to $49.50. The Finance Committee of the Board recommended that the fee be set at $52.50. A final figure will be voted on at Tuesday's meeting.

Chairperson Richard Nelson announced the resignation of Warren T. Grinnan as manager of the Campus Center. Grinnan's current appointment will terminate on November 4, 1973. In a letter of resignation to Vice Chancellor Campion, Grinnan said that his decision was made "for the best interest of the Campus Center".

In a review of previous Board actions Chancellor Bromery requested by memo that a reconsideration be taken for the transfer of Student Activities Funding from the Campus Center Trust Fund to the Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF) pending the approval from the Student Senate.

The funds used for payment for the Board officers will be drawn from unallocated capital which include a renovation account of $50,000 for the Center and a general expense account.

A motion to fund chairpersons and Board members was tabled until action is taken by the Student Senate for the payment of their chairpersons. Said acting chairperson Frank Cotter, "We don't want to begin a precedent in action of this sort."

Several chairpersons and members of the Governing Board expressed doubt as to the financial effectiveness this motion would prove. Said Chris Condon, Board member, "I don't see how this action could conceivably help any of the chairmen. If you have to make $200 per month and the Board pays only $100, you're still stuck for the hundred dollars."

A clause in the motion for a remuneration of Board committee chairmen required that they would not be allowed to work for the Campus Center. Concern was expressed by Bill Worden, secretary-treasurer that employees/board chairpersons could possibly be biased or swayed in the direction of the service in which they worked.

In a memo to the Board, Walter Jonas, Chairman of the Finance Committee said, "Revenue production is below budget by about 5 per cent but this is more than offset by savings in office expenses. The student fee was set high enough. This year, in addition to paying the interest on the building's bonds and capital expenditures, the students contributed almost $450,000 to the Management and Operations budgets.

"This contribution is budgeted to be reduced to $200,000 next year, and there exists the hope that it can be reduced to zero within the next five years. In addition, both the Student Senate and the Board of Governors have agreed that the $167,000 contribution to the RSO (recognized student activities) office be paid by the Campus Center Tax. If this is approved by the University administration, then there can be a substantial reduction in the student fee for fiscal '74. At the Executive Session of April 2, the Board recommended a student fee of $49.50, which would result in a net surplus of about $41,000 as the budget is now being presented," Jonas continued.

The Campus Center fee may also be affected by the transfer of funds from the Center to the Student Activities Trust Fund. In a proposal for reconsideration of this action Bromery stated that the move would be premature because of the current situation of a search for a director of the Center, who would not have the responsibility for student activities. Bromery also expressed pessimism in the relationship which would exist between the building, the staff and the Board.

Jonas, in his financial report to the Board, said further that "whatever may happen to the SATF transfer, we shall be forced by law to finance the building in fiscal '75. Doing this will raise the fee by $24, if the present pattern of funding remains. While increased revenue can be generated in the building, it would be highly optimistic that even half that amount can be earned, forcing us to raise the fee at least $12, or to its current rate, while the undergraduates will face higher SATF taxes because of the loss of RSO subsidy from us."

Local Merchants Disagree On Impact Of Meat Boycott

By JEANNETTE MARTINEAU

As the national meat boycott reaches its final days, Amherst and South Hadley meat merchants disagree as to its impact.

Hardee's manager, Harold Johnson stated that the boycott has caused a definite slowdown in his business. "It has hurt everybody. We've sold more fish than we have hamburgers." However, Johnson was optimistic that hamburger sales would pick up next week, and that the boycott "will do good for meat prices in the long run."

Kentucky Fried Chickens Operations Manager, Arthur Pappas felt that the boycott "has been good to us." "It didn't affect us not really. Business went up in both chicken and fish."

Pappas explained that the restaurant had not been greatly affected by the rising meat prices. The company controls our prices. We have been paying a little bit more for meat but not much."

Henry Dieciolowski, a meat cutter for Stop and Shop, noted a 60% drop in meat sales. "The boycott is no good in the long run because the farmers are getting mad. Pork last week was $1.39 per lb. is now $1.69. And beef went up about 3¢.

"We had to pay more. The only reason that some of the meat is less right now is that, instead of throwing it away, you bring it down. The prices will go right back up because the farmers can't afford it."

Al Drew, the owner of James H. McManus, said that they had been coping with the meat boycott by featuring an entire week of "All You Can Eat Fish". "We prepared ahead of time," Drew explained, "We normally run it on Wednesday and Friday. We're as affected by high meat prices as the consumer is. We've sold quite a bit of fish, but meat sales have gone down."

Concerning the impact of the boycott, Drew said "It's hard to say in one week's time. It will have an effect. It made people aware, like packers and dealers. It's a matter of supply and demand. We sold more meat than we had thought we would."

"Our roast beef sales have felt it most," he continued, noting a 50-60% drop in sales for the week, and a 20% drop for hamburgers. "We've offset the meat by having fish. Saleswise we aren't losing volume, people are buying different items. Fifteen items on our menu are non-meat items."

"There has been a 22-cent increase in hamburg in 14 months. And the price of our hamburgers had jumped 5¢ twice. Our alternatives were to either buy a cheaper hamburg or to reduce the size of our hamburgers. We decided to increase the price. And people have accepted it. They understand."

"The only items that haven't gone up in the last year," Drew concluded, "are apple and grape jelly."

The Department Manager of Louis' Foods described the effects of the meat boycott as: "Business is slower than usual.

"The wholesale prices will have to be lowered before we can lower our prices. We haven't dropped our prices. We're just putting out what we can sell."

"I don't see how the boycott will have any long-term effect. The meat department works on a very low percentage. It's supply and demand."

SATF Estimates Imminent

By LARRY CARPMAN

"Conservative estimates" of next semester's SATF tax will be made within the next three weeks according to Bud Demers, R.S.O. accountant.

R.S.O groups which spend more than their budget for one category, student salaries, must ask the Senate for a category change. This change in the long run could result in an increase in the SATF tax.

Student paid positions for the R.S.O office has a budget for this fiscal year of $8,520 and has spent $6,810 of that money as of March 15th. The fiscal year ends in June.

The Collegian has a budget for student employees of $10,400 and has spent $6,464 as of March 15th. WMUA has also spent about 60% of its student salary funds.

Meanwhile, the Student Senate Transit Service has a student salary budget of $33,655 and has spent only $6,740.

"The figures for the Bus Service are misleading, said Demers, "because it is confusing as to how much money is coming from the state and federal agencies."

In other budgets the Southwest Assembly has used only $844 of its $3,590 allocation, the student auto workshop has spent $743 of their $2,000 budget, and the Commuter Assembly has spent $600 of its student pay monies from its budget of $1,745, all as of March 15th.

R.S.O groups that use less than their budget for student paid positions can have a stabilizing effect on the SATF tax. Some groups, however, do not use their funds until late in the fiscal year.

Metric Signs Come To UMass

By SHARON HUGHES

The UMass Metric Committee has placed two directional signs giving mileage and kilometric measurements to nearby towns on campus. One faces Governor's Drive at the lights at WoPE; the second faces southbound traffic on Commonwealth Ave. in front of Boyden. Committee Chairman Klaus E. Kroner, associate professor of the Industrial Engineering and Operations Research Department said "these displays are a kind of educational tool to get people to think in metric measurements."

The Physical Plant personnel have painted colored stripes in random classrooms and halls in lengths of meter designations.

There is also a display in the Campus Center.

Formed last fall from many departments within the University, the Metric Committee's stated role is to "promote a smooth transition to the nationwide use of the metric system by whatever means suitable."

Kroner said that he feels the advantages to the system far outweigh the problems of converting and adapting to the system. For example, conversion from miles to feet frequently produces a fraction too awkward to be used for practical pruposes. Conversion from kilometers to meters merely involves dividing by 1000 (or moving the decimal point three points to the left).

In July 1971, a Congressional study of the metric system recommended "that the country convert to the metric system with some kind of coordinated plan spread over a 10-year period."

Kroner said that legislation to adopt the metric system has been introduced in both houses of Congress. He expects that "favorable reaction will be coming about."

Kroner added that the bills should be enacted by January 1975, after a new 18 month study. The U.S. should be predominantly metric by 1983, Kroner said.

The United States is the only major country not committed to the metric system which has been used by scientists, pharmicists and the industry since the 1880's.

Atkins Says Cities 'Near Redemption'

By MARY MULLOY

"Unless the state and federal governments take an aggressive leadership role inproviding the necessary resources and expertise, we can predict disaster for our communities in the future," said Thomas I. Atkins, last night, highlighting a week long program entitled "The Future of the City".

A distinguished veteran in urban affairs, Atkins received degrees in economics and politics and law from Harvard University, served as Executive Director of the Boston chapter of NAACP, was a former city councillor in Boston, and is presently serving as Secretary of Community and Development in Massachusetts.

"Most large cities are damn near the point of redemption; salvation must be in the form of a major change in the style of living," he said. Some of the changes that this might entail he listed as: "a ban on cars in large areas, a vast allocation of funds for rapid transit systems and a disproportional expenditure of educational funds in the central city."

Overall, he stressed the importance of a long range urban plan which should consider "the dwindling amount of land, the increasing supportive services needed, the type and location of schools, housing and industry, the implication for local and state government, and the problem of minorities.

"In the city of Boston, there are ten times as many maintenance workers in the Gardens and the Commons as there are in Franklin Park which is ten times as large," he said. "But," he added, "Franklin Park is surrounded on three sides by blacks."

Elaborating on the necessity of planning, he mentioned that cities themselves are accepting their inability to perform and choose city administration," hence the increasing popularity of the city manager form of government.

"Massachusetts has many urban problems," he continued, "and if they are to be solved we will need to construct plans for recognizing and addressing them."

Addressing the problems, Atkins cited hunger, poverty, needs for health and housing and the need to know are just some of the problems. In addition, 2/3 of the people in the state are living in communities listed by the US Department of Labor as victims of critical or serious unemployment.

"The state and federal government will have to play a major role," he repeated, "local officials are too afraid to offend the sensibilities of its constituencies."

Greeks Planning To Trade Ideas

By JOANNE RESTEGHINI

"Leadership, Opportunity for Greek Interaction and Co-Ordination, '73" is a conference being hosted, organized and carried out by the University of Massachusetts Greek Council. The "L.O.G.I.C. '73" Conference, which will be held this Friday, Saturday and Sunday in the Campus Center, is being sponsored by the Northeast Interfraternity and Panhellenic Conferences.

The conference will be attended by chapter officers and members of fraternities and sororities on this campus as well as from campuses in the Northeast, Panhellenic and I.F.C. officials, university officials and national fraternity and sorority officials.

"The conference will provide for interaction between fraternities and sororities and all Greeks as well as providing an opportunity for exchange of ideas," explained Steve Kenney, Chairman of the conference.

During the Saturday and Sunday a number of workshops and business sessions will be held. A student will be initiating discussion in a workshop consisting of fifteen or twenty people. Among the topics which will be discussed in workshops are "Greek Council", "Co-ed Fraternities", "Member Retention", "Greek Week", "Community Service" and "Financial Management". The workshops will provide for an exchange of ideas on the different topics as well as discussion of similar problems and possible solutions.

There will be Planning Committees which will meet to discuss the Constitution and By-Laws, future plans for next years' conference, and election of N.E.I.F.C. and Panhel Officers.

The last day of the conference will consist of the reports and recommendations of the different Committees as well as a total review and summation of the weekend.

"There is a lot of interest and involvement by the Greeks on this campus to make this conference a success," said Steve Kenney. "It is hoped that by spending a weekend together and discussing mutual problems and different ideas that a closer bond of unity will be established among all Greeks."

Correction

In Thursday's Collegian, the article on the Student Senate contained a number of quotations from Prof. David Booth on faculty unionization which were incorrect, or quoted out of context.

Prof. Booth was identified as president of the faculty senate. He is actually the presiding officer, but at Wednesday's meeting he prefaced his remarks by saying he was speaking not as presiding officer of the senate, but as a member of the Committee of Concerned Faculty, which opposes the unionization of faculty on campus.

Booth is quoted as saying: "With the unionization of faculty there will become an antipathy between administration and faculty. Now there will be a confrontation between them."

What Booth said, in a text prepared for the occasion was: Collective bargaining is predicted upon two inter-related assumptions. The first is that the University consists of only two groups, labor and management: the second is that there exists a natural antipathy and antagonism between them. . . .the union is required, by law and by necessity, to be clearly independent of, and constantly in confrontation with the administration.

The story also quoted Booth as saying: "Now that collective bargaining will become involved with the intricacies of collective bargaining, they will be more concerned with management and academics. The new participants in University policy will diffuse and divide the university rather than help build it," he said.

Prof. Booth said: (presently) The typical administrator is an academic who prefers a low administrative profile, and who likes to keep up with his teaching and his research. These kinds of men have traditionally been unwilling to become full-fledged "organization men" and they will probably prove unwilling or unable to achieve the kind of bureaucratic "gray flannel suit" efficiency that will be needed to operate a unionized university. . .

". . . their reluctance to stay on to play full-fledged hard nosed managerial roles will mean that the University administrators of the future will be drawn less and less from academic ranks. Even if drawn from our ranks, they are more likely to be persons with a commitment to management than persons with a commitment to academic excellence. For them, administration will become a goal in itself, it will no longer be a means of creating a great university."

Booth is also quoted as saying: "Do we want to publicize the best paid faculty positions in the country? With the fiscal squeeze in Boston at this time, this will definitely erode support in the legislature."

Booth actually said: "Do we want to dramatize the fact that we have one of the best paid faculties among public institutions in the Northeast?"

At another point in his speech, Booth said: "I personally doubt that we can use collective bargaining to squeeze more for the Amherst campus out of the legislators, particularly now that the emerging Boston campus is beginning to make new and increasing demands upon them."

The Collegian regrets errors.

President Wood said yesterday he would not comment on the statewide higher education reorganization plan until the legality of the move is determined.

Re-org Under Analysis

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

UMass President Robert Wood said yesterday he would have no comment on the latest plan to reorganize state education until a legal analysis of the legislation is complete.

Wood, on campus yesterday, said he refused to "shoot from the hip" until the "legal analysis is completed and understood.

The analysis is being undertaken by UMass legal counsel, Wood said.

The reorganization bill, submitted to the legislature last Friday but not yet in general circulation, would revamp all state funded education from the elementary to post-secondary levels. The bill is part of Governor Francis Sargent's plan to reorganize all state government.

The legislation differs little from the proposal distributed by Secretary of Education Joseph M. Cronin in January. Primarily, it would create two regional councils, one for elementary and secondary and one for post-secondary education in each of the proposed five state regions. The original draft had only one council to control all education in each region.

The regional councils came under heavy attack when the first proposal was seen by the state college and university system.

Under the proposed legislation the UMass Board of Trustees and other UMass governance mechanisms would be abolished, to be replaced by a regional council and a statewide board of "post-secondary education."

That board would have 15 members; five from the regional post-secondary education councils, elected for terms of one year, and eight members appointed by the governor, to eventually serve five-year terms.

The board would be under the jurisdiction of a new "Secretary of Educational and Cultural Affairs." The secretary would be "the chief education officer of the commonwealth," according to the bill, with review and veto power over all educational institute budgets. He would be appointed by the governor.

The board of post-secondary education would have the power, subject to the approval of the secretary, to appoint a "Chancellor of Post-Secondary Education" who would serve as the president of the state college and university system. The chancellor would, with the approval of the board, have the power to appoint three vice-chancellors, one for the community college, state college and university systems. That section of the bill would eliminate the present position of University President held by Robert Wood.

The regional councils of post-secondary education would come under the jurisdiction of the statewide board and also have review power over the budgets of the institutes in their regions. The regional councils would have the power to appoint "presidents" of each campus under its power and appoint a board of visitors to "inquire into the programs, progress and problems on each campus."

In UMass' case the board of visitors would replace the present Board of Trustees, but without the trustees power. That would be given to the regional council and statewide board of post-secondary education.

The board of post-secondary education would also have the power to adopt, amend or repeal present rules and regulations "for the government of the university, for the management, control and administration of its affairs for its faculty, students and employees, as it deems necessary," according to the bill.

Fac-Sen Approves 'Macro-Justice'

By SUSAN R. HUBBARD

Legal studies received approval as an interdisciplinary undergraduate major at the Faculty Senate's regular meeting yesterday.

Also discussed by the Faculty Senate were the results of this week's UMass Board of Trustees meeting, the establishment of a Conference Office, and proposed amendments to the Fac-Sen Constitution as submitted by the Rules Committee.

The purpose of the legal studies major would be to present the study of law as a discipline and enable students to study in the field of "macro-justice".

Stressed by the Academic Matters Committee, which presented the legal studies proposal, was the fact that this would not be a "pre-law" program. Also, the legal studies major would in no way effect the establishment of a UMass Law School at some future date.

In order to screen students wishing to enroll in this major, it was recommended that special counseling services be set up. Such screening would prevent those students interested in law school after graduation from enrolling in legal studies without fully understanding the nature of the program.

Presently, there are approximately thirty students involved in the BDIC (Bachelor's Degree with Idividual Concentration) program, whose interests could be categorized under legal studies.

This group would form the "core" of the new major, with the total number of students enrolled in legal studies to be approximately one hundred.

Seven members of the faculty from the School of Business Administration would serve as the professors and instructors of the legal studies courses. The two primary or foundation courses for the new major would be L.S. 201 and 202, which are currently taught by SBA under different titles.

Faculty Senate representatives to the Board of Trustees reported the referral of credit restoration to ROTC back to the Amherst campus for more detailed study.

Also, the passage of the University Governance Document was announced. This document was drafted by faculty, students, and administrators from the three UMass campuses, and emphasized student and faculty participation in decision making at all University levels.

The Continuing Education Committee proposed that a Conference Office be established under their committee to handle negotiations and arrangements for all conferences held on the UMass campus.

Black Musicians' Conference Next Week

By MDC STAFF

A Black Musicians' Conference will be presented as part of the Martin Luther King Memorial Lecture Series next week.

The conference, slated to begin Monday, April 9 and to continue through Saturday, April 14, is being presented by the Institute of Pan-African Culture in cooperation with the W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies. The Distinguished Visitors Program (DVP), which had presented the lecture series in previous years, and other campus organizations are also supporting the conference.

Each day's activities will consist of a keynote speech and panel discussion in the morning; workshops in the afternoon; a and a concert in the evening.

The morning session will begin at 9:00 a.m. with the keynote speaker of the day. A panel discussion will follow, with panel members making brief presentations on points brought out in the keynote address. This will be followed by a discussion period among the panelists and then a question and answer period.

Approximately three or four workshops will be held during the afternoon session, scheduled to begin at 1:00 p.m. A concert will be held each evening at 8:00 p.m., Monday through Thursday; two Friday night, at 8:00 p.m. and 12:00 midnight; and one Saaturday night at 8:15 p.m.

Prices Surge; Tightened Controls?

March Prices Up 2.2 Per Cent

By ROBERT A. DOBKIN
AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—Wholesale prices again surged at record levels last month, forecasting even higher retail prices for consumers and threatening to undermine President Nixon's Phase 3 economic controls.

The Labor Department reported Wednesday that the Wholesale Price Index, a major indicator of the rate of inflation, jumped 2.2 per cent in March, the steepest monthly hike since January, 1951.

Farm products and processed foods led the way, posting the fourth straight large monthly increase. The wholesale price of consumer finished foods-those ready to go on supermarket shelves-rose at a seasonally adjusted rate of 4.6 per cent, sharpest since the government began keeping records in 1947.

Lumber prices also shot up at a record rate, and industrial commodities as a group went up at the fastest rate in 22 years.

The report drew an angry reaction from AFL-CIO President George Meany, who again warned of big wage increase demands this year "if the administration and the Congress won't provide equity" by clamping controls on prices, rents and interest rates.

Herbert Stein, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, indicated the White House may be forced to move away from its largely voluntary Phase 3 plan with additional mandatory controls.

"The control system will be adapted as necessary to play its most useful role in restraining inflation," Stein said in a statement.

Nixon clamped a ceiling on meat prices last week but organized labor and congressional Democrats are pressing for further controls. The House Banking Committee has approved a bill to roll back prices, interest rates and rents to the levels of Jan. 10.

A nationwide consumer boycott of meat continued into its fifth day and indications were that it could have some effect on driving down meat prices.

However, the effects of the boycott and the President's meat ceiling were not reflected in the Labor Department's wholesale price report, as it was compiled before these actions were taken.

Because wholesale price hikes usually move swiftly into retail prices, consumers will be paying more for virtually everything in the coming months, including: food, fuel, clothing, lumber and most manufactured goods.

In the monthly wholesale index report, prices for farm products and processed fonds moved up 4.6 per cent seasonally adjusted, both the highest rate since December, 1972.

In the past three months, their seasonally adjusted annual rate of increase was 53.1 per cent.

Prices of industrial commodities, including raw materials and finished manufactured goods, rose 1.2 per cent in March, the sharpest rise since the early Korean war year of 1951.

Congress Moves For Price Freeze

By BILL NEIKIRK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-Sharply rising prices and pressure from Congress may force the Nixon administration to tighten Phase 3 controls further, perhaps with a return to mandatory wage-price restraints across the entire economy.

The administration has already taken several steps back in the direction of Phase 2. That control system required large businesses and labor unions to clear their price boosts in advance with the government.

The release Thursday of the March wholesale price index, showing another sharp jump in prices, put added pressure on the administration to tighten up.

"The control system will be adapted as necessary to play its most useful role in restraining inflation," said Dr. Herbert Stein, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers.

That statement appeared to be a hint that more stringent controls are on the way. But Stein played it both ways, adding that any control system "can only be effective in an environment where demand is not generally excessive."

The administration has been saying that the price surge of recent months can be traced largely to heavy demand for such products as food and lumber.

Despite this, however, President Nixon has already put price ceilings on meat. And he is reported ready within the next two weeks to put controls on lumber.

Moves in Congress to write into law a new price freeze, including interest rates, and roll them back to earlier levels may force the administration to act.

The House Banking Committee has approved ceilings on prices at their Jan. 10 levels, the day before Phase 2 was officially abandoned by the administration in favor of the largely voluntary Phase 3 program.

While the committee's ceilings probably will not survive floor action, it is widely believed in Congress that the bill would require the White House to put on price ceilings across the economy.

Nixon is caught in a bind. For the bill also would extend the Economic Stabilization Act, the law which empowers him to impose wage-price controls, from its April 30 expiration date to April 30, 1974.

Without that authority, Nixon would have to drop all controls. At a time when inflation is a major problem, the result might be catastrophic.

Although Treasury Secretary George P. Shultz said Nixon probably would veto price ceilings mandated by Congress, the White House might be offered either no controls at all or the congressionally written ceilings.

The administration has reluctantly moved back toward Phase 2-type controls and it wants to avoid any further tightening, in hopes that the economy can be generally freed of controls in the next year.

It also genuinely feels that the ceilings under consideration in Congress are unworkable, believing they would roll back prices to unrealistic levels without controlling wages. Also, it is firmly opposed to controls on interest rates and rent.

Ofari Points Out Lack Of 'Black Capitalism'

The fact that "Black Capitalism", meaning ownership of business and industry by Blacks, does not actually exist was pointed out by Mr. Earl Ofari during the second series of workshops being sponsored by the New American Movement.

Mr. Ofari, who wrote the book The Myth of Black Capitalism, said, "There is no real 'Black capitalism'—MoTown notwithstanding— because Black people have no capital . . . There are Blacks who operate businesses, but the money invested in those businesses— the ownership—is White."

In a pamphlet entitled Black Liberation: Cultural and Revolutionary Nationalism, Mr. Ofari quoted Richard Thatcher, who was the first Black mayor of Gary, Indiana, as saying, "There is much talk about black control of the ghettoes. What does that mean? I am mayor of a city of roughly 90,000 black people, but we do not control the possibilities of jobs for them, of money for their schools, or state funded social services. THESE THINGS ARE IN THE HANDS OF THE UNITED STATES STEEL CORPORATION AND THE COUNTY DEPARTMENT OF WELFARE OF THE STATE OF INDIANA. Will the poor in Gary's worst slums be helped because the pawnshop owner is black, not white?"

Today the theme of this and Wednesday's discussions will be "Racism and Organized Labor at 10 AM in CC162, a talk on "Racism and Nationalism in Advanced Capitalism" at noon in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union, and a panel on "The Socialist Alternative" at 2 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

Farmers Blame Mud For Meat Prices

By EDWARD W. HOWARD
Associated Press Writer

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) - Bad weather and belly-deep mud in pastures and feed lots have contributed to the loss of 40,000 cattle in Nebraska this year and to higher prices at the meat counter.

And Agriculture Department figures for February show that the 373,000 head of cattle slaughtered in Nebraska averaged five pounds less per head than in previous years. That comes to 1,865,000 pounds of red meat that did not go to market, and cattlemen blame much of the loss on a hard winter, wet spring and the mud.

The death toll has been "at least five times the normal amount," according to officials at the University of Nebraska Veterinary Science Department, which compiled the USDA study.

Trade sources estimate the 40,000 livestock deaths represented 10.7 per cent of all cattle slaughtered that month in Nebraska with an approximate value of $746,000.

Cattlemen say they must get higher prices for beef to make up financial losses caused by deaths, high grain costs and loss of weight gain. The USDA reports this has been the worst winter on record for those three factors.

Cattle and hogs have gone to market muddy because pastures and feed lots are deep in mud. A cow can carry 40 pounds of mud on her back when she goes to market, and some 20 pounds of mud in her stomach.

Gray Requests Action

Nixon Removes FBI Nomination

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif. (AP) - President Nixon announced Thursday he was withdrawing the nomination of L. Patrick Gray III to be director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. He said he acted at Gray's request.

In a statement, Nixon said: "In fairness to Mr. Gray, and out of my overriding concern for the effective conduct of the vitally important business of the FBI, I have regretfully agreed to withdraw Mr. Gray's nomination."

Nixon, who did not say who he would name to succeed Gray as head of the FBI, did declare that he has asked Gray to remain as acting director until a nominee is confirmed.

The President said, after talking to Bray by telephone for five minutes, "it is obvious that Mr. Gray's nomination will not be confirmed by the Senate."

To bolster this contention, Nixon cited, without elaborating, action Thursday by the Senate Judiciary Committee which had been handling the matter.

The committee earlier Thursday agreed to a showdown vote next week on the nomination after Democrats moved to postpone action indefinitely.

In his statement, Nixon described Gray as "an able, honest and dedicated American" who had been exposed to "totally unfair innuendo and suspicion" becaus he had cooperated with White House counsel John Bean III in making available FBI reports on the Watergate conspiracy.

Nixon said Gray's "compliance with this completely proper and necessary request" caused the innuendo and suspicion "and thereby seriously tarnished his fine record as acting director and promising future at the bureau."

In Washington, Gray had announced he had asked that his nomination be withdrawn shortly before Nixon made his formal announcement.

Atty. Gen. Richard G. Kleindienst said through a spokesman that he was deeply disappointed by what he called the turn of events.

"He is one of the most loyal Americans I know," said Kleindienst. "He was an excellent choice to be permanent director and should have been confirmed."

The spokesman said Gray telephoned Kleindienst and told him of his decision about an hour before he issued his statement.

"I have asked the President to withdraw my nomination for the position of director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation," Gray said in a brief statement.

"The basis for this decision is my deep conviction that the FBI, a great and unique American institution of vital service to the President and the American people, is entitled to permanent leadership at the earliest possible time."

Gray's statement was released by an FBI spokesman.

Gray, who has headed the giant law-enforcement bureau since the death of J. Edgar Hoover last May, has become entagled in the controversy over the bugging of Democratic national headquarters in the Watergate office-apartment complex.

Communists Violate Indo China Truce

By DENNIS NEELD
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP) - North Vietnamese and Viet Cong forces touched off the heaviest fighting since the cease-fire, the Saigon government reported Thursday.

Military sources said the Communist command may be preparing for a major offensive. But Pentagon officials in Washington said they had no reason to believe an offensive is planned.

At the same time, the military situation in neighboring Cambodia remained serious. All highways to the capital, Phnom Penh, remained out as Communist regiments tightened their noose around the city.

Cambodian dispatches reported continued ground assaults on the major roads into Phnom Penh despite heavy U.S. bombing.

In the fighting in South Vietnam, four government positions came under artillery and ground attack at widely scattered points in what military sources described as "probing activity" to test Saigon's reactions and feel out weak links.

Attempts by Canada and Indonesia on the International Commission of Control and Supervision to put a stop to the fighting bogged down in procedural wrangles with Poland and Hungary, the commission's other two members.

Hanoi radio claimed Viet Cong forces were fighting only in "defensive reaction" to what it called South Vietnam's "military operations to encroach upon and take control of liberated areas."

Government casualties in the four main clashes reported have climbed to more than 300.

Flooding Rivers Continue To Leave Thousands Homeless

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The flood waters of the Mississippi River inched toward record crests Thursday while claiming six lives, leaving thousands homeless and bringing property damage estimates near $41 million in Missouri and Illinois.

President Nixon authorized the first peacetime call-up of Coast Guard reserves to aid beleaguered flood workers. They have been filling and piling sandbags for days to reinforce levees weakened by incessment pounding from the river.

The waters above St. Louis began to stabilize, but federal officials said they did not expect a crest at St. Louis until Friday.

More than 4,000 persons have been driven from their homes in Missouri and Southern Illinois, where the death toll stands at five. Thousands of others have refused to leave, and remain to protect their property.

Federal officials estimate that more than seven million acres of land are under water in the Mississippi Valley and delta regions from central Missouri to below Vicksburg, Miss.

A spokesman for the Army Corps of Engineers at St. Louis said the $40 million-plus damage estimate from Hannibal, Mo., to Cairo at the southern tip of Illinois was based on a predicted crest of 40.5 feet at St. Louis expected Friday. If the river rises beyond that, the crest will be the highest in more than a century.

More than one million acres in the St. Louis district were flooded and an additional 600,000 acres were under water along the Missouri River from Kansas City to its mouth at the Mississippi, causing an additional $6.4 million damage.

Farther upstream, a spokesman for the Rock Island Army Corps district said flood damage was estimated at close to $5 million from Cassville, Wis., to Hannibal, Mo.

The Army Corps district in St. Louis added that more than $200 million in damage was prevented by flood control programs.

And despite the mass of floodwaters, an old-timer in Ashport, Tenn., above Memphis where the river also crested Thursday, was unimpressed.

"This really ain't so much water," said Samuel Rizziger, 77, marooned in his home talking to neighbors drifting by in boats. "The first big water I can remember was in 1903. Daddy cut down a tree and built us a raft and we floated out.

"This water ain't hurting nothing. It's just keeping us hemmed in."

THE OMNIPOTENT OMELET

In the interest of good weekend dining, the University Food Services Dept. wishes to offer the following simple recipe for that culinary coup de grace, the French Omelet:

4 Eggs — ½ Tsp Salt
4 Tbls Water — Butter

Use an omelet pan or frying pan of approximately 6" diameter. Beat the eggs, salt, and water together with a fork. Heat the pan until a drop of water sizzles in it, then butter it generously. Pour in the egg mixture all at once. Lower the heat, lift up the pan, and with a fork or spatula lift the omelet around the edges to allow uncooked mixture to run onto the bottom. Tilt and shake pan to keep the omelet from sticking. When the mixture no longer flows freely, the omelet is done. It should not be browned, as this indicates overcooking and will result in a poor taste.

All of the ingredients necessary to prepare a french omelet are available at the Munchys stores on campus. Let's make the National Meat Boycott more than a matter of survival.

Wife Still Has Hopes For POW Listed As Dead

By PATTI LEE
Associated Press Writer

BURLINGTON, Vt. (AP)- The hope Lauretta Cook has kept alive for more than eight years wasn't die easily.

Countless times in the past two months Mrs. Cook has turned to her television as the 588 Americans reported to be prisoners of war in Indochina came home.

Each time she was looking for the face she last saw in 1964. Three of them was Maj. Donald Cook, her husband and the father of her four children.

Maj. Cook was taken prisoner in 1968 by the Viet Cong, to smuggle letter in 1969 reported hope. Four years later a doubt again crept into mind. Maj. Cook alive and well in a Viet Cong camp.

Two months ago Mrs. Cook was told her husband had died in the prison camp in 1967. Still she hopes against hope.

"Most of us still believe our husbands are coming back," Mrs. Cook said, speaking for herself and other women whose husbands were listed either as dead or missing in action in Indochina.

When captured by the Viet Cong in 1968, Maj. Cook was serving as an adviser to a South Vietnamese military unit and had been in Vietnam only two weeks.

But he was prepared for the ways of war, having been trained as a specialist in Chinese intelligence and having served as an instructor on methods of surviving if captured by the enemy.

"Other military families talked about dying in Vietnam," Mrs. Cook said in an interview. "We used to talk about Don becoming a POW. His whole career in the service seemed directed toward the day he would be a POW."

Maj. Cook, an intelligence officer and a Chinese language specialist, was assigned before he went to Vietnam, to a single school in Hawaii. It was his price from other men to survival as POWs.

"He was the ringleader," she said. "They would participate the more it could bring them better food. I used to make his eyes up with mascara, and I made him a coat with a mandarin collar.

"He was cool, calm and collected. He never showed emotion."

"Don had to have been heroic in depth ... He was too strong a man to just lay down and die."

Marriage has her husband's daily will be discussed, some with a special team, which is assigned to trace each missing man from the last place he was seen.

The wives of POWs and MIAs have received pay commensurate with their husbands' ranks most of them, officers. But when the military finally declares the men dead, the paychecks will turn into widow's benefits from the Veterans Administration and Social Security, along with a single insurance settlement, for those who had insurance.

"I have no idea what I'm going to do in the future. I guess I'll go to work in August."

For a woman who has developed a complete independence and raised four children who expressed concerning their father, the adjustment to dependency could be a problem. Remarriage seems a foreign idea.

"Now it's my children, my house, my car," Mrs. Cook said. "I don't think I would go back to asking for a dollar every time I wanted it.

"The wives who divorce POWs are going to be talked about. But she's doing him a favor to get on now if she knows it won't work.

"Do men are going to have to begin enough time. After seven years it's not to either them — the feelings they had in the early years — the business and marital ties.

Stores Cut Meat Prices But "Planned For Weeks"

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
By the Associated Press

A southern New England chain announced Thursday that a cut on beef, lamb and pork prices by as much as 40 per cent but said the reduction had been planned for weeks and came during the nation-wide meat boycott only by coincidence.

William Wilkinson, assistant to the president of Big G Discount Food Chain, said meat sales were up about five per cent Wednesday as the first day of price reductions.

Wilkinson said the chain decided to lower prices two or three weeks ago and make its profit on larger sales volume. He said meat sales were up on Thursday, Friday and Saturday and were down about five per cent Sunday and Tuesday.

Sales were about normal Wednesday, he said, and "we anticipate larger sales in the days coming up."

Wilkinson said the chain, which has four outlets in Massachusetts, three in Connecticut and one in Rhode Island, does more than one million yearly in business.

Another chain with outlets in Massachusetts, Connecticut and Vermont, Grand Union, announced that it would cut meat prices by at least a cents a pound under the federal ceiling.

Charles G. Hudson, president of the nation's tenth largest supermarket chain, said price cuts would take effect Friday and continue throughout the month.

Hudson said a weighty boycott would be self-defeating, maintaining it would retard the flow of meat from producers to consumers, making "current prices in supermarkets seem like rock bottom bargains in a year or two."

Devil Drivers Found Guilty

BELLEVILLE, Maine (AP)- A husband and wife who, as elders in a religious organization known as "The Body of Christ Church," were accused of beating a defiant cracked southern to drive out a devil they believed possessed her, were convicted Thursday of assault and battery.

District Court Judge Edwin C. Smith found Lucien Robertson and his wife, Barbara, guilty of assaulting Jane Doe. In the courtroom, last Sept. 16, he set no date for sentencing, however.

Miss Doe said she was beaten by the Robertsons at a private home used for church meetings.

The defense contended Miss Doe was slapped only once during the meeting "to get her attention."

Wounded Knee 37 Day Takeover Ends With Pact

WOUNDED KNEE, S.D. (AP)- A 10-point agreement was signed on Thursday between the persons, men and militant Indians to end the 37-day takeover of Wounded Knee, federal officials said.

According to the agreement, Russell Means, leader of the occupying Indians, will go to Washington Saturday to meet with White House representatives.

Given that meeting starts, the Indians will leave Wounded Knee, unless to arrest and be taken to Rapid City for arraignment.

There will be a federal investigation of Indian affairs throughout the Pine Ridge reservation and an audit of tribal funds.

The Department of Justice is to consider and where appropriate bring civil suits to protect the legal rights of all individuals victim from Indians against unlawful uses or abuses by tribal government or federal authority.

A presidential treaty commission will be set up to examine the 1868 government treaty with the Sioux Nation.

Indian leaders and White House representatives will meet next month in Washington to consider Indian affairs.

The agreement serves as the basis for the Indians laying down their arms and the evacuation of all hostiles and residents in and around Wounded Knee. It provides that the disarming will be supervised by government law enforcement officers with the cooperation of the tribal leadership.

It took A Month– Dog Race Ends

SAND, Idaho (AP) - Thirty-three days after it began, and 1,049 miles of trail later, the first annual Iditarod Trail sled dog race has come to an end.

John Schultz of Iditarod, Alaska, pulled into Nome Wednesday, the race the 32nd, and last of the original 34 mushers who started the race March 3 in Anchorage.

Dick Wilmarth of Red Devil was the race's slightly over 20 days. Although the race committee paid for only 16 places, Schultz and Bruce Mitchell of Eagle River were on left out.

Alaska residents and businessmen took up a collection and gave Mitchell 500 for 23rd place, with Schultz picking up $300 plus the traditional lantern for last place.

Both men received their cash awards at the final, and final, musher's banquet in Nome Wednesday night.

Major Chain Plans Meat Price Reduction

By DANIEL RATTIGAN
Associated Press Writer

A major supermarket chain announced Thursday it would reduce meat prices for the remainder of April, challenging rival chains to be competitive in the battle of the boycott.

But at the same time the government announced a 12 per cent surge in wholesale prices for March, for a 9.4 per cent jump in the wholesale costs of farm products and processed foods.

Grand Union Co. the country's 16th largest food chain, said in New York that for the remainder of April it would trim prices per pound on all cuts of fresh beef, pork, lamb and veal at least 10 cents below the ceiling imposed by President Nixon last week.

President Charles G. Rodman said the aim was to "re-establish quickly an adequate flow of meat from farm to table."

It was clear in effectively reduced. Rodman said "Grand Union prices to consumers will seem like rock bottom bargains to consumers in a year or two."

His fear of steadily climbing meat prices has been expressed by others in the meat producing industry. Retailers say they don't want prices with the wholesalers do, and wholesalers say they can't if producers continue to drive up wholesale prices by withholding livestock.

Executives have enjoyed a measure of success in their numerous work-long efforts, begun April 1, in that meat sales at many food chains have dropped substantially. But prices have not dropped with the sales.

"The message is simple," says a spokesman for the American Meat Institute in Chicago. "Meat is not cheaper, although less of it is coming to market."

Cattle receipts at 11 terminal markets during the first three days of this week were 16,000, compared with 76,000 for the same period last week.

And many meat cutters around the country were being laid off.

Grand Union's announcement came at a time when most food chains were in the process of computing their yields in time for Monday's deadline for posting them in their stores.

A spokesman for A & P, the nation's largest supermarket chain, declined to comment on Grand Union specifically, but said:

"It is our firm conviction that the weekend, or in the past, consumers will find that A & P prices are extremely competitive across the board, in the meat department as in the other departments of our supermarkets."

A spokesman for Jewel supermarket chain, headquartered in Chicago, said "There is no sign of that kind of action underway in the Chicago area."

Whether the decrease in meat prices at Grand Union stores would subsidize a decrease in Safeway's prices was not immediately clear.

However, Carolyn Hackett, spokesman for Safeway in Atlanta, Ga., refused to buy evidence meat items advertised at several stores there.

"Grocery store stock must be less than 8.00 in a long time," she said after taking a 98-cents a pound sale as it at one store.

Judge Throws Stones Back On Docket

WARREN, R.I. (AP)—A district court judge Thursday rejected a motion to dismiss charges now nearly nine months old against two members of the Rolling Stones rock group and three of their companions.

Two attorneys for the defendants contended the cases could not be heard in the district court because the defendants were going through customs at Green State Airport when an incident broke out that led to their arrest last July 20.

The attorneys claimed Warwick police had no jurisdiction to make an arrest because federal law supersedes state law.

Judge John E. Orton said he denied the motion because customs agents requested the defendants already had been through customs before the incident, can adopt results with a newspaper photographer.

The trial, which has been postponed three times, will be scheduled later when the defendants are available, Orton said.

The defendants, who were booked for a concert in Boston, pleaded innocent to charges of a special arrangement the night of the incident. They have not been present for any of the court hearings.

Keith Richards, the group's lead guitarist, and Stanley A. Moore both were charged with assault. Mick Jagger, leader of the group, and Marshall F. Chess both were charged with obstructing a police officer. Robert L. Frank, another member of the Stones' entourage, was charged with assaulting a uniformed police officer, a felony.

Thieu's Regime

Saigon's U.S. supported President Thieu is currently visiting the United States, in the words of Spiro Agnew "so that the American people can see what a patriot and scholar Thieu is." These are strange words for a man whose repression against the Vietnamese people is known around the world and whose regime holds approximately one-quarter million Vietnamese citizens in brutal prisons and tiger cages.

Repression and brutality have become trademarks of the present Saigon government--a regime backed by U.S. money, equipment and personnel. With massive U.S. aid, Thieu controls the third largest air force in the world and heads a million member conscript army. He has the back-up of 10,000 so called "civilian advisors", a U.S. paramilitary apparatus, U.S. planes and bases in Thailand, and the U.S. 7th fleet in Vietnam's coastal waters.

Resistance by the Vietnamese people to Thieu's terror may well be termed as enemy sabotage by the Nixon Administration and used as an excuse to retaliate. Any U.S. intervention, including the imposition of Thieu, is a violation of the right of the people of Vietnam to determine their own affairs. The American people must continue to demand that the U.S. get totally and unconditionally out of Southeast Asia.

Bail And Corruption

The present system of bail in the Commonwealth lends itself to corruption. The system is exceptionally unfair to the poor. They must wait in jail before trial because they lack funds to make bail. The system is run by each county, and there is little central coordination or control. The bail system does serve a useful purpose; it insures that defendants will appear for their trials. The method used to operate the bail system could be improved drastically.

At present, the bail system is supposed to work something like this: after you are booked at the station house someone authorized to take bail will set your bail. In the daytime, when court is in session your bail will be set in court. At night, bail is set by assistant clerks of the court. When setting bail, the judge or clerk should look at your previous record. It is harder to get bailed out at night. The assistant clerk of the court will usually give an estimate of the bail he will charge. If you can raise the bail, he will come down to the stationhouse. He will collect a fee of somewhere between six and ten dollars at night from you. (It's unreasonable to assume that a man would hike all the way to a police station in the middle of the night for nothing). After bail is set, you must hunt around for a way of meeting it. If you can deposit the full amount of the bail with the court, you can go free. Most defendants cannot meet the bail on their own and must rely on bondsmen. The bondsman will charge five percent of the bond; if the bail is $1000 then the bondsman will charge fifty dollars. The bondsman will keep a certain part of his fee and turn the rest over to an insurance company. The insurance company will cover him, should one of his clients default. There are some bondsmen who do not have the backing of an insurance company. Bondsmen who do have backing are technically called surety agents (about 85% of all bondsmen are surety agents). Many defendants are released on personal recognizance which means they don't have to produce any bail.

If you don't show for your trial and are out on bail, the bondsman has thirty days to find you. If he can't, then the District Attorney should begin proceedings against him to collect the full amount of the bond. During the thirty day period the bondsman and his agents can search for the defendant almost any way they wish. There are no legal restrictions placed on the way they conduct their search or return their client. In 1971 the Wall Street Journal reported that "there are no state laws governing bondsmen's power of arrest." He can do things a police officer cannot. Even if the bondsman cannot produce the defendant he might not have to pay the full amount of the bail. Often times the District Attorney will agree to accept a percentage of the original amount of bail.

Sometimes bondsmen will allow their personal prejudices to interfere with their work and obstruct the path of justice. He may refuse to give someone bail because his hair's too long. The interface between allowing his prejudices to interfere with his work and doing a good job is fuzzy. A bondsman must make a decision on granting bail on a person's occupation, age, address, standing in the community, and appearance. All these facts affect the probability of a defendant appearing for trial. So, the bondsman must use some fairly subjective criteria.

There have been some serious charges leveled against bondsmen. In the book Ransom, lawyer Ronald Goldfarb charges that some bondsmen are "loansharks," "former felons and generally repugnant characters." He further goes on to state that some bondsmen "contaminate the judicial process." It must be said that these generalities cannot apply to all bondsmen. Like all generalities they don't cover all cases; the question is how many cases they do cover.

The bondsman cannot be viewed as an all-corrupting influence. They are filling a job that the law requires and the public demands. Under the present system, they are a necessity. The insurance companies make a large profit of this system with few risks. Numerous proposals have been advanced to change the system. The use of personal recognizance is on the increase. A Percentage Bail Project was experimented with in Dorchester and Cambridge last year. Defendants would deposit five percent of their bail with the court. When they appeared for trial their money would be refunded. If they did not appear, they would have to produce the full amount of their bail.

Some problems with this new system are the same as the problems for the old system. Poor defendants have a harder time raising the necessary funds. The period before the trial is crucial in most cases. The defendant can discuss the case with his attorney and find witnesses much more easily if he is free. Defendants who remain in jail before their trial are found guilty more often than defendants who are free. The Percentage Bail Proposal would at least eliminate some of the expenses for the defendant.

Freaks!

Abnormalities are freaks. Mutations are freaks. Deviates are freaks. What is deviation? Well, first of all, it is a word (a word for weirds). End of first lesson in the structure of society.

I. The Second Lesson: How to forget your worries and "cool"

First of all, why do we need the weirds? Why are they not being put to death systematically? I mean, why not? They have a very strange tendency to upset people, is this not correct? If it is not correct, then why does this strident voice raised in anxiety upset you? Or does it?

Obviously, I'm asking a bunch of questions with no real answers that can be pinpointed. I might as well ask you what you are, correct? And isn't it aggravating to be confronted by a question you can't answer...and isn't it aggravating when you have an answer but some goon comes up to you and says, "Well, that isn't the way it's done." Death of invention, because you are stopped before you start, and if you are stopped enough, well then, what's the point in trying, y'know, because it's such a drag when you're not accepted, and let's just have a "good time".

II. YOU ARE ALL ROBOTS. YOU ARE ALL CONDITIONED MACHINES.

Repat (stop). Repeat...REPEAT... REGURGITATE... THROW UP... The electrode becomes firmly implanted in your skull. You hear the pleasure-pain principle so many times that. . .you actually... believe it. Now, you see, this is a problem, because even this is in itself, a form of fetish worship. Even if you believe in science, is it a real belief? Have you ever seen an atom split? Well, HAVE YOU? I thought as much, you goons. . .

But, of course, fooling around with nuclear energy is fun, and as a rampant spiritualist, I have to agree that there are things that exist that can not be sensed. There are, indeed, some things which are hidden from you... and that's the point: What are these people hiding from you? And, more importantly, WHY?

III. The Information Source

Do you believe what you read in the newspapers? what you hear on the radio? what you see on television? Are these people out to sell rather than tell? Yes, sir!

You see, there are certain essential facts that you never learn about these institutions which give things to you. Television is not free, nor is radio. In 1927, radio was commercialized at its birth. Now let the full implications of that hit you smack between the eyes. If, at that time, businessmen controlled it, then what goddamn chance did people ever have in changing it. Herbie Marcuse's idea about the gratification of sex through TV advertising (you know, that sexy woman propped up in front of the automobile) makes sense. And it ain't just exploiting women, kiddies--it's exploiting your minds. Here, look, I'll make a deal with ya: in exchange for your bucks, I'll promise ya cheap thrills. Waddya say, kid?

IV. "Fill out this questionnaire, and you'll answer all questions to our satisfaction..."

Now, of course, these gentlemen do ask us from time to time, but even in consumerism is the full meaning lost. There is the basic assumption that there is nothing wrong with the way we're doing things...look they even ask us questions about what they should. Why haven't you heard certain things...well it must not be popular. But remember, nothing is popular until it has a chance to be heard, and we just haven't heard about a lot of things. Why didn't you hear about B.B. King before Eric Clapton mentioned him? Established vs. non-established? An answer: false. B.B. King has been around for twenty years. The colonialist's money? You got it kid, right on the nasty.

V. The Conclusion

People always seem to want conclusions, but there are actually none. You make waves, and you do the best you can. And freaks are the ones who do the best they can. They may be looney, but that's controller's definition. You could go up to Orchard Hill and check out the music this weekend, and get an idea of what you've been missing, or you can turn off your circuits and play philosophy games. Shall we allow all the time, or are we going to become a bunch of printed circuits and players of monopoly games? That was, my friends a question...and freaks are good for questions. I wish you realization.

First meeting of Elwood Babbit: he likened his road to a bombed-out trail in Vietnam.

Exclusive: An Interview With LBJ

By Larry Carpman

(I was assigned to cover a lecture by a Mr. Elwood Babbit, a man I had previously absolutely no knowledge of. As it turned out the man deals with psychic phenomena and trance meditation and his lecture and demonstration proved to be very fascinating. So intriguing was the lecture that I found myself, compelled by the forces that be, to arrange an at home interview. The results of which follow.)

I believe (I think) that I spoke with the late President Johnson on Sunday March 18th 1973.

Elwood Babbit lives in a farm house tucked away beside a running stream that flows the length of a two mile long dirt road leading to his house. With the experience of riding in the back of a pick-up truck the length of the bumpy road impressed onto my hind side, I can now see how Babbit likens the road to "a bombed out trail in Viet Nam."

The first impression one gets of Babbit is that he is a lover of the animal world. Walking between the beautiful mongrel puppies would have been difficult enough without having to dodge the stray kittens that followed my footsteps. Just upon entering the house I heard the groans of a cow hidden from view in a shed beside the house. Thinking that I had seen the last of the dogs and the cats, it surprised me to find a few more of each species in the living room of the home.

"My daughter named all the dogs and cats, Babbit later told me,"and she keeps them all in good toe." He seemed proud of that; and well that he should with so many of them around.

Now, I've been in many living rooms in my almost twenty years on Earth but I car safely say that 'living' has never had better meaning than in the Babbit home. Surrounding the room are walls made from wooden slabs. I am not talking about the refined plywood type paneling that we are all familiar with but rather age marked lumber that is largely responsible for the warm feeling I got upon entering. Nailed to the lumber are various paintings and sketches of the Babbit family which seem to shout out to the visitor, "Welcome to our home, we're happy to have you."

The main obstacle in the living room is a

The Oscar Adventure

By Delivia O'Haviland

Hollywood always attempts but on its biggest production of the years, the Academy Awards, with zest and freshness. The 1973 Oscars flunked in both categories. America's moviegoers were treated to one of the most tired two hours ever produced. The awards opened delightfully with Broadway's wonderful Angela Lansbury dancing and singing with all the charisma she produced in Mame; however the delight stopped with Lansbury's production number. One might say that the velvet curtains of Broadway were sent to the cleaners after the Lansbury number and the chintz drapes of Hollywood were then hung with glee.

Of course the awards themselves were very well given, Cabaret copping eight awards including Bob Fosse for best director and Liza Minelli for Best Actress. These who were given the honor of presenting these oscars were, however, ill-chosen or the old standbys (Charlton Heston still is into his Moses act). The event was saved only by the beautiful Marisa Berenson whose presence in her emerald gown saved the eye from total boredom. The worst of the group was Racquel Welch followed closely by Clint Eastwood. After Ms. Littlefeather, the American Indian girl who passed on Marlon Brando's refusal of the Best Actor award, bravely and graciously spoke, Ms. Welch (One supposes she thought herself wity) commented that she hoped there were no more "causes" to be spoken. Well, with two Black actresses up for the Best Actress award, Ms. Welch once more displayed her sensitivity and intelligence. And though this is a decidedly sexist statement, Racquel's only asset is still silicone. Clint Eastwood's crack about John Ford cowboys deserved the boos and not Ms. Littlefeather.

As usual there was the little comic relief which is always caused by the mistakes of the performers. For instance Robert Duval's bursting into laughter when he read Shelley Winters' name off the list of Best Supporting Actress nominees. The camera flashed to Shelley, whose dagger eyes were, one is sure, shooting more bullets into him than the Mafia did in his role in The Godfather; and Connie Stevens' embarrassing sour note at the end of her song. The funniest scene ended the awards; John Wayne called everyone who had won or presented awards out on stage to sing "You Ought to Be in Pictures". It was a treat to see everyone clasped arm in arm, the "Family" so to speak of the movie industry, singing their hearts out. All of them: Newly rewed Robert Wagner and Natalie Wood happily crooning; Liv Ullman and Marisa Berenson stumbling over the English lyrics, and of course the Duke, as American as ever.

The Oscars failed in really producing the spectacular it wanted to create. The Disney tribute was no more than a repeat of those Ice Capade finales we have all seen, lots of Disney's characters prancing about to lots of Disney tunes. There wasn't a mention of Disney the man. The woman was mentioned however when the Academy bestowed its Humanitarian Award on Rosalind Russell whose bout with arthritis has aged her considerably; A touching moment (there is always at least one in every oscar telecast.) occurred when Mrs. Edward G. Robinson accepted a posthumous award for her husband. Unfortunately, the Academy never gave the well-deserved award to Mr. Robinson so that he could enjoy the honor.

Unbelievably there were good moments, particularly the Liza Minnelli win. For the first time in a few years, the award was given to someone who entirely deserved it. Liza is still the flawless performer of the year and she looked just fantastic seated next to her fiancee Desi Arnaz Jr. Joel Grey's oscar was another nice surprise as it seemed an almost sure thing that one of the Godfather nominees (Al Bacino, James Caan, and Robert Duval) would win.

Now begins the new wait for the 1974 Oscars, another year of attending all the new movies, making all our new judgments, and expecting another fresh, vital Academy Award presentation. We hope, we hope, we hope.

And What's Inside

"Phone rings/ door chimes/ in comes Company" begins the opening verse of the titled song to this breathtaking musical comedy which is being performed this weekend in Bowker Auditorium by the University Music Theater. The play, written by George Furth and Stephen Sondheim, is a musical exploration of the tattered nerve ends of marriage. It has won every major theater award in New York. Sondheim has won three Tony Awards in a row for his scores and this is one of them. For more see page thirteen.

Do you like Alice Cooper? Do you think he's cute and lovable, or disgustingly gross? On our record pages you'll find out what Gary Gomes and Mike Kostek think about him, as well as a few other heretofore untold secrets. Have you heard that the original Byrds are back together? We have, and Steve Feld wishes the whole thing never happened. It's up to you to find out why. Rounding out the pages are reports on Monty Python, an English comic who has committed himself to vinyl; and Garland Jeffreys, a new singer who isn't all that bad. Like we said, it's up to you to find out why.

The cowboy has been with us since the media of film began. The first narrative film is "The Great Train Robbery" and the Western remains one of the best-loved of genres. It's stars are a blend of the simple, home-spun, honest, and clear thinking popularized in the dime novels in the late Nineteenth centurv. From Porter to Hart to Wayne to Eastwood, the myth of the cowboy and the cowboy star has always fascinated audiences.

Beyond our exploration in psyche on page nine, here is an analysis of the Academy Awards on our left. Right on Racquel, no causes for you. More causes found in the inside include good plays (Company), good albums (Alice Cooper, The Byrds et all), good bets for the future in films (The Film Column) and good and bad bets for this Weekend (in Weekend in the back). A sole dissenter is the review of the new Franco Zefferelli (remember Romeo and Juliet?) which makes youthful nonsense out of the life of St. Francis of Assisi. No Bravo for Franco. By the way, astute paper watchers may be curious as to the identity of Moe DePalma. You can catch her tonight in the new play in Coolidge Lower—see Weekend for details.

Don't You, Don't You?

We Bet You Think This Page Is About You

By Howard Bloom
and Steve Ferber

Imagine directing a play that no one comes to see. Imagine giving a speech and not a soul comes to listen. Imagine writing a weekly column that nobody bothers to read!

Welcome to the club. We can imagine the latter situation very easily. And faced with this reality, we've decided to let you know just what we think of our non-audience. And believe us, we don't think too highly of you.

Are we crying because few, if any of you, read our column? Come on, wise up kids. We're not bothered by the fact that only a handful of people read our page. What gets us is that so many of you read no news at all. And when you do, thinking about it and its implications for you is the farthest thing from your mind.

You don't care to know what's going on. College students are a sorry lot. Most of you deserve to stare at a blank page today and every other Friday until you decide to straighten yourselves out.

How did your penchant for sleeping with your eyes open begin? Maybe it's your mother's fault. Remember how she used to tell you not to worry, not to be concerned, everything is gonna be alright? Mom sure did her job well. You don't even know what ITT means, let alone what the importance of the initials are. For all you know, ITT is just a misspelling of the neuter third person singular pronoun.

What exactly do you care about? Does anything interest you anymore? To tell you the truth, we are sick and tired of reading and writing about, in no particular order, Vietnam, the money crisis, food prices, POW's, and Watergate. Vietnam. Yick. How many columns, editorials, and feature stories have been written about that subject over the years? And what about the money crisis? The only money crisis you know about is trying to buy a beer at the Bluewall when you only have a quarter. You don't understand what the entire confusing deal is all about, and you don't care to either, do you? Ho hum.....

Exactly what are all (all one, all two) of you interested in? The Collegian subscribes to three terrific cartoons, and they don't take much time to read at all. Honest. The sports page is interesting, and the importance of the subject matter written about therein is just overwhelming. We mean, if the baseball team doesn't win its next game, we'll probably never be regarded as a great nation again. That would be too bad.

We think we know why you are so disinterested. Probably the FBI hasn't gotten around to bugging your phone yet. Most likely, one of life's little pleasures, pushing a shopping cart up and down your supermarket's aisles in search of non-existent bargains, has passed you by. You aren't interested because these matters are far removed from what affects you as you meander through your daily routine. In your ivory tower existence as a student, Watergate and Wounded Knee, just like getting killed in an auto accident, always happens to the other guy. So, as Alfred E. Neuman goes, so goes you. What me worry?

In truth fans, our MAD here's got it all wrong. Remember, we live in a democracy (hope everyone knew that). Yes, it's by the people, for the people, and in such a system the obligation to be an informed participant (not one who is totally oblivious) must be met.

So get interested (You can start by filling out the attached questionnaire) Know what's going on. The day might arrive when you'll be "the other guy."

It's quiz time kids. This is an identification problem. The question is: with what current boycott is this animal associated. Just turn this page upside-down for the answer. You've got 15 seconds to work on this problem, no cheating and no beefing. Good luck!

Answer: Man boycott

Look in the mirror...

Take a look around...

Now, relax with some heavy reading.

What Would You Like To Read About?

Instructions: Please fill out the following questionnaire and mail it to the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, Student Union, c/o Poor Richards (use campus mail, it doesn't cost a thing).

Our objective is to provoke some thought on the part of our readers or potential readers. So think a little. Then grab a Bic Banana and jot down your thoughts.

QUESTION 1 - Think of one political topic about which you know little but care to know more. List it here. _____

QUESTION 2 - What provokes you to read the news? (Check one or more)
Wanting to educate yourself _____ Curiosity _____
Something to do while eating lunch _____
Everyone else does it so..... _____
It's a good way to fill up free time _____

QUESTION 3 - If you had a choice between reading a political satire or an in-depth news study of a national problem, which would you read first? (Check one)
Satire _____ In-Depth Analysis _____

QUESTION 4 - When you read the news are you aware that you might not be getting the full story?
Yes _____ No _____

QUESTION 5- Do you care whether or not you get the full story? Do you search out more than one viewpoint?
Yes _____ No _____

QUESTION 6 - What reasons do you think underlie the continuing decline in news interest? (This question is designed to be the most thought-provoking of all, so give it some thought)

The next best thing to guessing what your audience cares to read about is to ask them. So CUT IT OUT (and send it in), will ya?

large wooden table capable of seating up to twelve people. The table seemed to me to be the main gathering point for all of Babbit's friends. Next to the table where I was sitting is a bookcase filled with such titles as: E.S.P. and Your Conscious, The Occult Life Of Jesus, and Astrology-A Cosmic Science.

Behind the table and next to the far wall as you walk in are two soft chairs, both showing their age. One has its stuffing exposed and seems to lose a good deal of it when anyone sits down. The other chair is a little better off but the day when it too will begin to lose its innards seems not far off. I must admit here, however, that I sat in the softest cushioned chair that I can remember.

Naturally one thinks of a fireplace in such a setting. Well, too be sure there was one. However, it was immediately apparent that it was not your ordinary everyday run-of-the-mill type fireplace: part of the Santa Claus shute was missing. A section of the fireplace seemed like it was simply chopped off to make it fit in the living room. Old ashes and a few new logs sat neatly in the middle of the hearth surrounded by half-burned paper. The fireplace went well with the wooden slabs along the walls. Both items combined provided a very friendly and welcoming atmosphere.

Connecting to the living room is the kitchen, which, if examined apart from the rest of the house, could easily be transposed into any modern apartment house. Appliances seemed fairly modern. There was plenty of counter space below and ample shelf room above. It is the type of kitchen "Suzy Homemaker" would love.

The phone rang.

Elma, Babbit's daughter, left her coloring books and raced her father to the phone.

"I'll get it daddy," she said with the excitement a child has when the telephone rings. It was Kevin, a friend of the family. Babbit rose from his chair and answered the phone.

"When ya' comin' in Kevin? The road is ou' down at Foster's place."

Babbit and his close friend and biographer, Charles Hapgood, were waiting for a few more friends to arrive to discuss with me the basics of meditation and psychic phenomena. While we were waiting Hapgood played a psychic game with Babbit. If Milton Bradley ever got a hold of it they would probably name it something like, "Dead or Alive". But to Babbit and Hapgood it was "in the body" or "in the spirit".

Hapgood had previously placed the names of people that were alive ("in the body") and deceased ("in the spirit") in small envelopes. Babbit proceeded to hold each one tightly and with an intense stare toward the middle of the room proclaimed whether the person was "in the body" or "in the spirit". With each envelope Hapgood wrote down the answer on the back.

The results of the game were not revealed, leaving the skeptics saying, "I told you so." But the afternoon had just begun and my visit was by no means over.

The people we had been waiting for (a University professor with some friends) had arrived and we were all greeted to coffee and cookies around the wooden table. Babbit questioned me first.

"Well, what do you want to know?" he asked in a casual tone.

"I'd be happy if you just talked among yourselves," I said knowing that I could write a story simply by listening to the people who know all about trance meditation and spirit communication. This idea was not accepted, however, and the question was thrown back at me quickly.

"Well, after my previous news article came out people came up to me and asked if I "believed all that garbage". I told them that I wasn't sure because I didn't have enough background in the subject."

From there the conversation continued for about one and a half hours.

Babbit explained that with the combination of spirit, body, and soul one can achieve happiness."

It was, at the time, a fairly complex statement to swallow, let alone digest.

Charles Hapgood with his characteristic scientific approach explained a few medical tests that Babbit allegedly went through to prove his abilities.

"A few years ago we took Elwood to a hospital in Keene, New Hampshire," said Hapgood. "A Dr. Cohen tested Elwood's blood pressure under trance state. Elwood's blood pressure changed with every change in spiritual entities that Elwood had in his trance. There were four different changes in blood pressure which Dr. Cohen called 'impossible'."

Hapgood continued to describe what he called the "medical evidence" that proves Babbit's capabilities. Several brain wave tests were conducted during Babbit's trance state according to Hapgood. During one of the trances being tested Babbit brought back the spirit of Albert Einstein. Babbit's normal brain waves and those during the Einstein trance allegedly differed drastically. Dr. Bridge, who performed the brain tests, according to Hapgood could not believe the results.

"Elwood blew the machine apart," Hapgood said with the excitement of a sportscaster.

". . . I was sure I didn't have enough background in the subject. . ."

• • • • • •

"Basically what I try to do is show people who they are, where they are, and where they are going", said Babbit.

• • • • • •

"With spirituality, said Babbit, "people can find the right pathway where they should go." I questioned him asking how or when one knows one has found the right path.

"You'll get a gut feeling, you'll know its right," he said.

"You will become more sensitized to the needs of your own inner spirit with spirituality," said Hapgood.

At this point Babbit interjected with one of his many amazing anecdotes. In fact, it almost seems that he is giving the skeptics something to use as ammunition in their argument. Some of his stories and funny lines (some perhaps worthy of a Johnny Carson monologue for whatever that's worth) seem to take away from the seriousness of his work. Perhaps he is making a desperate attempt to show that he is, in fact, human. He began his story:

"One of the entities that came to visit said that the problem with humanity is that it has constipated brains and diarrhea of the mouth. Perhaps it was right."

At his point Hapgood asked Babbit if he was ready to go into trance.

"Well, why not." Babbit spoke in his usual jolly manner. He said that he thought the late President Johnson would speak to us. What does one say to President Johnson??????

I asked Babbit as he rose from his chair if he ever got bored or tired from continually going into trances, oftentimes simply to try to prove to people (like myself) that he is, in fact, gifted.

"This house is like Rt. 91 anyway. People are always here. We enjoy it."

"But, he continued, "when I go to visit people I want to be treated as a normal person. This is probably why we don't go many places and why I am up here in the mountains."

Just as Babbit finished speaking a dog began to howl and the cows outside hidden in the shack began to grown as if to attest to the fact that Babbit is indeed hidden deep in the mountains.

The Sunday crowd of thirteen people filed slowly into the den, the room Babbit does most of his trances in. Hapgood set up the usual number of taperecorders for the trance. Every trance Babbit does is always taped, but Babbit himself never listens to the tapes.

"He doesn't want the tapes to influence him in any way," a friend later told me.

Our man sat himself behind an old wooden desk directly in front of all the microphones. He looked as if he was some famous star of stage and screen or an important politician getting set to give a news conference. The microphones were there the reporters were ready and the crowd watched intently. Babbit seemed comfortable somehow in a straight back wooden chair.

There was absolute silence in the room. So quiet in fact a dog's sneeze brought attention to everyone's eyes.

The deliberate and heavy breathing of Babbit was obvious. Noise came from his nostrils as his chest expanded and contracted with a definite rhythm.

Babbit's lips moved and his mouth puckered. His chest kept up the same pace. In and out. In and out.

One of Babbit's friends sneezed rather loudly and another coughed a few times. Babbit's breathing got heavier. The noise meant nothing.

Again his lips moved distinctly with no sound and his mouth puckered.

Suddenly Babbit moved briskly in his chair. Snap! The taperecorders were turned on.

Babbit's first words were those of his lecture guide, Dr. Fisher. Dr. Fisher is the spiritual entity that Babbit uses to analyze and predict the future for someone present during the trance. Fisher also introduces each new entity.

Dr. Fisher is witty and very articulate. His speech is sophisticated and well refined. He uses the type of speech one would not generally expect from a simple farmer hidden in the woods. He began:

"I wish to give you some background on what is happening with this transmission with President Johnson. Mr. Johnson has worked in a very deliberate way to communicate his spirit to the world."

People who know Babbit well stared at the man and listened to the voice of Dr. Fisher. It is a voice they hold as prophecy and truth. It continued with Babbit's lips moving distinctly with every letter.

"Mr. Johnson wants to have the world know that he is still interested in the political and economical problems of the United States. There are a few skeptics in this room but we are not concerned whether you believe or disbelieve. We, in our interrogation of this spirit certainly uphold the love and tenderness that this man displays." Dr. Fisher concluded his introduction. The taperecorders were turned off.

Babbit's head tilted to one side as if it was hardly attached to his neck. For a moment—silence.

Then, without any warning Babbit began to breathe heavier again. His lips moved and as before his mouth formed an "O" shape.

"The lip movement is caused by the brain trying to gain control of the incoming spirit," explained Hapgood.

Babbit moved swiftly in his chair causing the chair to move a few inches. Snap! The taperecorders are turned on. Lyndon began to speak.

"I really appreciate entering into the citizenry of the United States. I feel I'm welcome. I thank you for allowing me to speak to you."

As Johnson spoke I found myself listening to a voice, but not really imagining the late president with large ears to be the speaker. Nevertheless, I listened intently.

"To you I do not seem like LBJ and I can well understand any skeptical attitude. But I enjoy coming to you through this medium. I speak to you because I am still concerned with the United States."

"What I miss most of all, continued Johnson, "is Ladybird and my walks with Walter Cronkite." He went on for a while relating various times when he and Cronkite walked about his Texas ranch. "He's a man I hold in great esteem", said Johnson.

A quick look around the room found Babbit's Sunday company, many with their heads bowed, listening intently to the trance. There was one exception, however. Babbit's daughter, Elma, seemed very bored with the whole thing. She was continuously turning and looking about. It seemed as though trance meditation was so much a part of her life that she simply accepted it without much avid interest.

Johnson spoke briefly about his presidency.

"It was not my aim to be president. I wanted the quietude of my ranch. The ranch to me was the reality of living. To be truthful I gave up during my presidency. I was constantly attacked by the opinions of men who I thought were friends."

Johnson continued for about thirty minutes speaking mainly about how technology has made life "uncomfortable" for the majority of Americans in some manner and about present political problems calling the Viet Nam ceasefire "a diplomatic maneuver". In a note of levity he recalled how he enjoyed speeding in a car but was quick to say that he never got arrested.

After Johnson concluded his transmission Dr. Fisher returned to predict and analyze personal questions from those present. He advised one girl to improve her health picture and suggested to a man that he not become a sex education teacher.

Well, what does this all mean?

One could say that the trance is all an act. One could say that Babbit read all kinds of books on President Johnson and about the many other entities that he has brought back. (And to be sure it would be a helluva lot of reading. Babbit has communicated with over 100 spirits). If, indeed, I discover at some future time that the whole thing is in fact fabricated (something I do not believe at this time) then as a witness of two trances I would immediately call the Movie Academy and ask that the award for best actor be given to Elwood Babbit at the next ceremony. (I wouldn't give it to him now though-I think Marlon Brando deserved it).

Another skeptical attitude toward Elwood Babbit could be that the man is just into it for the fame and fortune that his hobby could bring him. Fame and Fortune??? How many of you have ever heard of the man before this story?? Babbit is by no means after the monetary possibilities of his work. He accepts no payment for lectures or demonstrations. Leading the life of a simple farmer is Babbit's living. He believes in Jeanne Dixon (You've all heard of her) but would never want her notoriety.

"Ninety percent of the spiritual movement is fraudulent, Babbit once told me, "but the ten percent that is genuine is all you need."

I found myself that Sunday afternoon not wanting to make a full commitment; not wanting to say that I definitely without a doubt believe in what one of friends called "that garbage". Who knows what it will take for that full realization to come. Another trance session maybe? A few more sessions with Dr. Fisher? Reading some legitimate books on the subject?

"We're gonna' send a tape of the trance to Ladybird," said one of Babbit's friends as people began filing out of the crowded den and back into the livingroom.

I began to look around for my coat when Babbit tapped me on the shoulder and asked if I would stay for supper. Well, having the thought of stopping at one of the "indigestion unlimited" places along Route 9 for supper in mind and after spotting a huge plate of some of the finest whole wheat pancakes sitting on the wooden table, the choice was simple.

With no one having left after the trance the dinner table was pretty well crowded. No one seemed to mind, however, as the maple syrup and the apple sauce was passed around like the ancient "Hot potato" game. The dinner conversation consisted mainly of ways to start courses in the University on spirit communication and meditation.

"We should get something meaningful started by the Fall," Hapgood said all

Theater

Make This "Company" Yours

By Robert Nesti

Company, at Bowker through tomorrow night, is a wonder of a show. A sleek and stunning musical-comedy about the tattered nerve ends of urban life and marriage that explores its subject matter with an innovative design, a spunky wit, an acute tenderness, and an unflinching eye. It will have audiences doing more than simply humming with great Stephen Sondheim songs when they leave the theater; although these are among the most inventive and delightful theater songs written in decades and are damn hummable, they don't merely pass from ear to mouth.

When musicals attempt to say something they usually put their collective hoofs in their mouths. Company's a beautiful exception; in its current production it moves breathlessly across the stage and makes its home truths about love and marriage with exhilerating ease. It's a fun show bursting with energy and intelligence. If you haven't picked up your tickets yet, finish with these superlatives later and bolt to the Fine Arts Council Box Office in Herter Hall immediately. If you dont you'll probably miss one of the best written, best staged, and best performed productions of this year.

The spatially designed plot concerns a bachelor in his mid-Thirties named Robert and the assorted adventures he has in the company of his close married friends. Robert's everyone's best friend who's really nowhere at all. His friends all love him but his third person approach to life gets on their nerves. To paraphrase the play's bitch Mother Joanne, Robert's outside looking in the window while everyone was inside dancing.

He drifts in and out of everyone's lives. The play begins with a surprise birthday party and ends with it, between the two scenes come Robert's observations of the six crazy married couples he knows and loves which, in the end, changes him. First he meets Sarah and Harry–she's dieting and he's on the wagon and poor Bobby ends up on the floor with them when Sarah demonstrates her karate. He drops by the terrace apartment of Susan and Peter who are getting a divorce, although they are perfectly happy living together in a situation that seems left over from a great Thirties screwball comedy film. Then there is Jenny and David who have never been high, a situation which gracious Robbie remidies much to the couple's chagrin. We're too old, they complain. Robert's girlfriends meet him on a park bench and bewilder and delight him. And he's best man for Amy and Paul, who have been living together for years but when they make final moves to legalize their relationship, Amy panics and wants out. In the end there's Jeanne and Larry who knocks thing home for Bob in the drunken reverie of a late night discotheque.

It's a musical all about human associations and the refuge we find in each other which, in the end, is all we have. It's themes are highly adaptable and interpretations vary; some critics have seen it as misanthropic in its views of marriage, others have found it fresh and honest. The book, by actor-playwright George Furth, captures all the cool and kinky humor of city living. The book was originally written as a series of playlets for actress Kim Stanley and has enough strength to stand on its own. He's a playwright with a wonderful sense of humor and timing and, with the help of songwriter Stephen Sondheim, links the various vignettes into an organic identity. Sondheim is simply the best composer-lyricist currently writing for the theater today. His words and music are the finest to be found in musicals since the great Cole Porter shows of the Thirties. Company is his most perfectly realised score to date (excluding perhaps the very recent A Little Night Music which I have yet to hear). Sondheim has written that he writes in a consistant style whose tone varies from show-to-show. His style is always sophisticated and sharp, and in Company it touches upon its most comfortable ground to date. The songs have a metallic sounding, syncopated quality; the lyrics have a transparent sheen. Take these lines from "You Could Drive A Person Crazy," which Bobby's emsaparated girlfriends sing a la the Andrews sisters:

When a person's personality is personalbe
He shouldn't ought to sit like a lump
It's harder than a matador coercin' a bull
To try and get you off of your rump
So single and attentive and attracted a man
Is everything a person could wish
But turning off a person is the act of a man
Who likes to pull the hooks out of fish.*

Sondheim invents word games in his spare time and every lyric here plays with language with a precision that recalls the great rhymes of not only Porter, but also of the late Noel Coward. Sondheim has won three straight Tony Awards for his scores for Company, Follies, and A Little Night Music; perhaps they should make it an annual event and forget the competition. His words and music are treats and Company contains his most appealing show music.

All this would be in vain if this production could not sustain the high quality of its material. It's a difficult show, something unusual for most musicals. Usually the most effortless roles are laboriously botched; in Company, the most complex of musicals, is effortlessly played. The direction by Tom Leak is attractive and energetic. The musical opens with one of the most exciting numbers ever conceived, and the play proceeds to take off and never touch ground. Tom Leak has a wonderful eye for blocking scenes. Company has a great visual appeal and sense of movement. The cast dances with exuberance, whether it be the sweeping, sensuous ballet across the stylized representation of the New York skyline or a down-to-earth, show-stopping soft shoe, the cast succeeds admirably. The choreography by Andrea Watkins is perfect. The set designed by Arthur Ridley suggests the vertical complexities of urban design and is wonderfully pliable to the changing scenes and moods. At one moment it's an apartment terrace, the next it's a choir stall. The wardrobe by Ruth Seligman is fast and smart looking, simple and appropriate. The lighting by Don Boucher swirl in and out in perfect pitch with the stage events. Technically Company is designed with a great deal of imagination and skill.

The performances are splendid. Robin Swados carries the painfully unobstrusive role of Robbie with a great deal of warmth and low humor. He's especially fine in the play's climatic song "Being Alive", which he makes his own. Mary Lee DeRose and Stephen Driscoll have a wonderful comic rapport as Sarah and Harry; her best moment is her ecstatic exercise in food voyeurism in the first scene, his is as one half of the exciting "Tick Tock" dance duet in which he shares honors with Karen Meister. Karen is also funny with Rolf Carlson as the soon-to-be-divorced-couple-wanting-to-be-single, Susan and Peter. Robert's dope experimenting friends Jenny and David are charmingly sketched by Karen Fohrhaltz and Phil Smart, Avis Yurn and Luis Castresana are terrific as Amy and Paul. Avis should receive some award for even attempting to sing Sondheim's most ridiculously difficult, but delightful songs "Getting Married Today." The second act honors are stolen by Jeana Reines as the bitch Joanne who puts the auditorium on its end in here knock out interpretation of "The Ladies Who Lunch." Lee Meffet is fine as her rich, but henpecked husband, and so are Charlie McAuliffe and Moonyean Field (what a terrific name) as Sheilah and George. As Bobby's three crazed girlfriends Sandy Denatini, Pam Demers, and Carol Nan Roth are great, either individually in separate numbers or collectively in the wonderful forties-style "You Could Drive A Person Crazy." The ensemble playing has verve and precision. Sondheim writes part-writing which slips under, over, and all around the songs and I couldn't catch one slip-up from the cast in the production numbers.

I could have quibbles but they are so meaningless that they hardly apply. Even in New York the play had its problems. Although it's a bit early for a spring b-o quiet we will toss one to the crew at this production and, rather than lavish more praise, I'll simply say make Company yours. It's one of the best musical plays of the past fifteen years and is carried off here with style and imagination in a production that goes beyond any expectation.

By the time we finished eating it was about 8 o'clock and people began leaving. We said our good-byes and our thank yous and left in another pick-up truck; this time, though, we sat inside.

I left Elwood Babbit's house with a feeling that I had set out upon something totally new and strange tome and had done so with an open mind. I learned a lot about one man in one afternoon. Babbit, whether you believe or disbelieve in what he is doing, is a supreme person. He is a man who sincerely lives to help people. Trances are very tiring and energy consuming. Yet, if there is a need for someone to consult Dr. Fisher, Babbit will oblige.

A fine man is he.

The Byrds

By Steve Feld

The last good thing Roger McGuinn did was to write "Chestnut Mare", which was over two years ago. He has watched and patiently stood by while his group, the Byrds, went through countless personal changes, finally ending up with a band of the most banal and unimaginative kind that mercifully brokeup just recently. He had nothing to lose with an album by the original Byrds.

David ("Change Partners") Crosby is a musical gadfly who hops around playing with all the many friends he made years ago selling dope. McGuinn kicked him out of the Byrds for being too opinionated on stage, making obscene cracks about Trish Nixon and the sort. He can be counted on for a few good tunes a year providing someone can get him to sit down, shut up, and write songs. His last album, with Graham Nash, proved to be little more than a string of recyceled material that reflected little ambition and no advancement. He had nothing to lose with an album by the original Byrds.

Chris Hillman, after his stint with the Byrds, went on to help form the Flying Burrito Brothers, a group that met with a large critical acceptance but made a minimal amount of money. Lately he could be found playing second fiddle to Steve Stills and Manassas, considerably influencing Stills with his brand of country-rock. He remained aloof while Stills (by no means the easiest guy to work with) held in the reins. He had nothing to lose with an album by the original Byrds.

Gene Clark and Michael Clarke have remained relatively obscure; Clark playing bluegrass with a few friends and making some negligible records, Clarke, the drummer, was included in the Burrito package. He has become notorious for punching Chris Hillman in the kisser during an old Byrds recording session. In any case, they had nothing to lose with an album by the original Byrds.

Come to think of it, no one had anything to lose with an album by the original Byrds, and that's why this album is here today, conceived and executed by five veteran musicians at their nadir. Their highly-publicized rendezvous on Byrds is enough to evoke sympathy from even the most loyal Byrdmaniac. Of the eleven songs on this album, two come out sounding like anything good, and one of them, "For Free", was written by Joni Mitchell, whose songs make a perfect vehicle for Crosby's meandering style. The other is "Full Circle", a Gene Clark song reminiscent of the Eagles' "Take It Easy." The remainder is dismal.

It's 1973 and Neil Young's the closest we got to Bob Dylan, so the boys do two of his: "Cowgirl in the Sand", which they simply should have known better, and "(See the Sky) About to Rain", a song on a bootleg of Neil's that sounds like an overworked version of "Heart Of Gold." McGuinn continues to disgust with his pair: "Born to Rock 'n' Roll" is an up-tempo "I Shall Be Released" blatant enough to hopefully motivate Dylan enough to sue, and "Sweet Mary", a stupidly simple dirge.

Crosby insists that "Laughing" was written especially for the Byrds, so the song, already on his solo album, is included for no other reason than economy. "Long Live the King", a Crosby original, nas possibilities stunted by its abrupt brevity. McGuinn digs out his trusty 12-string Rickenbacker, in addition to Crosby's 12-string, on Hillman's "Things Will Be Better", co-written with Dallas Taylor (exdrummer for the ex-group Crosby, Stills, Nash & Young). The familiar Byrds sound is there, but the song, as is the case with Hillman's other, "Borrowing Time", is shallow and flimsy. The one remaining cut, Clark's "Changing Heart" sounds like a Graham Nash reject.

So now McGuinn's got to start worrying where he's going to get a new band, Crosby will lie back on a siesta before he changes partners once again, Hillman's got to decide whether or not to put up with Stills anymore, and the others will have to find another way to remain on the scene. This album could well be overlooked sans a worry ("Full Circle" will get radio exposure) because there is nothing memorable on it.

Alice Cooper

By Gary Gomes and Mike Kostek

How are you and Alice getting along? Is the separation permanent, or have you learned to cope? Do you still think Alice to be irrelevant? Irreverent? Juvenile? Maybe, but I beg your indulgence here as I would like to identify Alice Cooper as one of the more interesting and important sociological developments of recent times. You heard me.

I can remember a time when I absolutely hated Alice Cooper, and everything it (he/she/they) stood for. No let me finish. It's important to me. Like I mean, here are these crumbs, corrupting and decadent. Sensationalism - a dirty word to most rock journalists, as is politics. "Like, we're just interested in the music, y'know", and then they'd start talking about sincerity, ala James Taylor.

Well, glad to say, such sincerity (false, I might add) seems to be fading. In addition, I refuse to dump on anything I don't understand, and I must admit, the first time I heard about Alice, I did not comprehend the situation as it is. Ergo, hatred ensued.

However, I must say that "Billion Dollar Babies" is extremely well-played rock. It meets its own terms on playing as well as theatrics, and in points, it's reminiscent of those good old days of the Mothers and the Who (listen to "Elected"). The bass player, in particular, is imaginative.

So what is this Billion Dollar Babies? Quite simply, punk rock'n'roll at its best. Alice Cooper's popularity (They've currently been voted top group of the World – that's right -- in New Musical Express, Britain's largest popular music newspaper) is something one shouldn't ingore, because these punks, y'know, the younger kids who like them, will be around when we don't have time to boogie anymore (we'll all be working, right?). Anyroad, if Alice Cooper are fakes, they're honest fakes, which is more then you can say about a lot of rock bands who are up there on stage.

Alice must have been sprawled in a large puddle of Jack Daniels when he erupted with the following: "Billion Dollar Babies is a reflection of just what the album title implies, that the group's current success has afforded us the freedom and environment, to the extent of overindulgence in many fashions, to put together a total representation of ourselves as being the by-product of the affluent society from which we come."

If you were able to cruise through that safely, you should then be able to stand back and realize that there is no band more media-conscious and self-conscious than this one.

What we've got here is a boozing band weaned completely on TV and suburbia that happens to be, outside of Rod Stewart, the only group that manages to bridge the energy gap between the 14-year olds and the 20-year olds. Stones fans, Who fans, Butterfield fans, Ry Cooder fans, Zeppelin fans, Kinks fans, Gram Parsons fans and even some Cecil Taylor groupies can sit together comfortably on Alice's side. The Coopers have emerged as the most important 'big' recording artist around, in terms of sales and mass appeal. Still, there is doubt about Alice's lasting qualities. Many worried Beaners come to me with Hopeless Nis in their eyes and ask me, "Will It Last?" This insecurity is perhaps a sign of their creeping senility, or else is indicative of their awareness that more than any other popular band, Alice Cooper is based on Flash. Billion Dollar Babies is 40:51 of flash.

Alice's albums have a sleek, well-produced veneer of sound that covers up a lot of their shortcomings. They're derivative as hell, but you'd never know it without really looking for it. You just feel uneasy. They even parody their riff thievery, playing such obvious Hendrix, Beatle and Goldfinger cops that no one can miss them. About the most original musical schtick that Alice has developed is the use of an orchestra or mellotron playing behind them in the studio. Not for syrup or tenderness, but rather for a hard background to bounce their riffs off. Nobody claims Alice is really doing anything new they're just doing something well.

And imagine the social implications rife in this band of freaks (not too many fit that title these days) appearing on national TV and moving millions of albums. Warners took every opportunity they could to give us the magic news about Babies, that it was a million dollars before it was released. "Shipping RIAA certified gold." So think of all those 14-year olds with their new albums, finding a billion dollar bill inside, replete with naked sluts on one side, a squared-away populace cheering a giant missle on the other. We, of course, know all that, of course, naturally, but what about those kids? It's a far different effect than Bobby Vee, Elvis Presley or Babe Ruth had.

So Billion Dollar Babies sails in and brings it just as the other records do. Where School's Out has its empty movements of 'show' music in it, and Killer seldom stopped trying to bite you, Babies does have a little of It All for us.

You get a stealthy, supremely confident opener with "Hello! Hooray!". The orchestra moves this piece along and gives Alice a place to stand and shout "I feel so Strong." One of the best show openers and stage setters in years, it is a sultry updating of the traditional show biz trooper song combined with the peculiar hard-nosed (flat-nosed) reality involved with Alice's mixture of Art and Life onstage.

You've probably all heard "Elected" on the radio, but in living stereo the song unfolds a few details that didn't come across on WHYN. It starts with Hendrix's "Dolly Dagger" riff. They know it, we know it, and it's only used once, so it's more of a tribute than a steal. The orchestra slides in on the second chorus, and the brass section really takes over. All in all, it's a fairly successful remake of the "Reflected" cut from their first album.

The title cut sounds like T. Rex would if they were good. Donovan comes out of one speaker, Alice the other, and somehow it works. Alice Cooper has always been a guitar-oriented band. There are few solos, but the dual guitars usually provide the direction and dynamics of the songs. Mike Bruce and Glen Buxton, the two guitarists, play mostly long, linear chord progressions that drone a lot. This also leads to a sense of insecurity about the band, as flashy chords just don't sound as 'musical' as flashy picking. Most guitarists, when they're learning to play, lean heavily on chording (Peter Townshend, for example). Although it can be and usually is used for trickery and deceit, chording, used properly, is as efficient and dynamic as the picking (Peter Townshend, for example). Make no mistake, Bruce and Buxton can play, and with grace and skill.

"Unfinished Sweet" is a "Black JuJu" type of song, at least in its structure, with a powerful opening chorus, a long, quiet, building interlude, and a triumphant return to the power. This particular fantasy about going through changes in the dentist's chair is amusing but don't think about it too much.

Alice is apparently getting bored with all the nonsense he has to put up with from a lot of people, as "No More Mr. Nice Guy" points out -- y'know the rumours in the newspapers, etc. "They say he's sick, he's obscene." and actually he's right. A culture usually sees (its own sickness) in those who it labels sick. So, is Alice Cooper to be held to blame for the mirror images he casts? I think not. There's something basically wrong if more people get offended by Alice Cooper's stage act, than being upset by the conditions which forced us into the current mess we're in.

Alice has carried one character throughout their albums, and he winds up on here in a flashback to his early proselytism in "Generation Landslide". Alice slides in and out of his snide TV voice and plays some fine harp on this younger generation takeover.

"Mary-Ann" has very sweet and nostalgic piano backing, and is a love song which is a little bit different. To give you a clue, take out your Alice Cooper decoding rings, and think of the name Alice Cooper, and remember the song is sung to Mary-Ann. Got it? Good, dumplings.

"Sick Things" and "I Love The Dead" seem at first to be all-too-obvious attempts to be weird, but they both succeed to certain degrees. The howling audiences that Alice surrounds himself with are far more twisted than anything this band could self-consciously dream up, and they indeed are the "Sick Things".

"I Love The Dead" is not a pagan to a certain West Coast combo, but rather rock's introduction to necrophelia, and it almost works. Alice gives a good performance here, phrasing the lyrics beautifully and pacing the song well. He evokes the unworldly scene right away: "Cadaver eyes upon me see (long pause, then a careless, bass voice) "nothing". Then the chorus, then a cinematic break where we can see Alice tearing through graveyards and morgues. Another controlled chorus, and things build slowly. Alice is huffing and puffing all over the echo chamber, the orchestra springs into the frame, and things are getting out of hand. "I LOVE THE DEAD/BEFORE THEY'RE CHO-LO.?THEIR BLUING FLESH FOR ME TO HOLD. CADAVER EYES UPON ME SEE..."Alice stops his howling while the orchestra pops into a climactic finishing riff, then Alice intones calmly, "nothing". It doesn't quite do it all, but it's a laudable attempt.

Alice Cooper is young, fairly talented musically, and very popular. What are you going to do? Retreat to the Rolling Stones? Hah! I think Alice's group of lads has got them beat. If you want to beat me over the head, I'm usually in the Collegian offices on Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons. Before any violence occurs, however, think about it, please? Thank you.

Out of this comes what? Rock, 1970's style. Are we sick? Callous beyond recall? Unable to be shocked? No, we're finally coming to grips with a few boogiemen.

Monty Python

By Gary Gomes

Lovely, lovely, vulgar, rude, whatever. Humour (note British spelling) exists in the ear of the listener. I find this album rude, disgusting, silly, irrelevant, pretentious (has anyone yet to describe what the hell that word means in terms of music or records), pointless in attack. . .in short, it's my type of comedy album. Whether or not it's anybody else's has yet to be determined.

Suppose you were to walk in some agency that specialized in arguments, verbal abuse, and "being hit on the head lessons"? What would you do? Complain? Not bloody likely -- especially if you were paying for it.....

Side one whips through various states of insanity, starting off with seeing how well a person can deal with rude noises, then moving swiftly into a sequence about that legendary hero Dennis Moore, who explains that he's a very good shot, giving in detail how many hours a week he practices, which then deteriorates into a theme from – you guessed it, or maybe you didn't – "Robin Hood", which continues to deteriorate at odd times through the side. In semi-rapid succession follows "The Money Programme" and "Australian Table Wines", which gives the relative merits of aforementioned wines for regurgitation and defensive purposes.

You walk by the argument clinic and into a gentleman who wants to buy a license for his pet fish, Eric. After giving various defences of his sanity, he decides to show the licenser that he is not "looney" (pronounced "lieu knee") by catapulting into "Eric the Half-a-Bee" song, which is about, well, it's about his pet half-a-bee. It's about the length of a single record, as it was released in England. Now, I ask you honestly -- why the bleedin' 'ell not? Side one ends with a man named "Smoke Too Much" ("Well, you better cut down then!" "Huh?") who proceeds in driving a man at a travel agency crazy enough to have him scream that the record be taken off. Skeeratch sliiip.

With fear gnawing at my heart, I flipped over to the second sight, cautiously scanning the notes written by a Harley Street Dentist. I set the needle down and waited.

Nothing happened.

When I turned on the record player again (hee, hee, silly me!), my ears were assaulted anew, this time by two quiz programs in a row, one based on all the old television quiz programs. Next, a journey into the unknown by route of a "Massage" from the Swedish Prime Minister.

Cutaway into a brief sojourn of theories on the bronto-saurus (thunder lizards, they were), given by an elk -- I mean Anne Elk, who won't shut up, and succeeds in getting herself shot by a frustrated host.

Next, a poetic tribute to the Yangstse River by British soccer goalees, with appropriate analysis by England's top coaches. This builds to a frenetic finale of a fight song for the Yangstse.

"How To Do It", an insipid children's program (made, undoubtedly, for insipid children), follows, which tells the little devils how to solve the problems of the world in three short steps. Sounds pretty familiar. "A Minute Passed" hits new heights of inventive redundancy. And then. . .possibly the most historic point on this album, the first recording of a full eclipse of the sun.

Because the eclipse is cancelled, we get to here a tape recording of Alistair Cooke (of Alistair Cooke's America) being attacked by a duck. Then we are privileged to hear the scream of an ant magnified thousands of times, with an incredibly enthusiastic host on the "Wonderful World of Sounds".

According to this promo copy I received "Side 2, Track 9 is unsuitable for airplay". I'll play it safe here, because I don't want to upset the poor F.C.C., and I'll assume that it's also unsafe for reviewing. Picture a whacked-out Marty Feldman, who had his own television program this summer (one of the finer moments in higher education on T.V.), and you might know what I mean. I'm not even certain myself as to what I mean.

This entire album strikes me as a mixture between Firesign Theatre (without the high social commentary) and the goon shows which appeared in Britain in the early days of television. I could argue the point that I think British humour is more subtle and less self-consciously profound than is American humour and satire. And more sophisticated (if that means anything). But I won't. Now listen, I've told you before: I'm not allowed to argue with you until you've paid me....

Garland Jeffreys

By Kevin Pelletier

The man's name is Garland Jeffreys, and he writes some easily enjoyable, unaffected music. A complete unknown to my ears before the arrival of this album, Jeffreys is receiving the usual promotional attention: "important new singer-songwriter, he'll make you sit up and take notice, blah, blah, blah" ad infinitum. The man doesn't need all that bullshit being built around him. He is certainly no great new musical shaman, but rather a simple, direct, very sensitive young individual who deserves notice on his own terms, on the basis of what he has to say through his music.

Needless to say all the material here is original, and on the whole it is quite satisfying and very catchy at times. The usual array of super studio men (Dr. John, David Bromberg, and Bernard Purdie, to name a few) turn in the usual excellent backup performance; Alan Fredman in particular displaying perfect control over acoustic and slide guitars on several of the cuts. Jeffreys himself plays simple, unfrilled acoustic guitar, and I like to think that he sounds like Leon Russell would if he had any balls. His range is limited but Jeffreys does sing quite smoothly and convincingly throughout.

"Ballad Of Me" starts the album off on a rather awkward note. Bang! Right away he's pouring his life story out to us, and this caught me off guard at first hearing. With repeated listenings I'm more accustomed to Jeffreys' very personal writing style, but still I feel the song should have been placed elsewhere on the LP. All in all, though, it's an honest, unpretentious personal statement that stands up on its own. "Harlem Bound" is the gem; 3:48 of all-out, unrelentless funk. Purdie sparks the cut with some superb drumming, plus congas and background streetcorner vocals by the Persuasions fill out the driving force and direction of the cut. Freedman shines on a desolate slow blues number, "Calcutta Monsoon". Jeffreys' lyrics describe both the alienation of his race and personal gloom in the face of bad times, and though they may first appear banal, they communicate their thought simply yet poignantly.

"Bound To Get Ahead Someday" was recorded in Jamaica, so it's no surprise that it sports a lively Reggae rhythm. The lyrics border on triteness but Garland salvages things nicely with some spright phrasing and one of the most effective vocals of the entire recording. "Lovelight" closes out the first side with a tender touch, lilting piano figures and female background vocals producing an airy, dreamlike quality around Jeffreys' most sensitive, expressive singing on the LP. He's not the first to say "turn on your lovelight" but when he says it somehow the words are fresh and sincere.

On side two we encounter another bit of introspection, "She Didn't Lie". Jeffreys is looking back, contemplating the worldly wisdom bestowed on him by his parents as he views frustration and suffering before him. His accoustic rings clearly, softly behind a wistful vocal, and we are presented with a taste of Jeffreys' specialty: deep emotional expression through spare, direct, heartfelt lyrics set to basic yet effective melodies. "True To Me" is the killer blues cut. Everyone blows hard and heavy behind some wickedly defiant, evil lyrics sung in a fiery, growling tone by the main man. Chuck Rainey's bass is mind-boggling, to put it mildly.

Everybody's entitled to an abstract mood piece on their solo album, so here we come up with "lon Chaney". Like its subject, the song is eery in a confused sort of way. Just why Garland chose to invite Lon Chaney to "come out from your Tomb" eludes me. It's to be admitted that Jeffreys creates a strange mood, painting a vivid, surreal verbal portait of the infinitely pitiable, macabre creature with the "face of stone", with the "hunchback's eyes." Chaney lives through this song just as he did in his great motion picture roles. A mournful, dirgelike piano is the only accompaniment for Garland's quavering vocal. Strange stuff indeed. Too bad the bummer cut had to follow. "Eggs" is about as trite as they come, as we are warned "Don't put all your eggs in one basket," etc. while the backup men provide more Grade A patented funk. The female background vocals are too contrived, the liaison between lyrics and music is jagged, and the song wallows in banality for live full minutes of valuable recording time.

Come on, Garland, show us something tasty. That's exactly what he does on "Zoo" the closeout cut. Another slow blues with that marvelously understated slide guitar swoopirg in and out, Jeffreys just seems to be telling a simple story, almost too simple to stomach. Then he hits you from behind:

No longer simple or pointless, the man has the potential to arouse you, to excite you with his music.

Garland Jeffreys is not for everyone. Some will find it downright lackluster according to the usual standards of a debut solo LP. I choose to regard it as a purposefully simple statement by a simple but intense human being. Jeffreys doesn't need to be lavish to say what he wants to. He just says it.

American Innocence: The Cowboy In Film

By Jim Holdsworth

Marlboro cigarettes used to have a red ring around the filter, and was advertised with actress testimonials. Sales stagnated, so the Marlboro Cowboy was brought in, riding across the TV screen to music from The Magnificent Seven. The same product was now "manly," and sales multiplied.

From the time they get their first toy guns under the Christmas tree, until long after they've chosen which cigarette to smoke, men are under the spell of Cowboyism. Any kid wearing the uniform of six-shooters can be Virile Vinny, the super-masculine stud. Cowboys are America's he-men.

There have been westerns since 1898, the first famous one being The Great Train Robbery (1903). The early films had cowboys, but not a Cowboy. The first man to understand that the audience wanted a character to identify with, was G.M. Anderson, who played Bronco Billy.

A vaudville extra, Anderson got into films acting for Porter in The Great Train Robbery. In three different roles, his is terrorized, falls from his horse, and dies twice. As part owner of Essanay Pictures he took the part of Bronco Billy only when no willing actors could be found. The first movie he made was Bronco Billy And The Baby (1907). The public lapped it up and 375 one-reelers followed. He roams the west as a heavy who saves children and old ladies, always to be reformed by love and a turkey dinner.

What Bronco Billy brought to the screen was an almost three dimensional character. The plots were always contrived, and never very deep, being told in ten minutes. Anderson was the first cowboy that we ever got a look at behind the eyes. Bronco Billy was a good-badman with guts, determination and a fast gun.

Anderson was the man who set the genre in motion, fusing the glamour cowboy image of the Wild West Shows with the Porter crime-chase-shootout plotline. Bronco Billy was popular not for fancy riding, gun jiggling or knock-down fights, but rather for his originality.

William S. Hart knew and loved the west. A Shakespearean actor of some fame, he was drawn to the movies, and easily out distanced Anderson's pseudo-westerns. It is at once amusing and sad to find that Hart's westerns are most realistic ever made. The extras were often real cowboys brought from New Mexico or the Yukon. The action seems to be a moving Brady print, as all props and actions were genuine, overseen by Hart.

Hart was much the same character as Anderson, the good-badman with golden guts, but a slightly tougher exterior. He was a moraly sound man who just happened to be outside of the law.

Unlike Anderson, Hart's cowboy wasn't afraid of women. He was vamped in several pictures, but was always redeemed by a pure women before he rode off into the sunset. What held Hart's westerns together was the Code of the West, which really did exist. Murder was quite all right, but claim jumping and horse stealing were a threat to society. Hart's cowboy never crossed that line.

Although personally popular, people no longer paid to see Hart westerns after 1925. Despite more complex plots and fast cutting, the audience had seen it all before and were bored with him. During the Roaring 20's, Hart's Victorian sentimentality seemed outdated. He refused to streamline or stylize his pictures. Hart knew the real west and would not bastardize it for the times.

The next cowboy star was Tom Mix. Also a westerner, he knew when to sell out. A Hart movie was poetry, Mix relyed on style. A showman all the way, he changed the good-badman to a good-good man. He was shy with girls, always wore white, only drew his guns when pushed too far, brought innumerable badguys to justice, and was president of a temperance union. He was pure and clean, always able to resolve the action by the last reel. Mix films were for the entire family, a sickly wholesome. It seems odd that an age known for fast living should demand a white hat cowboy, but the call went out and Mix was ready. At the end of every picture, he would refuse all cash rewards and just Got-The-Girl.

The 30's were a bleak period for westerns. There were epics like The Covered Wagon (1931) that were so full of mistakes that Hart foamed at the mouth. They were popular because they were bigger than anything up to that time. The problem was that the actors got lost in the scenery. There were a few bright spots with Gary Cooper, but it was pretty much Grade B until Stagecoach (1939). John Ford was able to combine the size of the epics, the style of Mix and the characters from Hart. The star was John Wayne.

The "Duke" was strangely enough, named for the family dog. Of course anything is better than Marion.

Before Stagecoach, Wayne had stared in only one film. The Big Trail (1930). It was a big bomb. He spent the 30's being killed repeatedly in Grade B's. Once he was even given a chance as a singing cowboy, but never got far with his dubbed voice. Since Stagecoach he's been Guaranteed Box Office, amassing a total of 210 film credits that have grossed over $700 million. Like him or not, Wayne is the #1 all time cowboy and man of action.

Wayne always seems to play the same character. He's big, two fisted (I hope you're catching all the cliche's) good with a gun and talks funny. Charging up the sands of Iwo Jima killing Nips, he might as well be gunning down horse thieves. He did once try serious drama in a romantic lead. Duke was laughed off the screen.

A competent actor (but not particularly great) Wayne's magic is classic because of his fusion of the best of Hart and Mix. Wayne plays the good-good man, but is not too flashy and alot less sugary. Like a man in a Shakespeare tragedy, Wayne is basically good, but has some flaw. In many films, Duke confesses to the girl that he's dumb and restless. The difference from Shakespeare is that Wayne overcomes his flaw with determination and clean living.

There isn't much about John Wayne that hasn't already been said. He's the symbol of the ideal American male. Our national man of action. He blends strength, courage, purity and endearing faults that lead him to inevitable triumph where he gets the girl and a plot of land. Rather like Jack LaLane with six-shooters. What could be more American?

The late 30's and Second World War were the hayday of the singing cowboy. If there was ever a time to escape, this was it, and the men with a rope in their hands and a song in their hearts were the ones to win the west.

Gene Autrey was real candy covered stuff. He wouldn't even kiss on screen. The camera would become overly interested in his horse just before the point contact.

Roy Rogers soon followed with ornate outfits simpleton songs high morals, and off screen evangelism as well. It was a dark day for the western.

Between 1935 and 1951 William Boyd made sixty-six of the Hopalong Cassidy B serials. Not great but enduring, they are mostly in the Tom Mix mold.

Except for a few classics like High Noon (1952) and the torrent of Wayne vehicles, the westerns were quiet until the 60's.

Stealing the plot from The Seven Samurai, Hollywood made The Magnificent Seven (1960), the first of the "super-group" phase which reached it's height with The Professionals (1966) and died with Red Sun (1971). How The West Was Won (1964) tried to combine the epic with the super-group by following a single family for over 110 years. It brought the worst of each and wasn't very good. What the classic western is all about is an individual taking on all comers. The super groups haven't fared too well while Wayne endures.

The new individual that will be remembered from the 60's and 70's is Clint Eastwood. Many others have made Spaghetti westerns, but they are best forgotten. Eastwood is todays top box office draw.

His initial story was again stolen from a Japanese movie. This time Yojimbo became A Fist Full Of Dollars (1964). Eastwood is the Man With No Name who bops around the Mexican border looking for ways to kill men for a profit.

Like Wayne, Eastwood is always the same character whether in a western or not. In Dirty Harry and Where Eagles Dare, he's still gunning down people and loving it.

The Spaghetti westerns are perhaps disturbing. While death has always been swift and a life cheap in the westerns, killing a man never used to be played for laughs. Before, the humor in death was in people's reaction to it. The Spaghetti's have made the act of dying comical. Even Wayne will stoop to wisecracks today. In The War Wagon (1967) Wayne and Kirk Douglas have just shot two heavies. "Mine hit the ground first," says Douglas. "Mine was taller," counters Duke.

In The Good The Bad And The Ugly (1966), "Blondie" (Eastwood) is to stop a hanging by severing the rope above his partners head with a rifle shot. Tuco (Eli Wallach) who was a partner before and double-crossed stops him. As Blondie watches at gun point, the kid is hung. At every screening the crowd laughts itself silly over this. When violence is used in slapstick comedy, it is with the convention that the hero is indestructable. The Spaghetti's play it for real and still get you to laugh. After two and a half hours of shooting, maiming, killing and gore, people come out feeling pretty good. The Spaghetti's are cool, fascinating. While the "blood ballet" The Wild Bunch (1969) has a point, other than a game of Count the Cadavers, the Spaghetti's do not.

The most consistant western fare is the solitary cowboy, of which Anderson, Hart, Mix, Wayne and Eastwood stand out. What make their characters and gerne unique is the delicate balance of violence and work ethic/manifest destiny. A nation hungry for heritage is proud of having brought order from chaos. The cowboys celebrate this. When looking to film sex with heritage DeMulle went to the Bible (Protestants are now the Chosen People). When filming violence and heritage, Ford and Hawks made westerns.

Without violence, there can be no western. Even Mix who always resisted fighting would end up having to punch out a heavy in the last reel. In the 40's there was a "fight team" that made over two dozen films where they did nothing but grapple for a loose gun. Even TV's Caine of Kung Fu, though non-violent, is always forced to deal at least two men by the last station break. Grade B really has nothing else to do but show the chase, shoot-outs and fisticuffs.

With Mix the westerns became a white hat/black hat affair. Virtue always triumphed as the west was tamed, bad guys brought to justice the Ma made apple pies. All it took was honesty courage and a fast gun. Arthur Knight has said that westerns are and unconscious promotion for the American Dream. That may be a little loose, but the answer is in there somewhere.

The classic good/evil western has largely been broken down in the 60's. Even John Duke Wayne can sometimes be the badguy as in The Train Robbers (1972).

The genre has galloped off in all directions. Today we have light hearted shoot-um-ups: Butch Cassidy And The Sundance Kid (1969); heavy handed shoot-um-ups: The Wild Bunch (1969); lampoons: Cat Ballou (1966); Wayne vehicles: Chisum (1970); Spaghetti's: Hang Um High (1968); black/message: Little Big Man (1970); gimmicks: The Gunfight (1969); electric: Zachariah (1969); Indian epics: A Man Called Horse; Super-groups: The Professionals (1966) and westerns in a modern city: Coogans Bluff (1968).

Westerns have always been the pack animal of Hollywood, costing very little to make, with a guaranteed audience, very few every loose money.

The cowboys are our men of action. The only cult to come close is the Secret Agent. They too provide violence with style and stealth, but spies are international, the only "real" cowboys are American. The spies are still good/evil matches, but in the end they only humble other men, the cowboys conquer a continent. Only the cowboy mixes virtue, violence, flair and heritage into the proper blend. That is the reason the genre has endured and will continue. It is also why the westerns are such a sacred cow and are lampooned so often.

When comparing great American heros of the Horatio Alger stories verses the cowboy, an interesting paradox emerges. Success novels glorify the level-headed, rational and diligent. Mix fits this, but Bronco Billy, Hart, Wayne and Eastwood have twisted it. They are drifters, who may work hard but never stay in one place long enough to build up any capital. They are level-headed, but only when literally, cool under fire. As for rational, whenever someone crosses them, their first reaction is to pull a gun. Business-like perhaps, but that wouldn't get them a job in industry.

Zefferelli's New Kiddie Opera

By Robert Nesti

Brother Sun, Sister Moon
Written for the screen by Suso Cecch D'Amico, Kenneth Ross, Lina Wertmuller, and Franco Zefferelli; directed by Franco Zefferelli; featuring Graham Faulkner, Alec Guiness, and Judi Bowker.

Throughout my catechism days the story of St. Francis of Assisi was frequently used as fodder by well-meaning instructors to attract our wandering minds to the redemptive spirit of the Mother Church. The approach was novel, but the story of his transformation from hellion to church brother sounded like a religious fairy tale in which God slipped an invisible glass slipper upon the youth's foot and he merrily pranced through the fields talking to birds and flowers. How could an eleven year old relate to that? Our instructors hoped we'd identify with Francis's healthy sinning, but for us our most heinous offense was to sneak a cigarette during recess. His delinquency was as alien to us as his transformativn. The parallels are made much more palatable in Franco Zefferelli's new film Brother Sun, Sister Moon, which has smoothed out the kinks in our instructor's clumsy approach, but in making Francis a pop hero the story assumes the infectuous idiocity contained in Godspell. In that ever-so-cute musical Christ is portrayed as a perpetually smiling mime who tells and sings clever homilies to his apostles gayly dressed as vagabonds and clowns. This christian sideshow may fulfill some catholic women club's concept of how religious instruction can be made as appealling to youthful audiences as a candy bar, but they miss the point that it's about as nourishing and isn't even good theater. The derivitive score sounds like half-baked echoes from past shows scored for a rock combo you'd expect to hear as someone's wedding reception. Someone asked me once if I thought the score was good; my answer was of course, it's been running on Broadway for decades. The production is staged with routines that third-rate vaudivillians would restrain from using. It's kiddie show improvisation. But what Godspell has is relevancy – Christ as a long-haired flower child-come lately, and the play bleeds this catchy idea dry.

The same logic is present in Brother Sun, Sister Moon. Francis is a noble youth who abandons the Crusades, returns home, is believed mad when touched by the Holy Spirit, and abandons his family and friends to build a mission on the outskirts of Assisi. We are meant to relate to Francis's mystical state, his disgust with war and his father's materialism, his joy in building a commune-like mission for the poor. In secular terms Francis has his contemporary equivalent in today's put-out youth who scurries off to Vermont to be closer to the land. His prototype could be found in a feature story in Newsweek, by way of the Whole Earth Catalogue. They cook with honey and eat their crunchy granola daily. Franco Zefferelli made millions for Paramount when he marketed youth in Romeo and Juliet and the kids went bananas over this post-West Side Story claptrap where Shakespeare was sidetracked for the beauty and excitement of youth. Zefferelli hans't tired of youth, they're his most important commodity. The ad for Brother Sun, Sister Moon reads "a motion picture that celebrates the timeless joy of original innocence," but there's nothing either original or innocent about it. What it celebrates is youth as the pure ideal for a corrupt world to learn from. First they despair, then find a better way through ascetisming yet the film could care less about Francis and his struggles - it simply uses him as an excuse for an exercise in chauvinism. The film exploits youth the same way television commercials make any person over thirty feel like a hag. Zefferelli knows his young audience wants and gives them it in spades. The film takes place in pre-Rennaisance Italy, yet for all its conscious detail in decor and costumes it has the believability of an elaborate department store window display. Nearly everyone in this picture appears as if they last worked modelling clothes. I'm sure someone had rotten teeth in the Thirteenth century. Hardships vanish in a wisp of Francis's smile or a cute phrase from his lips. Even the lepers suffer with good humor; in real life their stiff-upper lips probably would have fallen off.

Religious leaders are likely to applaud this film, just as they raved for Godspell, though it's a sure bet Zefferelli wasn't out to save souls. The film's rank commercialism reminds you of all those crass and shiny boutique items which sell for five times what they're worth. Zefferelli makes moving pictures out of those perfect-looking, self conscious portfolio portraits - truth and beauty for three bucks a throw. The film has a cool, comfortable surface. It's beautiful to look at and cut so efficiently that the shabbiness and dishonesty of the script seems secondary to its sensual pleasures. It's a bit like those neat, clever television commercials which momentarily indicate where the talent is on television. Franco Zefferelli is a talented man, but as a film director he's good only in spurts. His success lies in his marketing of the false concept of beauty that uses all the aesthetics of good art, but none of the intelligence.

The story falls together in parts. Zefferelli directs each scene with the same rising line of intensity. Emotionally the film is constantly speaking, intellectually it gags for air. It's the kamakaze approach to screen narration; hit them hard and at regular intervals. Large gaps in Francis's relationships with his friends and city elders are filled without muchcare for details or explanations. Often dramatic confrontations between Francis and his friends from his past falter because we've spent too much time gazing at perfect-looking landscapes and not enough in developing coherent characterizations. The scenario loses out to the scenery. Francis's schoolchums first believe Francis is mad, then join him at his mission in the dead of winter, but they do this so whimsically as if they were changing toothpaste brands. Mystic revelations are one thing, phony dramatic ploys are another, and Brother Sun, Sister Moon pivots on the latter with such a forthrightness that the film demands to be accepted on faith alone. The endicg of the film, a spectacular visit to the Pope Innocent III in Rome after the rednecks at Assisi burn down the mission, simply wallows in the splendor of the Sistine Chapel. Throughout the film Francis has been either singing (in the third person) through the songs of Donovan) or speaking of beauty found in a simple life, the end makes him appear to have missed the boat. We are moved by this final scene because of the grandeur and magnificence of the papal court. Francis's simple pleadings are poignant, they're pathetic, and either the Pope's a dope or a cunning politician, as is suggested by one of his aides, to climb down from his throne to kiss the boy's feet. Audiences will be moved by this picture just as they're moved by Christmas show at Radio City Music Hall. The Pavolovian school of moviemaking once again rears its ugly little head.

Being young we identify with the beautiful Francis the same way middle-aged matrons relate to stale purity of Julie Andrews in The Sound of Music. Both films reduce inspirational themes to their lowest common denomination, that school of thought which tells you to lead a good life and everything will work out. Since the problems of young Francis are our own and his solutions are conceivable to our way of life, the film reminded me of an entire skew of youth-oriented films of recent years; but in its religious message I was taken back to the Fifties to Magnificent Obsession. In that film Rock Hudson played a playboy, who, through his carelessness, blinds the good Jane Wyman. His love for her transforms him from an amoral playboy to a pillar of strength and piety. Where Rock Hudson's transformation was heavy-handed, this film's Francis, Graham Faulkner's, is smooth and hip though both rest on the same principals. Their corallation reminds me of a story by Lennie Bruce. He wondered why magnificent churches often cropped up in the worst ghettos. He concluded that the poor went to these churches to escape - if they were mundane there would be no point in going. The same logic pervades Brother Sun, Sister Moon which titillates its viewers without ever approaching the philosophical concepts that changed its subject's life. The film makes saleable postcard images out of a stay of beauty, power, and strength.

Zefferelli fame rests primarily on his direction of operas and, in a sense, Brother Sun, Sister Moon is an opera with a bad libretto. Often operas are great, despite the idiocity of their plots, because the music is all that matters. In films that resemble operas a director's style must fill the place of the music. It must be florid, lush, and highly individualistic, such as Bernardo Bertolucci's direction of The Conformist. Although this film is efficiently made, it hasn't style enough to compensate for its awkward plot. Where Bertolucci directs actors and succeeds remarkably, Zeferelli succeeds only in creating vague foils of characters. He seems to be evading them. The performances aren't necessarily good or bad, their simply lacking in content. The film's a technocrat's dream; its filled with frenzied energy which looks good on the screen, but in the end that dramatic brio is affected, forced like all the parallels to the present. Paramount must treasure this film: it looks like a sure-fire hit. In a day when applause at a movie is a long bore, a passe convention, a preview audience greeted this film with cheers. Yet a quick response of boos followed and, though it is difficult to say who held sway, I'll opt with the dissenters.

The Film Column: What's Up This Spring

By Brian Dailey

The Tony Awards of Sunday March 25 had as it's theme "The Wide World of Broadway" stressing the far reaching effects of Broadway plays throughout the world by means of video taped segments from foreign productions of current and old Broadway hits and also by means of clips of the many films made from these plays. In an effort to make Broadway even more accessible to the many millions who are unable to see the live production of these plays even with the worst road companies and also to capitalize on these ready made hits, a group of enterprising men have gotten together to form the American Film Theatre. Along with Ely Landau, the American Film Theatre is attempting to gather the best stage and film directors, screenwriters, and stars to recreate many of the great stage successes of the past few years. The plays will be presented in a new and ingenious way; borrowing another idea from Broadway, "The Play of the Month Club", the people in charge of the American Film Theatre have decided to release a new production every month to some five hundred selected theaters throughout the United States and Canada and these filmed plays will be presented for a limited engagement to the members and "season ticket" holders. The first of these plays will be released for presentation sometime next October.

The list of professionals involved in the work is more than impressive. Alan Bates, this years Tony winner for his role of the homosexual professor in Butley has signed to recreate his role this time under the direction of the famous playwright and stage director, Harold Pinter, who will also be making his film directing debut with this major motion picture. Another play already before the cameras is Edward Albee's A Delicate Balance starring Katherine Hepburn, Paul Scofield, Lee Remick, Joseph Cotten, Betsy Blair and Kate Reid. The film is to be directed by Tony Richardson whose previous work includes The Entertainer, Loneliness of The Long Distance Runner and Tom Jones. Rhinoceros, Eugene Ionesco's black comedy is to star Zero Mostel, Karen Black direction by Tom O'Horgan, the brainchild of HAIR. Harold Pinter's play, The Homecoming, is also being filmed with a cast consisting of Cyril Cusack, Ian Holm, Michael Jayston, Vivien Merchant, and Terence Rigby with Peter Hall as director. John Frankenheimer is set to direct Eugene O'Neill's The Iceman Cometh with a cast consisting of Lee Marvin, Frederic March, Bradford Dillman, Allen Garfield and Robert Ryan. Stacy Keach, considered by many to be America's finest stage actor today, will appear with Hugh Griffith and Patrick Magee under the direction of Guy Green in the John Osborne play Luther. Other plays scheduled to be filmed for the American Film Theatre include Robert Shaw's The Man In The Glass Booth with Otto Preminger directing; a modern day version of Molnar's Liliom set in Harlem; and the Weill-Anderson musical Lost In The Stars which comes from the Alan Paton novel Cry the Beloved Country.

Many other Broadway plays are currently being filmed or are in the planning stages for regular release to movie theaters and even some to television as in the cases of the special productions in the recent past of Applause and Much Ado About Nothing. Three such plays soon to be released to movie houses are musicals. Mame, the hit musical starring Angela Lansbury made from the prior movie and stage hits of Antie Mame, is being directed by it's stage director Gene Sacks (Butterflies Are Free and The Last Of the Red Hot Lovers). Ms. Lansbury has been dropped from the lead in favor of Lucille Ball who hopes to make her movie comeback since her television ratings have begun to drop. The film retains Bea Arthur (Sack's wife) and Jane Connell from the Broadway production with Robert Preston, Bruce Davidson, and Joyce Van Patten added to the cast. Jesus Christ Superstar is being scripted, produced and directed by Norman Jewison (In The Heat of the Night and Fiddler on the Roof) with a cast consisting of Ted Neeley, Yvonne Elliman (the great Mary Magdeline of the original recording) and Joshua Mostel, the son of Zero Mostel. Godspell, an off-broadway success and longtime favorite of Boston audiences, has been directed by David Greene with a screenplay by Green and Michael Tebelak from the play conceived and directed by Tebelak with music and lyrics by Stephen Schwartz.

Two current Broadway successes have had there film rights bought even now as they are still currently at their peak in New York. Neil Simon's Sunshine Boys will be filmed by Raystar Productions with Jack Albertson repeating his role and That Championship Season, a Tony Winner, is scheduled to be filmed by Playboy Company.

While I'm at it I'd just like to let you know what you can look forward to seeing this years Oscar winners in during the upcoming year. Liza Minneli is Diana Ross, a near Oscar winner, has signed to appear in A Couple of Swells, a rumored to have accepted the lead role (after much coaxing from Desi Arnez, Jr.) in The Judy Garland Story which is to be directed by none other than Vincente Minelli, Ms. Garland's ex-husband and Liza's father. Gee, do you think maybe Desi could play one of Judy's five husbands? After all why not keep it in the family!

Paramount-Motown production which was originally set for Natalie Wood and Robert Wagner but changed (obviously) for Diana by Berry Gordy, Jr. of Motown.

Bob Fosse after winning two Tonys (best choreography and direction of Pippin) and Oscar (best director of Cabaret) has decided to go on to something new–acting. Fosse will play a serpent in the upcoming new film musical The Little Prince. The film is being directed by Stanley Donen and also stars Richard Kiley, Gene Wilder, Donna MacKechnie, and six year old Steve Warner as the prince.

Francis Ford Copolla is finishing up direction of The Conversation with Gene Hackman before beginning The Godfather, II. And of course, Marlon Brando is alive and well and dancing up a storm (among other things) in The Last Tango In Paris.

VARIATIONS ON A DREAM

A new play by Judith Katz which explores the tensions and problems faced by women in our society. It's a wonderful little play; Ms. Katz's humor has a spunk and spontaneity that few young writers can make appealing. She makes the central character, Polly, into a young woman who flashes with pathos and intelligence, all she needs is a little direction. She looks for it in a varied group of archtypical social outlets: Motherhood, Men, etc., finally finding some hope in the Women's Movement. A half hour well worth your while, featuring Moe DePalma Coolidge Lower Lounge, Friday, 4/6, 8:30

ANIMATION NIGHT

CABARET (1972)

The best American film of last year is this dazzling musical portrait of Berlin immediately prior to the Nazi takeover. It's the best musical since the great M—G—M, musicals of the Fifties and effectively alters the genre since the musical numbers are prisms through which we view the action. They are written by Fred Ebb and John Kander, who improved from the stage production. The direction of Bob Fosse crystallizes the gaudy night life of Christopher Isherwood's "Berlin Stories" from which this film was adapted. Liza Minelli is splendidly full-bodied as Sally Bowles with Michael York, Helmut Griem, and Joel Grey. Best Picture citation by the National Board of Review; eight Oscars, including direction, actress, supporting actor (Grey), film editing, and music scoring. Paris Cinema, Springfield.

CASABLANCA (1942)

The great romantic film of the Forties; although it's in no way a great film, it's more fun than most with one of the best international casts of any American film of the period and one of the war year's wittiest scripts. The chemistry between Humphrey Bogart as Sam the bitter salloon keeper and Ingrid Bergman as the mysterious wife of an escaped Allied spy makes the stale material tender and engrossing. This is Bogart's best role during the early Forties and helped to shape the roles he played for the next fifteen years. Oscars went everywhere and you may wonder why. Directed by Michael Curtiz. The great Dooley Wilson sings "As Time Goes By." Academy of Music, Northampton.

THE CONFORMIST (1971)

A dazzling film; an exquisite mosaic of a young man's sexual and political conformity during the rise and fall of Mussolini's Italy. It is visually stunning, beautifully acted, and gloriously mounted, evoking the feel of the Thirties as no other film in recent memory has been able to achieve. Jean-Louis Trintignant is the young man who compelled to conform that he becomes a political assassin. Bernardo Bertolucci directs with a flair and a lushness that resembles the high drama of Italian opera. Its themes of baroque decadence and compulsive normalcy are intricately interlaced in a work that remains one of the rarest experiences in films. Dominque Sanda plays the sensual tiger woman Trintignant falls in love with and Stefania Sandrelli plays his beautiful,

Cybil Shepherd in The Heartbreak Kid

coy, empty-headed wife. In Italian, subtitled. Student Union Ballroom, Saturday, 4/14, 7:30 and 9:30.

THE EMIGRANTS

The experience of the Nineteenth century emigrant, from his disgust with his native land through the long, difficult journey to the new world, is portrayed with compassion and human resonance in this Swedish film. Most historical dramas use their period as a backdrop, this film uses its setting and time to bring the viewer closer to the agrarian ascetic lifestyle of Swedish farmers. Jan Troel directed, wrote, and photographed this beautiful and engrossing film with a skill that's extraordinarily mature. One of the best films of last year; with Liv Ullman and Max Von Sydow. The first half of a two-part film, its second portion The New Land is scheduled for release this year. Upon seeing its first half, you wish it would follow immediately. Amherst Cinama, Amherst.

THE FAMILY

Charles Bronson is currently the number one male sex star sensation in Europe, with such U.S. box office failures as Red Sun and Chato's Land playing first run, sell-out engagements in London's West End. The Bronson—mystique seems to be almost non- existent in this country. As the poor reception that this cheap Godfather exploitation movie has received would tend to point out. On a strict, semantic level, I have been informed by Italian friends that the film boasts some of the most unreal and ludicrous Italian accents in film history. "Thatsa nice . . ." Campus Cinema, Hadley.

THE GO—BETWEEN (1971)

A drama that excels in presenting marvelous rendering of Victorian England, some superlative acting, beautiful photography, and is competent enough in all other areas. Still, in the end it seems a bit too competent for its own good. It may have a cache of prizes under its belt and be on a goodly share of Ten Best Lists, it still remains a distinctly cold experience. 4/9, 7 and 9:30.

THE GODFATHER (1972)

Mario Puzo's sprawling best-seller about the legitimization of the Mafia into American life was cinematically styled into a vivid genre piece by Francis Ford Copolla. An extraordinary film, due in part to the superb acting of Marlon Brando, Al Pacino, James Caan, and Robert Duvall, and the firm, effortless narrative grace. The film deals with the corruption of the American corporate structure, but does it almost impercelvably, and in its raw violence and tender nostalgia becomes something startlingly real. Three Oscars Including Best Picture. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

THE HEARTBREAK KID

A refreshingly peculiar comedy about the transiency of love and marriage. Charles Grodin discovers on his honeymoon that he is no longer in love with his wife, Jeanne Berlin, and falls head over heels for beautiful and sensual Cybil Shepherd. As Grodin goes about getting rid of his wife and snaring his beauty, we are provided with many brilliantly acted, hilarious scenes. Director Elaine May uses a simple, detached approach to exploit the comic potential of this unusual situation. The film has a wonderful naturalism; there are many slow dolly shots and almost no background music. Unfortunately Ms. May uses this detached approach in her treatment of the characters as well. The viewer is not allowed to feel anything for the characters, especially poor Jeannie Berlin, who is mocked for her suburban Jewishness, milked for laughs, and disposed of mercilessly. Showcase Cinema, West Springfield.

HOUR OF THE WOLF (1968)

A painter on a small island sees visions, his pregnant wife, fearing her husband's madness, and her own inability to love, begins to believe she also sees them. This Bergman film concerns itself with the corruption of the artist by the supernatural. It is a drama of power in its nightmarish visions splendidly acted by Max Von Sydow and Liv Ullman. One of the fine films Bergman made in the late Sixties that began with Persona and ended with The Touch. Lecture Room One, Merrill Science Center, Sunday, 4/8, 7 and 9:30.

JEREMIAH JOHNSON

The frontier myth embodied in the super-coolness of Robert Redford. A story of revenge is somewhere in all these beautifully photographed vistas, but it's paced so slowly and with such a conscious, mythic ambiviance that it is drained of any action. Directed by Sydney Pollack. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

JOE (1970)

A cheap, vulgar, sensational, pretentious film that looks as if it were written and directed by the editors of the Enquirer. The sociological implications are trite and pedestrian, however Peter Boyle is strangely effective as Joe, an Archie Bunker-type with homocidal tendencies. Gamble Auditorium, Mt. Holyoke College, Saturday, 4/7, 8.

JULIET OF THE SPIRITS (1966)

A woman, played by Giulietta Masina, suspects her husband of infidelity. She seeks out his mistress then reverts to her own fantasy world. A statement, by Fellini, on the difficulties of achieving a deep rapport in a marriage. The film recalls the dream world of 8 1/2, but here it is much more pronounced. It is a fantasy in the way dreams can be used for therapeutic purposes. Some call it his best film. Main Academic Building, Hampshire College, Friday, 4/6, 7 and 9:30.

THE LADY VANISHES (1938)

With The 39 Steps and The Man Who Knew Too Much, this film remains the finest work of Alfred Hitchcock prior to his American films. It is a film of high comedy and suspense. A girl befriends an elderly lady who inexplicably disappears from the train bringing them back from a Balkan holiday resort. Attempts are

In spite of the menace of espionage situation, the atmosphere is essentially humorous and the film moves with the characteristic pace of the pre-Hollywood Hitchcock. Gamble Auditorium, Mt. Holyoke, Sunday, 4/8, 7:30.

LIMELIGHT (1951)

Charles Chaplin said upon release of this film: "With age comes a keener sense of dignity, which prevents us from ridiculing other men." This film is the story of a once great comedian who has lost his touch and has taken to drink. He prevents a young ballerina from committing suicide and gives her confidence in herself. Georges Sadout has written "This tragedy of Shakespearean grandeur, full of profound wisdom and human warmth, is in part undoubtedly autobiographical . . . (the) film's numerous gags and comic routines are never merely diversions but are an integral part of its theme—a theme whose tragic implications for the world in the 20th century." Some have called it Chaplin's greatest film, it is undoubtedly his swan song. Cinema X, Springfield.

MADIGAN'S MILLIONS

A spy thriller, with Dustin Hoffman. Campus Center Auditorium, Sunday, 4/8, 7 and 10:30.

PLAY IT AGAIN, SAM (1972)

Taken from his play, Woody Allen's least successful comedy, but by no means should be dismissed on that account. Allen is the only person in film today who lets us laugh at both his kooky looks and clumsy mannerism. Unlike Jerry Lewis and the Three Stooges his films are peppered with the shrewd witticisms and spicy one liners, the results are the most successful blending of physical and verbal comedy since the Marx Brothers. What goes wrong here is that Allen's insane brand of comedy is leashed by an all too coherent plot and by Herbert Ross's all too conventional direction. Student Union Ballroom, Thursday, 4/12, 7 and 9; Mahar, Friday, 4/13, 7 and 9.

THE POSEIDON ADVENTURE (1972)

A harmless pop epic, the film tauts an incredible roster of second-rate stars playing passengers on board a luxury liner which, on its final voyage, becomes capsized in the Mediterranean. It's one of those assinine entertainments made popular in recent years, like Airport and Skyjacked. The whole thing sounds like a wretched musical comedy, full of stock song cues and bits. Shelley Winters sparks the film with her sympathetic caricature of a Jewish grandmother. The remaining ensemble are strikingly mediocre. Campus Cinemas, Hadley; Calvin Theatre, Northampson.

This is an action-packed western with no purpose in mind other than pure entertainment. The movie, directed by Terence Young (From Russia With Love, Goldfinger and The Ipcress File) is a wild adventure about two Japanese diplomats who are bringing a Samurai sword to the President of the United States as a gift and on the way have it stolen. This basic plot structure is one way of assembling an international all-star cast including Charles Bronson, the worlds most popular star; Ursula Andress; Alain Delon; and Toshiro Mifune, the great star of many Kurosawa films including Rashomon, Seven Samurai, and Yojimbo. The plot may be absurd but there is something for everyone in Red Sun whether it's watching Mifune kill a mosquito in flight with one swoop of his sword or just plain watching Ms. Andress. THE SEVEN SAMURAI (1954)

This action-packed Japanese masterpiece by the world famous director Akira Kurosawa is the story of the inhabitants of a small village in sixteenth century Japan who decide to hire samurai to defend them against the annual raid by bandits but they can only afford those that are poor and hungry. The town persuades an aging Samurai, played marvelously by Takashi Shimura, to join them and with his help six more are recruited including Kikuckiyo, a crazy braggart posing as a Samurai, played in the film by Toshiro Mifune, Japan's most popular actor. Besides being an exciting 148 minutes this period film does have a humanistic theme: seven mercenaries who sacrifice themselves to ensure peace for the ordinary people. This is an excellent example of the beauty of Japanese films and the wild excitement generated through the characteristic Kurosawa editing and story line. Graham Hall, Smith College Thursday, 4/12, 7 and 10.

SLEUTH

One of those filmed plays which shouldn't succeed but does (and brilliantly) thanks to an exciting and ingenious screenplay by Anthony Schaeffer and the awesome acting abilities of Sir Laurence Olivier and Michael Caine. The film works by providing us with traditional formula mystery situations; and then refusing to let these situations play themselves out in a traditional manner. Joseph L. Mankiewicz's direction keeps the film from being too verbal, his camera probes and weaves in and about the English manor house where the unusual set of parlour games takes place. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

THE SORROW AND THE PITY (1972)

Marcel Ophul's magnificent documentary. The film explores the psyche of the French citizen on the subject of the German occupation some twenty-five years later. The film explores its subject matter with a piercing intelligence and depth and reveals a difficult historical truth we would hope to forget. Sage Hall, Smith College, Saturday, 4/14, 7:30.

SOUNDER

"Sidney Poitier" movie with a dog playing the Poitier role. Directed by Martin Ritt and starring Cicily Tyson and Paul Winfield, it's Hollywood's tepid and rather strident answer to Shaft and Superfly, informing us that the meek shall inherit the Earth (or apparently Hollywood's advice to the leaders of the Black movement.) A white man's black movie; totally unthreatening, which seeks to assure the viewer that he is not a racist if he can sympathize with the cheaply sentimental plot involving the difficulties of a sharecropping black family in the 1930s. Things work out nicely in the end, of course, when the family's wounded mongrel comes home (see Lassie Comes Home and Old Yeller etc.), and the young song-hero of the film sets out for an all-black school, proving supposedly that Booker T. Washington was right after all. A dangerous film that plays on our subconscious subjection to Hollywood cliches give us the false sense that we are viewing a film of some importance. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

THE SOUND OF MUSIC (1965)

STRAW DOGS (1972)

The myth of masculine domination is exploited under the voguish guise of man's territorial drives. Dustin Hoffman plays a weakling mathematic's professor who is forced to fight to maintain his values and his lifestyle when a group of Cornish thugs attack his home. The subject of this film is machismo, the heavy, suffocating theme of male superiority, and it has the hypnotic power of a nightmare. Sam Peckinpan directs with imagination and talent, his film is technically superior to its hackneyed themes. The film has a tremendous grip on its audience, they become manic in the final bloody orgy. Student Union Ballroom, Friday, 3/6, 7 and 9:30.

TWO ENGLISH GIRLS (1972)

Francois Truffaut's profoundly touching examination of a three way love affair between two sisters and the same man that recalls the world of its director's third feature film Jules and Jim. The comparisons are inevitable since that film also concerned itself with the difficulties of living a trois; but there are noticeable differences between the films. Instead of the zestful, carefree spirit which pervaded the earlier film, Two English Girls is a work of subtle, sophistication and intelligence. The characters are more vividly drawn, the shots more exquisitely composed, and the color photography is slow, smooth, and simply beautiful. One of the best films of last year and another masterpiece from Truffaut. Begins Wednesday, 4/11, Amherst Cinema.

TWO PEOPLE

What is supposed to be a lyric romantic adventure, more and stylish and exciting than Love Story, sits on the screen like a product with assembly line sensibilities. It's a lumbering, sluggish romantic film directed with no style at all by Robert Wise. Some nice travelogue footage of Morocco. Peter Fonda and Lindsay Wagner, the latest of the Ali McGraw type ingenue, star. Palace Theater, West Springfield.

THE VIRGIN SPRING (1958)

Ingmar Bergman's film based upon a mideeval myth, is a lyrical, yet terrifying tale of a man who seeks revenge when his virgin daughter is brutally raped. Like other films made during Bergman's classical period, such as The Seventh Seal, The Virgin Spring is a bleak film, intensely psychological in its examination of individuals whose lives and actions are determined by their religious beliefs or fears. Thompson 104, Tuesday, 4/10, 7 and 9.

WINTER LIGHT (1962)

The second film in Ingmar Bergman trilogy centered on the theme of God's silence toward modern man. A village pastor who feels as if he has been deserted by God since the death of his wife, begins to lose grip upon reality. The theme is of the artist who no longer believes in his art. The film is moving evocation of the agonies of doubt and the search for self-awareness. With Max Von Sydow and Ingrid Thurlin. Wright Hall, Smith College, Wednesday, 4/11, 7:30.

Z (1969)

Costas-Gravas fine political thriller; assassination of a Greek political figure is revealed to be the workings of a reactionary group of generals through the investigation of dedicated civil servant. Gravas has an exciting visual style and this neat thriller moves along at a tremendous pace. It becomes too polemical at its climax, although its well-acted and beautifully photographed. With Irene Pappas, Jean-Louis Trintignant, and Yves Montand. Won a skew of major awards, NY Film Critics Award as Best Picture, and an Oscar for Best Foreign Film. Aptheker: Whitewashing History

To The Editor:

Wednesday I had the pleasure of attending the lecture by Prof. Herbert Aptheker in the Student Union Ballroom. For those not fortunate enough to be there, Dr. Aptheker discussed the relationship between American Imperialist activities and the development of racism as a rationalizing ideology for the subsequent exploitation of so-called "Third World Nations," (to include Blacks in the U.S.). At the conclusion of his excellent address I had the opportunity to question the professor on the subject of imperialism fostered by both western and communist countries—are there any real differences? Dr. Aptheker clearly stated that there were—and are—important differences between the two approaches. The key difference apparently is that—while all imperialism is motivated by self-interest—socialist countries engage in imperialism for additional reasons which makes their brand morally palatable. In Dr. Aptheker's reasoning, socialist countries (unlike western imperialist nations) recognize—through the inherent 'logic' of socialist economics—that the development of non-Soviet nations is to the advantage of socialist governments (or "people") as well as to the developing nation. Western nations apparently do not recognize this: they exploit rather than develop. Thus, socialism fosters 'enlightened self-interest' as opposed to the 'crass and immoral self-interest' of western imperialism. He mentioned the case of Cuba, and of Bulgaria as examples of point. No argument. But—on the same point—how about the case of the Balkan countries after World War II, or of Berlin in the fifties, or of Czechoslovakia in the sixties? Russia utterly stripped the former countries of their important resources—natural and human. It carted off all of Latvia's doctors, lawyers, skilled technicians, executed wholesale its army and political leadership, and substituted Russian rule—in a true example of imperialism of the most blatant sort—for previously existing nationalistic rule. And this process continues to this day. Enlightened self-interest? Furthermore, Dr. Aptheker failed to mention anything other than economic development. What about the development of political power in imperialist possessions (both in the socialist and capitalist camps). For a man whose scholarship is as eminent as that of Dr. Aptheker to state clearly that there exists a fundamental difference of motivation between eastern and western imperialism is to stretch credibility beyond the breaking point. Dr. Aptheker is not misinformed. Nor is he naive. He is fully aware of the history of Latvia—and of Russia's (atrocious) imperialistic takeover there. He chooses instead to spread the big lie—that the Russian brand of imperialism is "OK" due to its socialist trappings. I say there is no difference: that the communist as well as the capitalist exploiters are to be damned for their acts of piracy. To call it anything else is to simply whitewash history. I respect Dr. Aptheker's scholarship—but not his ideologies.

O.H. Art Festival

To The Editor:

The Orchard Hill Art and Society Group is presenting a festival this weekend dealing with important and too often unasked questions concerning the relationships between art, consciousness and social reality.

How does art affect social change? How is it that some works of art are able to be absorbed by the society that has created them at the time they are created, and others are not? What is the relationship and; perhaps, obligation of the artist to his or her community? Orchard Hill will offer a forum this weekend for people to explore actively and experience these questions with people very much involved with them. By experiencing musical performances, poetry readings, films and painting exhibitions and then discussing these with the artists involved one has a unique opportunity to learn more about these questions.

We think that this will be a tremendously exciting program. All events are free, and a schedule is available in today's Poor Richard's and through WFCR and WMUA. We hope that the community will take advantage of the offerings.

Bad Morning

To The Editor:

I was rudely awakened this morning by a bunch of peckerheads from the Physical Plant who took it upon themselves to loudly saw down a big dead tree on Orchard Hill, at eight o'clock in the morning. God forbid they should pull a stunt like that again. I'll see to it that their dead wood gets sawed off.

Meat Alternatives

To The Editor:

Intellectuals seem to thrive on inevitabilities these days; the exhaustion of natural resources, the pollution of the environment, the proletarian revolution, and the bankruptcy of capitalism are a few. Joseph Carlin seems to subscribe to one—the exhaustion of the national food supply—in his letter of April 5. His insistence of his fate serves only to cloud the issue.

Let me reiterate the President's words, with a reservation: Boycotts are not an "effective use of . . . people power," when people do not know what they are doing. The United States has a history of successful boycotts starting since pre-revolutionary times. Their success depended on the appropriateness of the pressure applied; the participants were wise to the problem. What we have today is a nation of deranged housewives dictating economic policy.

While academia has not fully accepted the housewive's manifesto, it has not showed a sign of an investigation. Instead if has philosophized on it and offered "alternatives" to it. They would have the world munching on granola and drinking carrot juice while the government pays homage to their favorite pressure groups. Witness the organic crowd's relish of soybean even after its most phenomenal price increase. This pop-intellectualism is only an escape which can be easily manipulated. We should demand to know, and when that knowledge is denied we should find it ourselves. Truth bites.

I do not wish to put down alternatives altogether. They are experiments which may prove valuable to the world when the need for their results arises. But right now most people would rather eat widely advertised, merchandised, "artificially flavored and colored puffy fruity whirlies," as shown by the "super food conglomerates' success in selling the stuff. It could easily do the same for Familia or kelp. When the general public finally says that all that old stuff tastes like crap, then you can teach it how to grow, sell, and cook those wonderful new foods, and say, "I told you so."

The organizers of an effort to legalize marijuana in Berkeley, California are holding a raffle to raise money. The prize? You guessed it—one kilo. Tickets are only a dollar.

And come to think of it, a dollar a kilo is not a bad deal at all. For two worthy causes, no less.

Word for the day? abattu.

Think Metric!

By KLAUS E. KRONER

Have you wondered about the appearance during the past few days of colored stripes painted across the walls of a few classrooms and hallways indicating their size in meters, or the directional signs to nearby communities giving distances in Km as well as miles? You may even have noticed the display on the metric system in the Campus Center. All these are part of an effort by the UMass Metric Committee to familiarize you, the campus public, with some of the features of the system of measurements soon to be adopted by the U. S. as the principal measuring language. At the present, more than 90% of the world's population lives in countries which are entirely metric or have committed themselves to becoming metric. In fact, the U.S. is the only major industrialized nation which is not on the metric system. Even Great Britain, the cradle of the imperial, or customary, system is in the midst of a metric transition; a process which will be essentially completed by 1975.

In accordance with the recommendations in the final report of the U.S. Metric Study which had been authorized by Congress in 1968, the Senate passed a metric conversion bill in August 1972. The House did not get to act on it before adjournment. In the current session of Congress similar legislation has been filed and positive action seems likely by this summer. Passage of a metric bill would set in motion a sequence of events which would result in a predominantly metric U.S. by 1985. This would be accomplished by a voluntary, but well-planned and coordinated, effort by all sectors of society.

The use of customary units would be discouraged but not outlawed, so that a football field can remain 100 yards long and the width of railroad tracks need not be changed. Many industries have already decided to "go metric" in their designs, manufacture, or publications. Noteworthy examples include N.A.S.A., IBM, the Caterpilar Tractor Co., etc. Shoppers already find dual measurement markings on many grocery boxes, cans, and jars. In sports, all those in training for and participating in international competition must adjust their performance to standard metric distances and weights.

How will the impending changeover to the metric system affect you individually? For one thing, calculations involving measurement units will be much simpler. As an example, consider these comparable units of length in both systems:

U.S. Customary	Metric
1 mile - 1760 yards	1 kilometer - 1000 meters
1 yard - 3 feet	1 meter - 100 centimeters
1 foot - 12 inches	1 centimeter - 10 millimeters

KLAUS E. KRONER

Thus, you can see that by just adding or omitting the necessary number of zeros, essentially moving the decimal point, one can easily change from one metric unit of length to another; while complicated fractions or lengthy multiplications are involved in our present system.

Driving speeds will be measured in kilometers per hour, beer and gasoline will be dispensed by the liter, and meat will be weighed by the kilogram. And the girls will be surprised at their vital measurements which might be 96-60-92 when expressed in centimeters! On a pleasant spring day the temperature reading may be 20 degrees on the Celsius scale, while a typical dormitory room may be 3 x 4 meters in size.

It will therefore be to everyone's benefit to become familiar with the metric units of measurement as soon as possible. The trick is to avoid memorizing the conversion factors which will give you the equivalents in the other system, but rather get the feel for the meter and the other common basic units of the metric system. Only then can you truly think metric!

Bill Lee with his sisters, A. Grace Lee Mims and Consuela Lee Moorehead form the group known as The Descendents of Mike and Phoebe. They will perform Thursday evening, April 12, at Bowker Auditorium as a part of the New York Bass Violin Choir which will be sponsored by the UMass Fine Arts Council and the Third World Alliance.

Apply Now To Study Italy This Summer

Applications for the University's 1973 Summer Program in Italy are now being accepted, according to Professor Anthony Terrizzi, Director of the Program. Enrollment is limited to 65 students and, since the Program attracts a greater number of applicants from other colleges and universities each year, those interested are urged to apply early. Closing date for application materials is April 15.

Although the Summer Program in Italy is not geared specifically to any one discipline or to language study, Italy—its language, its history, and its people—is the focus of all courses, and each acquires an added dimension by virtue of the fact that it is taught in the country itself. The courses which will be offered in 1973 are: Art 225—Baroque Art and Architecture in Italy; History 203— Urban Life in Medieval and Renaissance Italy; Anthropology 261— Peoples of Europe: The Western Mediterranean: Italy; Italian 291—Italian Literature in Translation; and Italian 110—Elementary Italian. In addition, Italian majors and other qualified students may arrange to take independent study in Italian literature. Students take two courses for a total of 6 credits.

Belchertown Benefit Comes To UMass Sunday

The Beckett Buechner Belchertown Benefit will appear Sunday, April 15th at 8 p.m. in the Alumni Auditorium. The evening will consist of the performance of two plays: Samuel Beckett's Play and Georg Buechner's Leonce and Lena.

The two plays were chosen for their authors' hallmark positions in modern theater. Donations will be accepted at the door.

Teaching Info At Marathon

All students seeking teacher certification through the School of Education must enter a TPPC (Teacher Preparation Program Council) program. This usually coccurs somewhere between the end of their second semester on campus and the fifth semester, depending upon the program, and can be done after the student has completed the course "Kids, Schools, and the School of Education." The only way for a student to work toward a teacher certificate in the School of Education is to complete a TPPC program.

At the present time the School sponsors approximately twenty programs which lead to elementary secondary or specialized credentials. The School is committed to encouraging a variety of programs which have different goals, approaches, lengths, and admission criteria, thus allowing the student to choose between alternative routes which lead to certification.

Elementary Certification. Typically, students working toward elementary teacher certificates are majors in the School of Education. At the present time, the School of Education is closed to the admission of new majors, except for minority students, in the classes of '74, '75, and '76. Students are admitted into the School of Education through the Undergraduate Advising Office, and any student who wishes to become an Education major should begin there. UWW and BDIC students and other students not majors in the School of Education must receive the written recommendation of their advisor or department before applying to programs.

Secondary Certification. Students seeking secondary certification are usually not Education majors. They should, in most cases, be earning degrees in academic majors. Upon receiving the recommendation of their major departments, and after taking the course, "Kids, Schools, and the School of Education," they are eligible to apply for entrance into a TPPC program.

Upon receiving the recommendation of their major departments, and after taking the course "Kids, Schools, and the School of Education," they are eligible to apply for entrance into a TPPC program.

No student may apply to a TPPC program unless 1) he already has at least a 2.0 cumulative average, 2) he has completed the "Kids" course, and without 3) the recommendation of his department or advisor if he is not a major in the School of Education. Forms for departmental recommendation are available from John Adams in Machmer E-26. There will be a student teaching fee for students in each TPPC program.

Most programs will be giving presentations at Marathon on Tuesday, April 10th.

Retardation Program

Applications for a special education program in mental retardation will be taken and interviews will be held during Marathon Week, April 9-13, School of Education Room 101-A, by Dr. Robert Gonzales. Only second semester sophomores in the School of Education, B.D.I.C. and UWW students will be considered at this time. Other criteria for entrance into the program will be grade point average and the personal interview.

Graduates from this program will be certified to teach trainable and educable mentally retarded in state schools and public day schools.

The program is still in the planning stages and will continue taking shape through the summer.

Goleman To Speak On Meditation

On Monday evening, April 9, at 8 in Mather auditorium. The Distinguished Visitors Program in conjunction with Room To Move is presenting Daniel Goleman. Daniel Goleman is a Clinical Psychologist presently researching the relationship of meditation to psychotherapy, as well as developing a theory of meditation as being a fifth state of consciousness.

The focus for his talk that evening will be The Politics of Meditation.

In 1967 while attending the University of California at Berkeley he first became interested in meditation, taking up the practice of transcendental meditation. When he became a graduate student at Harvard University in 1968 in the clinical-perality psychology program he began to pursue the study of meditation from a research perspective. Through his research he started to notice the similarities in process and effect between meditation a psychotherapy. At this time he published "Meditation as Metatherapy: Hypotheses Toward a Fifth State of Consciousness." That year he met Baba Ram Dass, who had been fired from Harvard for his involvements with Dr. Timothy Leary. Ram Das had recently come back from India and got Dan interested in the possibilities of changing consciousness through ancient and traditional Eastern methods.

The following year of 1970, Mr. Goleman received a Harvard travelling fellowship to India. He travelled through India for fifteen months, spending time with Ram Dass, his guru Maharaj-ji, many other evolved being and meditation masters. Most of his experience in India centered around meeting yogis, saddhus, swamis, Tibetan lamas and Buddhist monks (India's greatest resource) in an attempt to become as familiar with as many meditation systems as he could. A main focus of his study, however, centered on Southern Buddhist meditation where he received teaching in this system in Bodh Gaya.

Diet Information In CC Concourse

The Commuter Assembly, in cooperation with the Health Education Division of the Health Services, is again sponsoring a series of Health Education programs related to life off campus at the University.

There are four programs planned for the month of April. The first program will be held on Monday, April 9, in the concourse of the Campus Center. The topic will be Nutrition, Diets, and Health.

Ms. Patricia Sacks, of the Food Extension Service, Jane Zapka, of the Health Education Division, and Cindy Coffman, of the Commuter Assembly, will staff the table. Information on diets, organic foods, nutritional requirements, recipes, especially those using commodity foods, will be available. Questions will be accepted for personal reply to be answered by a nutrition specialist.

English Extends Counseling

If you are an English major and you have some suggestions for improving the department, or if you just feel lost, you might be one of the 385 English majors surveyed by the English Department.

In response to the complaints concerning requirements, faculty members are currently examining the possibilities of changing major requirements, of allowing students to structure their own set of courses and to plan a major program geared to the individual's interests.

Information is also being set up where students interested in certain fields pertaining to English (i.e. film, writing, folklore, American civilization, etc.) can discuss course selections and career opportunities with faculty members knowledgeable in that area.

All English majors are invited to attend a faculty meeting to discuss alternative English major programs on Sunday night, April 8, at 7 in Bartlett 206.

Vets Get Air Opportunity

Veterans, you can earn $1,000 for one weekend a month and two weeks a year. If you are air crew qualified, you can earn even more by getting flight pay. Although aviation type personnel are wanted, any man or woman who was in the surface navy or seabees should call to have questions answered.

Please call collect; but not the number that was listed in Tuesday's Collegian. Call one of these numbers: 1-401-267-3078 or 1-401-267-2283 and ask for Wayne Abbott or Russ Webber.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

☆—by SYDNEY OMARR—☆

Aquarius can be generous, stubborn, generous, inventive, progressive and impractical. Natives of this zodiacal sign are not easy to live with but their motives usually are noble. When it comes to lending money to strangers, Aquarians are apt to top the list.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Accent is on getting around, dispatching messages, putting ideas into motion. What seemed impractical could be transformed into working concept. Don't sell yourself short. A minor detail needs your personal attention.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Accept "no" which could result in financial gain. Accent is on information, the gathering of various factors which add up to profit. Debts can be paid, collected. Gemini, Virgo persons are in picture.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Cycle is high. Take initiative. Make new starts in new directions. Exude confidence. Welcome contacts and challenges. Trust your own judgment. Vitality returns. You come alive. Natural abilities soar to forefront.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Clandestine meeting could be featured. Be discreet. Someone is trying to pry information from you. Look behind the scenes for answers. Ignore individual who proposes get-rich-quick scheme.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 20): Spotlight on friends, hopes, desires. Older person offers benefit of experience. Be receptive, not subservient. Capricorn is likely to be in picture. Your romantic interests are kindled. Creative urge seeks expression.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You gain wider recognition. You are able to distribute and delineate. More persons become aware of what you are capable of producing. Sweep aside foolish fears, doubts. Accept added responsibility.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You become involved with potential. You are intrigued with travel, special study and a desire to better know where you belong. Self-identification is accented. Leo individual plays prominent role.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You sense that something of importance is in the offing. However, you have difficulty articulating your feelings. Key now is to ride with the tide while remaining alert. Aquarian could provide some answers.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be plenty of listening, observing. Study Scorpio message for valid hint. Accent is on partnership, marriage, efforts which require aid of another individual. Special contract could be entered.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Steady approach to dilemma is necessary for ultimate solution. Stick to what is familiar. Veering too far off course creates loss. Some work associates surprise by pitching in and helping you hurdle obstacle.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Good lunar aspect now coincides with creative endeavors, relationships on emotional level. You can do some things you yearned to do years ago. You could find, however, that some of the glitter was imaginary. Face facts.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Look beyond immediate indications. Read and write. Crystallize thoughts, emotions and ambitions. Sagittarian could be involved. Key is to be versatile without scattering your efforts. One you respect returns the compliment.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have dramatic quality, often exemplified by your voice. You understand the arts, especially music. You draw many to you who were born under Taurus and Libra. Plenty of travel indicated this year in comparison with the past. May could be your most significant month of 1973.

Team Rosters Settle As Baseball Season Opens

By BOB ESTELLE

(Ed. Note: With all the trades in professional baseball over the winter and during the past fall, the average sports fan loses track of who's playing on what team. The following is the first in a two part series which should bring the reader up to date.)

AL East

The American League East will again be the scene of a four team race that practically promises to go down to the last week. The Boston Red Sox, defending champion Detroit Tigers, New York Yankees and Baltimore Orioles will be involved in a season-long fight for the top while the Cleveland Indians and Milwaukee Brewers continue to build for the future.

BOSTON RED SOX

The Red Sox didn't make any trades over the winter although they signed free agent Orlando Cepeda to be their designated pinch hitter. The rest of the Sox will be the same team that finished only 1/2 game behind Detroit in the final standings last year. This includes a pitching staff featuring Marty Pattin, Sonny Siebert, Luis Tiant, Jack Curtis and Lynn McGlothen as starters with Bill Lee, Bob Bolin and Bob Veale coming out of the bullpen. The infield will consist of Carl Yastrzemski or Danny Cater at first, Doug Griffin at second, Luis Aparicio at shortstop and Rico Petrocelli at third. John Kennedy and Mario Guerrero will serve as the backup man. The outfield will have Reggie Smith, Tommy Harper, Carl Yastrzemski (if he doesn't play first base), Ben Oglivie and rookie Dwight Evans, who came up last September and looked impressive. Carlton Fisk, who was last year's rookie-of-the-year, will handle the catching duties.

DETROIT TIGERS

The Tigers also stayed pat with their team. They have a strong No. 1 starter in Mickey Lolich, and a good nucleus including Woody Fryman, John Hiller and newly acquired Jim Perry to back him up. The catching will be handled by veterans Bill Freehan and Duke Sims. At first will be either Norm Cash or Frank Howard. The second base chores will be handled by Dick McAuliffe and Tony Taylor with Ed Brinkman at short and Aurelio Rodriguez at third. The outfield will consist of Willie Horton, Mickey Stanley, Jim Northrup, Gates Brown and Al Kaline.

NEW YORK YANKEES

The Yankees traded away some of their youth to obtain some veterans who are expected to help their cause this season. Craig Nettles, acquired from Cleveland and Matty Alou, obtained from Oakland should be able to give the Bronx Bombers the muscle they haven't had since the heydays of Mantle and Maris. The pitching will be handled by Mel Stottlemyre, Fritz Peterson, Steve Kline and relief specialist Sparky Lyle. Thurman Munson will be the catcher, Felipe Alou and Ron Blomberg will be at first base, with Horace Clarke at second, Gene Michael at short and Nettles or Celerino Sanchez at third. The outfield will consist of Roy White, Bobby Murcer and Matty Alou with Johnny Callison and Ron Swoboda as backups.

BALTIMORE ORIOLES

Baltimore traded away Pat Dobson, one of their starting pitchers Dave Johnson, their second baseman and Johnny Oates, a catcher, in order to obtain catcher Earl Williams from the Atlanta Braves. He will take over that job for the Orioles. The infield will have Bong Powell at first, Bob Grich at second, Mark Belanger at short and Brooks Robinson at third. The outfield will include Merv Rettenmund, Paul Blair and Don Baylor. The pitching staff has Jim Palmer, Mike Cuellar, Dave McNally, Doyle Alexander, and Eddie Watt amongst its ranks.

CLEVELAND INDIANS

Cleveland had Gaylord Perry to thank for their resurrection. He has sprung the hope that someday, the Indians will be a winner. Youngsters Milt Wilcox, Steve Dunning and Dick Tidrow highlight Cleveland's staff. Dave Duncan will be the catcher and the infield will be handled by Chris Chambliss at first, Jack Brohamer at second, Frank Duffy or Leo Cardenas at short and Jerry Kenney at third. Roaming the outfield will be Roy Foster, ex-Yankees Charlie Spikes and Rusty Torres, Buddy Bell, and George Hendricks.

MILWAUKEE BREWERS

The Milwaukee Brewers are rebuilding but it will be quite a while before their fans get a winner. The pitchers will be Skip Lockwood, Bill Parsons, Jerry Bell and a host of others. Ellie Rodriquez will be the catcher, George Scott will be at first base, Ron Theobald will handle second base, Rick Auerbach will be at short with newly acquired Don Money at third. The outfield will have such characters as John Briggs, Ollie Brown, Dave May, Brock Davis and Joe Lahoud patrolling its area.

Yes, there are four teams in the A. L. East who have a real good chance at winning it all. It should be very interesting, indeed.

1973 MVP Dick Allen

AL West

The world champion Oakland A's and the Chicao White Sox will be the top contenders in this year's AL West race.

OAKLAND A'S

Oakland has made a few changes in their roster, the most notable being that they traded Mike Epstein to the Texas Rangers for reliever Horacio Pina. This leaves the first base job open for world series hero Gene Tenace or Mike Hegan. Roy Foose will be the No. 1 catcher with Tenace being moved to first. Either Dick Green, Ted Kubiak or Timmy Cullen will be at second base, Bert Campaneris at short (after serving his week's suspension for last year's bat throwing episode in the playoffs) and Sal Bando at third round out the infield. The outfield has all-star Reggie Jackson, playoff hero Gonzalo Marquez, Joe Rudi and Angel Mangual. The A's will, once again, have the strongest pitching staff in either league. This includes Catfish Hunter, Vida Blue, Ken Holtzman and John Odom as starters with Rollie Fingers, Darold Knowles and Joe Horlen coming out of the bullpen.

CHICAGO WHITE SOX

The White Sox feel that with a healthy Bill Melton, they can beat out the A's this time around. Melton will return to his third base position. Filling out the infield will be Rich Morales or Eddie Leon at shortstop, Mike Andrews at second and MVP Dick Allen at frist base. The outfield will have all-star Carlos May in left, newly acquired Ken Henderson in center and Rick Reichardt in right. Ed Herrmann will be the No. 1 catcher. The mound corps will consist of knuckleballer Wilbur Wood, Stan Bahnsen, Bart Johnson, Terry Forster and Eddie Fisher.

CALIFORNIA ANGELS

California Angels took several gambles in acquiring Frank Robinson from the Dodgers and hiring former Arizona State coach Bobby Winkles as manager. Robinson will take one outfield position with Vada Pinson and Ken Berry taking the other two. The infield will have either Bob Oliver or Jim Spencer at first. Sandy Alomar at second, Bill Grabarkewitz at short and Bobby Valentine at third. The catching job is wide open and will go to either Jeff Torborg, Art Kusnyer or Jack Hiatt. The pitching staff will have Nolan Ryan, Clyde Wright, Rudy May and Bill Singer as starters with Steve Barber, Don Rose and Lloyd Allen coming in as relievers.

MINNESOTA TWINS

The Minnesota Twins have an outside chance if Tony Oliva can return to his form of '71 after undergoing serious knee surgery. If so, he will return to right field. The Twins also obtained pitcher Bill Hands from the Chicago Cubs in a deal that saw Dave LaRoche go to Wrigley Field. Thus the Twins will have Hands, Jim Kaat and Bert Blyleven as starters. The Twins relief specialist will be ex-Brewer Ken Sanders. The catching job will probably go to Phil Roof or George Mitterwald but it could go to rookie Glenn Borgman. The infield will have Harmon Killebrew at first, Rod Carew at second, Danny Thompson at short and either Steve Braun or Eric Soderholm at third. The other outfielders, beside Oliva, will be Bobby Darwin, Mim Holt and Joe Lis.

KANSAS CITY ROYALS

The Kansas City Royals made a managerial change, switching from Bob Lemon to Jack McKeon, and an important personnel change, sending Roger Nelson and Richie Scheinblum to the Cincinnati Reds in exchange for Wayne Simpson and Hal McRae. Besides Simpson, the starting rotation will have Dick Drago, Paul Splittorff, and Bruce Dal Canton. The catcher will be Ed Kirkpatrick of Jerry May. The first baseman will be John Mayberry, Cookie Rojas will be at second, Fred Patek is the shortstop and Paul Schaal will be a third. The outfield will have Amos Otis in center, Lou Piniella in left and Hal McRae in right.

TEXAS RANGERS

The Texas Rangers have some new faces in the lineup, a new manager and that's about all one can say for them. The new manager is Whitey Herzog and the new men are Mike Epstein, Rico Carty and Alex Johnson. They may make the Rangers look respectable but not enough to be winners at least not this year anyway. The pitchers include Dick Bosman, Pete Broberg, Rich Hand, and Bill Gogolewski. Dick Billings will be the catcher, Epstein will be at first, Vic Harris and Jim Mason will be the second basemen. Toby Harrah will play shortstop, and Dave Nelson or Joe Lovitto will play third. Besides Carty and Johnson, the outfielders will be Ted Ford, Elliott Maddox, Jeff Burroughs and Larry Bittner.

The AL West will have a heck of a race between Oakland and Chicago but the rest of the pack will probably be way behind at season's end.

UMass Springs Into Action

Minutemen Host Yale In Opener

By MIKE BROPHY

The 1973 home baseball season gets under way tomorrow as the Minutemen play host to Yale of the Ivy League on Earl Lorden Field at 2 p.m. The Elis will bring with them a 1-6 record from the South and played Springfield College yesterday afternoon in New Haven.

Yale teams have not been regarded as baseball contenders for many years but this could be their year if their pitching holds out. Coach MacKenzie said, "We are shooting for a .500 season right now and a victory over UMass would certainly get things off to a nice start."

The team was not noted for its strong hitting while in the South and Mackenzie fears that he will depend on pitching to hold down the opponents run output as his own offense will not have a high run output per game average. "We will hope that our men such as Gallagher and Bob Corcoran will be able to keep the opponents at bay until we can score a run or two . . . and sometimes that takes a while when your offense is not too potent," according to MacKenzie.

UMass coach Dick Bergquist, however, feels that the Yale nine is perhaps "a better team than their record shows and one with a strong pitching staff." He is hopeful that the big guns in the UMass lineup will be able to get to Gallagher early in the game so they might see some of the less experienced relief pitchers.

Although Yale had a less than pleasant 1-6 record on their southern swing, they played some of the better teams in the Southeast Conference including Clemson and Tennessee. This is definitely a team to be aware of as one looks ahead to the rest of the season in New England baseball.

Coming off the Spring trip to California UMass has seen nothing but rain, snow, and cloudy skies. Consequently, Coach Bergquist is a little on the edgy side as his men have not really played outside in the chilly New England air at all. When asked about precautionary measures being taken to prevent arms from stiffening up Coach Barber stated that "nothing out of the ordinary would be done." He elaborated on "the need for extended warm up time for all of the players and especially the pitchers to prevent stiffness."

Mike Flanagan, who Bergquist considers his "hottest pitcher at this particular time" will be on the mound Saturday facing Gallagher. Flanagan recorded a 2-0 record in California with his wins over Cal Baptist and Stanford. He also holds the team lead in the ERA department with a 1.06 figure and has one save to his credit. In 17 innings of work Flanagan has struck out 17 while walking only nine batters.

Flanagan appears to be ready as he is fully recovered from his wounded ankle. While on the Cal trip he chipped two foul balls down off the inside of his ankle in what was a painful injury. Vic Keedy has given him the green light though and it is certain that he'll be out there.

Stickers Take On Green

By HOWIE BLOOM

After all the precipitation we've been blessed with the past four days, everybody's looking skyward for some sign that the inclement weather is gone for good. They're looking for rainbows in the sky. But don't strain your eyes or crane your necks, UMass lacrosse fans, because the only color you're gonna see on campus tomorrow is Big Green.

That's right. On Saturday at 2:00 P.M., Garber's Gorillas open their home schedule against the stickers from Dartmouth College after having their original home opener against UConn drowned out. After fielding their finest freshman team in 16 years last season the lacrossers from Hanover, N.H. are chock full of talented young players to complement the veterans.

At attack, sophomores Matt Dwyer and Jake Dunn, who combined for 44 points in 1972 will back up starters Jim Craig and Dick Gamper, and standout Scott Anderson. Anderson is the key to Dartmouth's attack this year, as he was last season when he scored 42 points and was named All-Ivy.

Another All-Ivy is goaltender Mitch Whiteley, who is the old man of the team, having started for the past two seasons. Whiteley has had some trouble early this season, yielding an average of over nine goals a game so far.

The 2-3 Big Green, who own losses to Navy, Duke, and North Carolina, and wins over Randolph Moran and East Carolina, run primarily two midfields, with Juniors Rick Gerandi and Dave Crenshaw and seniors Al Frechofer and John Lyons the mainstays. All four are strong two-way players.

For the first time in a long time, defense is one of Dartmouth's strong points. Returning from last season are Kevin O'Shea, Mike Shedlosky and Ron Latham. Sophomores John Brumsted, Ed White and Dave Farmer will be on the bench, ready to give them a breather.

Coach Garber's starting combinations remain unchanged since yesterday. The lineup will be: John Rutledge, goal; Bill Blaustein, Rich Lally, and John McCarthy, defense; John Martin, Jack Moran, and Hirsch Seidman, midfield; Fred Michele, Pete Connolly, and Frank Garahan, attack. Dwight Blomquist is a doubtful participant in Saturday's clash.

Crew Launches Against WPI

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

For the first time in two years, a school has dared to face UMass crew team at home. This Saturday starting at noon, with the second freshmen eight men and a coxswain shells, and with races every twenty minutes afterwards, Worcester Polytechnical Institute will open the season for the Minutemen rowers.

There will be five races, with the feature race last between the varsity eight man shells. Besides the varsity eight, competition, there will be a varsity four, JV eight and two frosh eight races.

The course is on the swollen Connecticut River. The oarsmen will have to row upstream against the current to the finish line, which will be directly in front of the Calvin Coolidge Bridge (the bridge which leads from Hadley to Northhampton). Take the first left before the bridge to reach the home-water of the Minutemen.

Coach Mike Vespoli is very optimistic as to the chances of this year's crew since the ice melted early this year, allowing them to hit the river three weeks earlier than usual. Only three members graduated last year, so the remaining rowers when combined with last year's frosh which finished second in the Dad Vail, provides a very strong nucleus.

Last fall, UMass entered two shells which were juggled supposedly to balance off each against W.P.I. and the Coast Guard lightweights. One shell edged W.P.I. by 3/10 of a second, while the other UMass entry finished fourth. The Minutemen eight is expected to be better prepared this time, as only one shell will represent the varsity. Nevertheless, it should be a good race and a chance to see if this squad measures up to Vespoli's expectations.

The freshmen crew team will get its first tatste of competition tomorrow. Vespoli said, "The freshmen don't have the size of last year, but they have considerably better technique and a strong desire to win."

The season starts tomorrow, and if the weather is nice it will be a good opportunity to watch the oarsmen in their one and only home regatta this year. The crew bus will be available tomorrow morning at 11:30 in front of Boyden to transport anyone who wishes to watch the regatta.

WTOY

If you enjoyed the North Carolina - UMass NIT matchup at the Blue Wall a while back, then you just may be excited enough to see if WTOY can do the trick again--broadcast a UMass sporting event on the wide Blue Wall screen complete with live commentary.

WTOY will try it again this Sunday night at nine o'clock as the video tape station will telecast tomorrow's 1973 home Lacrosse opener as the Gorillas of Massachusetts host the Big Green of Dartmouth College. Marty Kelley will handle the play-by-play and Howie Bloom will assist in the telecast. Bill McKinnon and Art Tessimond will produce and direct the show.

Trackmen Battle NU

By WALT POWERS

There are few teams that Ken O'Brien's trackmen would rather beat than Northeastern. These two teams face each other three times a year, and Irwin Cohen's Huskies have an annoying way coming out on top. Still these meets are usually close, and tomorrow at 7 o'clock down at Lewellyn Derby track, the rivalry will resume. Boston University, the Yankee Conference runnerup indoors, will also compete.

In B.U. and Northeastern UMass will be facing their toughest competition of the season. Northeastern beat out the Minutemen for the New England cross-country championship last fall, and lost the New England indoor track Championship on the last event of the meet. BU, weak overall, has some of the most talented individual performers in New England, and Ford Dennis, the IC4A indoor dash champ, could be the fastest runner east of the Mississippi. Where does that leave UMass.

"Our depth gives us an edge over B.U.," said O'Brien. "And if the Terriers score heavily in our weaker events, we've got a real shot against Northeastern". On paper though you'd have to give the Huskies the edge.

The meet will highlight individual rivalries. Co-captain Steve Levine will battle his Northeastern counterpart Paul Horrigan No. 1 in New England in the 440. Levine came from behind to beat Horrigan and John Wootan last winter, and Levine is a better runner now. . "Errol Prisbbee (O'Brien's assistant) has taught me to run more smoothly and pump my arms" said Levine. Two pair of sophomores who fought it out in the cross-country and winter track season, Bill Gillin and Randy Thomas of UMass and Billy Rowe and Kenny Flanders of Northeastern, will go at it again tomorrow in the distance events.

The sprinters had jumpers from all three teams will be closely matched, but Northeastern has three of the top four indoor sprinters in New England this year, and likewise will need peak season performance from their throwers to neutralize the Northeastern weightman.

The big question right now is whether the Minutemen can compete successfully against Northeastern successfully in their first meet of the season. "I'd have preferred to Northeastern later in the season," "but this will give us a good chance to assess our potential, and a strong showing could propel us to an outstanding season," said O'Brien.

Senate Takes Aim At 'Junkets'

By STEVE FINE

Conference trips sponsored by student money were the focal point last night of a special session of the Student Senate.

Approving the budgets of Index, the Black Communications Project, the Amateur Radio Association, Drum, and the Poverty Committee, the Senate took particular care in scrutinizing each groups appropriations for conference trips, which were referred to as "junkets" by one senator.

The group that drew the most flak was S.W.A.P. (Student Workshop on Activities Problems) whose budget passed and was later voted to be reconsidered Bob Chiller, treasurer of the Senate, said it was hypocritical of them to cut out conferences of other groups, yet not eliminate funding of a conference that many senators attend themselves. S.W.A.P. is presently funded $4,085 to subsidize the $45 fee for each student attending the conference. 110 students will attend the conference next semester, with each paying $7.50 to attend.

S.W.A.P. states in its rationale (the reason for funding the group) that its purpose is "to provide a forum for discussion of University problems at an off-campus setting, where issues pertaining to this campus are debated in order to attempt reforms and new solutions." The people who attend S.W.A.P. include students, administrators, faculty, and government officials.

The Senate had voted last Wednesday that no groups could be budgeted for conference money without receiving 2/3 approval of the Senate.

Mike Gregory, Chairperson of the Senate's Rents and Fees Committee, said that he would seek some action against the monies appropriated by the Black-oriented magazine Drum. What this action would be he did not specify.

"I want them to make clear where their conference is and what they are going to do there," he said. Drum magazine is allocated $32,995 next year to print four issues, of which $1200 has been proposed for conferences.

Bill Roberts, Editor-in-Chief of Drum, said that many improvements had come from attending conferences around the country. He added, however, that he could not say exactly the conferences his group would attend next year or where they would be.

"In the fall edition of Drum we were able to reproduce a picture that had frayed edges with the knowledge received at a conference," he said.

Roberts later said that there was no way he could say what conference his group would be attending next year. "We pick and choose conferences we attend according to our needs," he stated.

The passing of the Index (the UMass yearbook) budget also came after a change in monies that had been allocated for a conference. With the new rule concerning conferences, it was necessary for the Senate to take $150 away from Index's transportation category, and $50 away from the lodging category and create a new account under conferences. The conference that this $210 has been allocated to is the ACP (Associated Collegiate Press) conference in Chicago next November.

This is the same conference that the Senate has refused to allow the Collegian to attend, when they refused to appropriate $500 in its budget. This issue was reconsidered again last night, but was defeated.

Jim Gold, the business manager of Index, said that the $2,000 appropriated by the Senate to finance the Index, would help finance 8,000-10,000 copies. Other funds to finance it would come from a $3.50 sitting fee seniors pay to have their photographs taken, $3.00 the photo company would return for each student it took a picture of, and the subscriptions students would pay for receiving the Index by subscription.

The $11,940 budget of the Black Communications Project, had $1,000 allocated for a conference they plan to hold on campus.

Neither the Amateur Radio Association's budget of $2,278 nor the $1,650 budget of the Poverty Committee have money allocated for conferences.

How New Is The New Governance Plan?

By BILL DENSMORE

Campus leaders agreed over the weekend that the newly released Trustee statement on University governance will not change relationships between faculty, students, and administrators - at least for the present.

But they also acknowledged that the document will have an effect on faculty collective bargaining attempts, even though it was not intended initially to do so.

According to Robert R. Wellman, a professor in the School of Education who chaired the committee which wrote the document, the new governance procedures were conceived as a result of former Chancellor Oswald Tippo's fall 1971 resignation.

Wellman said yesterday that confusion over the President's role in on-campus budgets, and a dispute over the composition of a Chancellor-search committee were principle factors which necessitated the formulizing of governance procedures.

In addition to being the member of the Pan-University Study Group for the Review of University Governance Procedures, Wellman is also the chairman of a group formed to oppose attempts at faculty unionization called "the committee of concerned faculty."

Serving with Wellman on the group which wrote the new document was Joseph D. Burroughs, University professor of Human Development who is now ahead of a group which supports faculty unionization. Burroughs is head of the local chapter of the American Assoc. of University Professors (AAUP).

Some observers have said the document is an attempt to head off unionization because it sets-up primary areas of responsibility for faculty including promotions, tenure and salary adjustments.

But Wellman says the document was conceived long before unionization became an issue adding that it was only after several revisions that the document was acceptable to the Trustees.

"Of course this is going to become an element within all the discussion concerning unionization," he said yesterday, "but it was definitely unrelated to the union movement."

Wellman thinks that for the first time students will be "guaranteed" a voice in development of academic policies and evaluating a faculty member's effectiveness.

And he says that the area which describes "primary responsibilities for student and faculty groups "basically articulates pretty much what already goes on."

"The document is good in that it actualizes a concept of University government which we have been trying for years on campus to get accepted by the Trustees," according to Joseph Burroughs.

Burroughs said yesterday that "the Trustees wouldn't accept some of the language we originally proposed," adding that "there's nothing legally binding about it--the Trustees can meet tomorrow and rescind it."

According to Burroughs the document parallels 1966 AAUP governance procedures which "we've (AAUP-local) tried for four years to get the Trustees to endorse." "What I want to see from the AAUP point of view is that such a document become a chapter in a legally binding contract," Burroughs added yesterday.

UMass-Amherst Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said Saturday the document "provides for what we've been doing with the faculty senate in an ad hoc fashion anyway."

Bromery cautioned that "the document is only going to work as long as each one of us has a desire to work together," adding that "if we end up in any way in an adversary relationship, no governance document is going to work."

Bromery thinks the document will make campus groups more interested in what the faculty senate and student senate does.

"I'm hoping it will produce a real concern among faculty and students for working with their appropriate governance vehicles," he said.

Bromery also added that the move towards collective bargaining "says to me that people have issues they are concerned about that somehow or other I'm not hearing."

Student Government Assoc. head and former Trustee Larry Ladd said yesterday the document "doesn't help students very much in terms of academic policy," but he said because of it, "now the administration cannot ignore any resolution the senate makes."

According to Ladd, "when the Trustees read the (original) document they were threatened, because it implied that campus governance units had inherent rights."

Ladd felt the document "was not originally intended as a counter to faculty unionization," but ' if you talk to certain sponsors now they may say it was intended to be for political purposes."

Low VD Level On Campus Attributed To 'Atmosphere'

By MARK B. CITRON

People are contacting venereal diseases throughout this country at what is often termed epidemic rates, but here at UMass the incidence is relatively low.

The students can be grateful for a dynamic University Health Services program of treatment and education, but another important aspect, according to Barry Averill, Director of University Health Services, is the social atmosphere on campus.

Averill said that a major contributory factor in the spread of VD is the casual sexual contact, opposed to the more permanent sexual relationships with one partner that exists on American campuses.

Whatever the contributory factors are, the statistics on VD incidence represent a mixed bag. National figures are often suspect because of the many cases that go unreported

On the other hand, Averill said that University reporting of cases has improved while the incidence of cases has risen. Averill cited statistics which showed a rise from one case of syphilis during the Fall term in 1971 to three in 1972, while gonorrhea rose from 46 to 76 cases.

This represents 400 cases per 100,000 population for the University in contrast with 2,500 cases per 100,000 population in Atlanta, Georgia.

Averill was quick to point out that this rise in VD cases should not be interpreted solely as an increase in VD incidence, but also as an increase in reporting of cases, and an increase in public awareness of the problem.

A symposium on VD held in November, 1971, supported by the Communicable Disease Center in Atlanta brought about 75 Health professionals here, representing a major in-service training program. An outgrowth of this symposium was an increase in the number of on-campus laboratory testings for possible VD.

The signs have gotten faded and torn, the war has changed hands, but the bombs still fall on Indochina.

UMass VD Level "Low"

Many cases of VD are asymptomatic, a VD carrier showing no signs of the disease, and through in-service education programs, Averill says "the threshold for taking tests has lowered", bringing higher reports of VD incidence.

A major problem in venereal diseases is diagnosis of asymptomatic women, who on a national level represent 80% of all VD cases for women. A random sampling of 1,500 women was taken last year through the Health Services Contraception Clinic. One case of gonorrhea showed up. Averill said these results show that "there does not appear to be a large reservoir of undetected VD" at the University.

The sensitive patient, either too shy to come in the infirmary or afraid of social repercussions after reporting a venereal disease is one of the targets of the Health Services education program. A major effort has been made to assure confidentiality to get these VD cases to come to the infirmary.

Patients can now see a physician without stating their problem to anyone else but their physician by checking off a box when signing in saying that their problem is personal. Their case is then assigned a number or letters, and no names are used in reporting the case. The students is then asked to bring his contacts in so they too can be treated.

If a student doesn't want to contact their contacts, Judy Sharpe of Health Services enters the picture. Ms. Sharpe is a public health nurse with experience in epidemiology, and she gets in touch with the contacts.

The Peer Sex Education program (PSE) acts as the educational arm of the University Health Services. Students are trained as para-professionals to counsel students individually and in groups.

Ms. Jane Zapka, Director of Community Health Services, said that while VD education was only one aspect of the PSE program misinformation concerning VD was a major problem. Ms. Zapka often confronts the idea that syphillis and gonorrhea "really don't happen to nice people", but this is one of the classical myths concerning VD. VD is unprejudiced; it knows no class or racial boundaries.

Woman Doctor Raps Abortions

By MARK B. CITRON

Dr. Mildred Jefferson, President of the Value of Life Committee, spoke out against abortion last Friday night at the invitation of the UMass People's Anti-Abortion Coalition.

A group of about 50, consisting mostly of non-students, waited over an hour past Dr. Jefferson's scheduled arrival to hear the Boston surgeon speak.

Dr. Jefferson's talk attacked the pro-abortion arguments on the biological-scientific view of the unborn, the medical ethics involved in abortion and the tradition sanctity of life ethics.

"Science knows when life begins and ends. . .killing a cell is ending life," Dr. Jefferson said. Dr. Jefferson went on to point out that although confusion exists in the medical definition as to when human life begins, "the point of transmission of life," it was generally accepted that life begins as soon as a fertilized egg implants itself in the womb.

"Embryo. . .and. . .fetus are only names of an unborned baby; it is still a baby. .abortion is destruction of a baby before it is born. That's the name of the game," Dr. Jefferson said.

Dr. Jefferson complained that present laws put the "death contract" in the hands of a licensed physician and the pregnant mother. "Only individual doctors standard of ethics is the criterion" in abortion, said Dr. Jefferson.

Dr. Jefferson raised her fear that this lack of guidelines will eventually lead to the destruction of unwanted or defective individuals. Dr. Jefferson said that this destruction is similar to the Nazis Germany philosophy "that people not economically sound should be eliminated."

Dr. Jefferson hoped that women who become pregnant after rape don't have abortions. She said, "part of the emotional appeal (of the pro-abortion arguments) are women pregnant due to rape and incest."

Dr. Jefferson went on to say that these emotional arguments "broke the walls" to bring about todays laws favoring abortion. She said that abortion in these cases would be "more harmful than running the pregnancy to term."

Dr. Jefferson, in answering questions from the floor, said that women who obtain abortions are not being told about the medical and psychological implications of abortion or the alternatives to abortion. Women are purposely not told, causing an unrealistic atmosphere and this, said Dr. Jefferson, represents "a black mark on the medical profession."

Dr. Jefferson in addition to being President of the Value of Life Committee, is also Vice President of Mass. Citizens for Life and national board member of both the Right to Life and Americans United for Life organizations. She is also a Board Certified Surgeon and Assistant Clinical Instructor in Surgery at University Hospital in Boston.

Senior Committee Meeting Scheduled

Senior Committee Chairman John "Jack" Drane urged all seniors to attend a special Senior Committee meeting to be held Tuesday evening in the Campus Center at 6:30 p.m.

Drane said that the meeting was scheduled because of a lack of quorum at the regular Sunday evening meeting. Fifteen seniors must be present for a quorum.

Recommendations from the Senior Class Gift-sub-committee will be voted on and reports will be heard from the Senior Day sub-committee and from the Senior Speaker sub-committee.

UMass Student Held On Suspicion Of Bomb Threat

A 21 year old UMass student was arrested by campus police Friday morning after alledgedly making a telephoned bomb threat to the School of Business Administration, from his Puffton Village apartment.

Melvin E. Hall of Everett and 346 Puffton Village was being held as of Saturday evening at the Hampshire County House of Correction in lieu of $200 bail, following an early afternoon arraignment in Northhampton on Saturday.

Hall pleaded innocent to a formal charge of making a false report of explosives, and as a result, District Court Presiding Justice Luke F. Ryan scheduled a hearing for this coming Tuesday.

According to campus police, Hall was arrested at his apartment Friday morning as part of an ongoing investigation of bomb threats being made to campus buildings.

A call made at 8:10 a.m. to the SBA building was alledgedly traced to his apartment telephone. Three campus police officers assisted by the telephone company, made the investigation Friday morning. They were Det. Sgt. Francis Mazzei, Policewoman Judy Jackson, and Patrolman Dexter Shearer.

Two more bomb threats were made to campus buildings shortly after the one alledgedly made by Smith. Another threat to the School of Business Administration was received by the Amherst Fire Dept. and one to the School of Education was received by the Amherst Police.

There was no word as to whether any of the calls were related or made by the same individual.

Grinnan Resigns 'In Best Interest' Of CC

By DON BISHOP

Mr. Warren T. Grinnan, whose resignation as Manager of the Campus Center was announced at the end of last week, stated in a Friday interview that his decision was made in the best interest of the Campus Center.

The resignation will become effective on November 4th of this year, when Grinnan's present one year contract will expire.

Grinnan contends that the not yet appointed permanent Director of the Campus Center will be taking over "approximately 90% of the duties of those of the manager" and he cannot therefore justify the employment of both positions.

Although Grinnan has applied for the permanent Director's post, he would not speculate on his chances for appointment there, but presumably would accept an offer for the job.

Grinnan denied that he had received any "political" pressure to resign from any organization or office associated with the Campus Center.

He also stated that it was strictly a coincidence that the final report of the Arthur D. Little Co. survey on the Campus Center had been privately released in recent days.

Grinnan has served as Manager from the time that work on the Campus Center first began, which was five years ago. During his tenure, Grinnan feels that "on the surface, the different enterprises of the building have worked out well, when compared with other new buildings of a similar nature."

Grinnan contends that the main problem of the building remains the fact that it's objectives or total function has never really been defined by the various groups who use the building.

He feels that a lot of definitions have been thrown around, but none has been finally agreed upon by all concerns.

Grinnan hopes for an end to the "rhetoric", and a serious effort to clear up this problem be undertaken as quickly as possible.

He would not say what he feels should be the goal for the complex. While he has ideas for this, Grinnan stated that it would be necessary for him to sit down with others involved with the building and receive their input before he came up with any final definition or goal for the Campus Center.

At the present time however, Grinnan noted a sense of frustration at what he senses is an unwillingness of the various concerns to sit down and come to a quick decision.

In regards to the managerial concepts of the building Grinnan felt that perhaps students, management and administration had stuck too much to what he termed "traditional models."

Terry Grinnan, whose resignation as Manager of the Campus Center was announced last Thursday, feels that the primary problem in the building right now is the lack of a workable goal or purpose for it.

A News Analysis

Governance Plan 'Harmless'

By BILL DENSMORE

The new University governance plan which was unveiled with much fanfare by the UMass Board of Trustees at last Wednesday's meeting, is not likely to significantly effect relations between students, faculty or administrative groups.

The consensus of administrators, faculty and student leaders is that the document formalizes existing relationships and is a watered-down version of what the original study group recommended to Trustees.

The document defines procedures for bringing a motion before the Trustees, explains "primary responsibilities" of the Faculty Senate, the Student Senate, the Chancellor and the President, and sets up two University-wide committees for budgetary and long- range planning.

Central to the document is the setting of a time limit within which the campus Chancellor (at Amherst, Randolph W. Bromery) must respond to a recommendation made by the Faculty or Student Senate, or other representative group.

It states that such recommendations will become policy of the University unless disapproved by the Chancellor or President within twenty days of receipt; or unless disapproved by the Board of Trustees within seventy days of the original receipt by the Chancellor. The new document provides that the Trustees must give "written reasons in detail" when disapproving recommendations of a campus governing body.

The document says faculty "will exercise primary responsibility in such matters as curriculum, subject matter and methods of instruction, research, admission, libraries . . . matters of faculty status, such as appointments, reappointments, promotions, tenure, and salary adjustments."

Students, according to the Trustee document, "will have primary responsibility for services and activities which are designed primarily by students, managing student political affairs and organizational matters, and setting standards for student behavior, conduct and discipline."

Significantly, the document delegates to the Chancellor the power to "appoint, promote, and grant salary adjustments to professional and non-profession personnel on campus."

Thus the document spells out what the trustees feel are appropriate duties and responsibilities for each campus group.

However, central to the new procedures is the principle of a "delegated responsibility"; that is, all the powers or "primary responsibilities" given to the President, Chancellor, faculty or student senate are by law ultimately under the authority of the Board, and continue to be despite the governance document.

The statement of Trustee policy begins as follows:

"The Board of Trustees has all authority, responsibility, rights, privileges, powers and duties or organization and government."

The Collegian has obtained a copy of the Pan-University study group's draft copy which was written prior to the final revisions necessary to obtain Trustee-approval of the governance document.

Comparison of the draft copy and the final Trustee copy reveals changes which indicate several deletions, additions and word changes "watering-down" the effect of the document were made before it could get Trustee sanction.

First, the final document approved by the Trustees clearly differs from the study group's proposal in the definition of the phrase "primary responsibility".

In the Pan-University study, "primary responsibility" meant "initiating recommendations" which "may become policy" or "making decisions which will be overruled only for written reasons stated in detail."

The final document says primary responsibility "shall mean the capacity to initiate recommendations, after appropriate consultation."

Making policy and initiating recommendations are different words and imply different conceptions of the kind of power the Trustees want the new document delegate.

Second, the original document defines the powers of campus governing bodies as "rights"—in the Trustee-approved version the same powers are called "privileges."

Third, the final document leaves the Trustees with the right to choose a campus Chancellor—in the original document the President had such delegated authority.

Fourth, in the final document, the Trustees "reserve the right to alter, amend, or revoke the foregoing statement on University Governance, in part or in whole, at any time."

No such statement was included in the pan-University study's original document.

Fifth, the following statement was included in the original proposal, but was deleted from the Trustee-approved version:

"Recent changes within the University require, at this time, a re-examination of the functions of the various components of the University in University governance.

"In particular, the development of the University into a multicampus institution and the establishment of the President's office apart from all the campuses, require a re-definition of the functions of the Board, the President's office, the campus administrations, and the various governing bodies within the University."

At least one campus leader has speculated that the above statement was deleted because the Trustees did not want to acknowledge publicly that a redefinition was necessary, or that "recent changes"—perhaps faculty unionization attempts—were serious.

Johnetta Cole Views Racism, Capitalism

The New American Movement brought its "Symposium of Capitalism and Racism" to a close last Friday afternoon with a panel in the Student Union, featuring Johnetta Cole, Stanley Kwong, and Edward Texiera.

Johnetta Cole, a member of the W.E.B. DuBois department of AfroAmerican Studies, said, "This symposium has argued that the relationship between racism and capitalism is a close one. We (the panelists) chose to visit actual socialist countries that have dealt with these problems, the problems of minorities, successfully."

Ms. Cole has recently been a member of an Afro-American delegation to Cuba. She spoke about the expectations she had, saying: "We knew that, theoretically, it is possible to have a society without racism. But, because we are Black folks, Cuba had to show us this society. We were looking at it vis-a-vis the perspective of oppressed people, not the perspective of capitalists, or of white workers - who do not have power but who do have privilege."

She said, "We wanted to know, 'How far has Cuba still got to go?' and our response was 'How far Cuba has come!'"

She attributed this reaction to the fact that "In Cuba, we have a society whose organization no longer perpetuates racism. Here is a government that is explicitly anti-racist. . .When we say that 50% of those in the medical schools are women, that includes black women!"

Stanley Kwong, a former teacher at Stonybrook and now a grad student in the School of Ed, traveled in the eastern part of China from December 16, 1971 to January 14, 1972. He said, "China is a single state of many nationalities. . .There are the Tibetans, Manchurians, Burmese, and the Han, among others. Many of these cultures are still in a feudal, and sometimes a pre-feudal, state."

He said, "It is the 'Han' who most Americans refer to when they say 'Chinese'. . .But there is not a single Chinese people. Each cultural nationality which has a population and area large enough to support self-administration retains an autonomous government and a separate language."

In speaking about education, he said, "Care has been taken that no single group dominates the school system. . .Most of the books that I saw were minority histories."

Edward Texiera, who has recently been a Roxbury candidate for state legislature and has traveled in Eastern Germany and the U.S.S.R., said "I spent two weeks in Uzbekistan, (which is an area of the U.S.S.R. east of the Caspian Sea). This was the Mississippi of Czarist Russia. It is cotton country and the people there are a darker race. Fifty years ago, women could not walk on the street without a veil. In the city of Tasket, we were met by the mayor, who is a woman, and the president of Uzbekistan is a woman."

When asked about anti-semitism in East Germany, Texiera said, "Of those Jews that survived Nazism, most went to Israel. . .Now we have the situation where, in West Germany the people are anti-Jew, but pro-Israel, and in East Germany, they are pro-Jew, but anti-Israel."

He also said "In Kiev, we spoke to Jewish women in a synagogue. As far as we could tell, there were no problems, but they may have been hesitant to talk with foreigners."

Picasso Dies, Working Till End

By MICHAEL GOLDSMITH
Associated Press Writer

MOUGINS, France (AP)-Pablo Picasso, the greatest artist of his time and a giant in the history of painting, died Sunday. He was working to add to his prolific output until a few hours before his death.

The 91-year-old artist died soon after awakening at his home in the hills overlooking the Mediterranean. He had dined with friends Saturday night and was reported to have been the gayest member of the party, eating heartily and telling stories. After the friends left at around 11:30 p.m., Picasso went to his studio to work.

The painter's wife, Jacqueline, called a physician Sunday morning. By the time Dr.

...At his side were the drawing crayons that he always took with him... not one of the most inventive painters...but one of the most productive...

Georges Rance arrived 10 minutes later at 11:40 a.m., Picasso was dead.

The Spanish-born painter, who provoked several revolutions in modern art, had been working regularly and vigorously in recent weeks despite a series of attacks of grippe during the winter, friends said. He recently had made arrangements for a showing in Avignon of his production in the past three years.

Death was attributed to a heart attack that followed a pulmonary edema, or a collection of fluid in the lungs. Picasso was stricken as he awakened and died in his bedroom, a member of the household said. At his side were the drawing crayons that he always took with him when he retired, so he could sketch during the night if he were unable to sleep.

Paulo Picasso, the painter's eldest son, arrived Sunday night. Funeral arrangements were delayed until his arrival and there was no immediate announcement of plans.

Also present for the discussions was Armand Anteby, Picasso's business manager and long-time friend. Anteby and his wife were among the guests at the Saturday night dinner.

Picasso and Georges Braque were credited as inventors of cubism. They were friends, but arrived at their cubist designs separately.

Later, Picasso moved into the style for which he is most famous-distorted figures where the parts have been dissembled and rearranged to match his vision.

Among the most famous of Picasso's paintings was "Les Demoiselles D'Avignon," an eight-foot square tableau of five nude women that announced the arrival of cubism. Another was his violent antiwar protest "Guernica," painted after German bombers destroyed the town of Guernica during the Spanish civil war.

Deformed, horror-ridden faces, broken bodies of humans and animals and screaming protest of violence make up the myriad parts of the giant canvas.

Picasso himself was the greatest collector of his own work. He has kept thousands of paintings hoarded at his home and workshop in Mougins.

The value of his holding cannot even be estimated.

Picasso was not only one of the most inventive painters in history, but also one of the most productive.

Rough estimates put his output at 13,000-14,000 paintings or designs, 100,000 prints or engravings, 34,000 book illustrations, 300 sculptures or ceramics.

PARIS (AP)-Pablo Picasso was a child prodigy whose genius seemed to be in a constant cycle of expansion throughout his long career.

The limits of his imagination were boundless, and he constantly invented new ways to express his restless visions.

As a child in Malaga, on the Mediterranean cost of Spain, he amused his playmates by drawing horses with chalk on the sidewalk. He would draw the outlines with an unbroken line, never lifting the chalk from the pavement, and could start at head or feet or tail.

His father was an art teacher, and an after-hours painter. The story has often been told that when Pablo was 14, his father was so awed before his talent that he gave his son all his painting material and vowed never again to set up his easel.

His painting, sculpture and ceramics profoundly influenced the 20th century's artistic concepts.

At a Paris exhibit of Picasso's work for his 85th birthday, French Cutural Affairs Minister Andre Malraux said "Picasso's life work is the greatest enterprise of destruction and creation of forms of out time, and perhaps of all times."

At the mention of Picasso, the most common image that comes to mind is one of a distorted face, rearranged body features, warped space.

This is accurate. But the display of representative portions of Picasso's work also showed many delicate and beautiful sketches and figurative paintings of consummate skill.

Picasso's paintings, where the features were distorted to give the impression of views of the same subject from different angles, started out as pure figurative works, then the elements were shifted around through experimentation to fit the artist's vision.

In an interview with the art magazine Cahier d'Art in Paris in 1935, Picasso said: "In my case a picture is a sum of destructions. I make a picture then I destroy it...A picture is not thought out and settled beforehand. While it is being done it changes as one's thoughts change. And when it is finished it goes on changing according to the state of mind of whoever is looking at it."

In response to those who protested they could not understand his paintings, Picasso said: "Everyone wants to understand art. Why not try to understand the song of birds? Why does one love the night, flowers, everything around one, without trying to understand them? But where art is concerned, people think they must understand

As a child in Malaga, he amused his playmates by drawing horses... on the sidewalk... He would draw without lifting the chalk from the pavement.

At the age of 14, Pablo completed in one day the drawings required for admission to the senior department of the Barcelona Art School.

Most candidates worried over them for a month. At 16, he was admitted to the Royal Academy of Madrid with honors. With this he was at the summit of Spanish art education.

In 1900, when Picasso was 19, he visited Paris for the first time, staying a few months. In 1904 he settled in Paris permanently, making rare visits to Spain.

The Meat Business, Past And Future

Consumers, Suppliers Review Meat Boycott

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Butchers, buyers and supermarket managers looked back Sunday on the nationwide meat boycott and planned future food price strategy.

Frank D. Register, executive director of the National Association of Retail Grocers, summed up the week-long boycott by saying: "It could cause a temporary disruption in the supply and demand situation, but it doesn't alter the basic fact that production of meat is not increasing as fast as the consumption."

Consumer groups said the boycott was a success in showing the power of the average citizen, but agreed that it did not lower prices substantially and said further steps were needed.

One week wasn't long enough, said Mary Conti, a leader of STOP - Stay Together on Prices - a boycott group in the Philadelphia area.

"What we're talking about is a re-education process," Mrs. Conti said. "It will take a while to convince people they just don't need to eat so much red meat."

The STOP group is starting a Dial-a-Meal service with volunteers giving telephone callers recipes for meatless menus.

John L. Huston, vice president for beef programs of the National Livestock Meat Board, said meat sales may have dropped, but people bought more of other items.

"Look what happened to fish and other protein alternatives," he said. "As soon as consumers switched some of their buying to fish and poultry, prices have gone up considerably in the short term."

A spokesman for Pathmark Supermarkets, with 99 East Coast stores, said the chain's meat sales dropped 40 per cent during the boycott. "There was no blanket lowering of our meat prices," he said, "because wholesale prices of meat did not come down."

Farmers withheld livestock from market last week, cutting supplies at some stockyards by as much as 60 percent and causing concern that there will be a serious shortage of red meat in upcoming weeks.

President Nixon imposed price ceilings on beef, lamb and pork, but the limits affect only the processor, wholesaler and retailer - not the farmer or cattleman.

Several boycott groups urged meatless Tuesdays and Thursdays for an indefinite period. U. S. Rep. Benjamin Rosenthal, D-N.Y., said representatives of consumer organizations would get together in Washington on Wednesday to discuss future plans.

Some Questions And Answers

By BILL NEIKIRK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Grocery stores must have signs posted at their meat counters Monday showing legal ceiling prices for beef, pork and lamb.

The posting requirement applies to all but the smallest stores, those with annual revenues of $100,000 or less. The Cost of Living Council said many small grocery stores will be faced with significant posting requirements for the first time.

In question-and-answer format, here are some things for consumers to look for:

Q. Will there be a ceiling price posted for each cut of fresh meat?

A. Yes. For any particular cut, such as sirloin steak or chuck roast, it will mean the store will be able to go no higher than the price listed on the sign.

Q. How about processed foods such as cold cuts, luncheon meats?

A. Ceiling prices for a minimum of 25 items must be posted. The items chosen must represent 75 percent of sales from that particular section of the store. If there are less than 25 items sold in this counter, then all the items are subject to the posting requirement.

Q. Is there a different requirement for canned or bottled beef, pork or lamb or products such as stew or soup containing meat?

A. Yes. The ceiling prices of the 10-best-selling items from this section of the store must be posted.

Q. What if the consumer wants to find out the ceiling price of a particular brand not posted?

A. All of the items containing beef, pork and lamb are subject to the ceilings. The store must have a list available to consumers located in a convenient spot so he can check it out. There must be a sign that clearly indicates the location of this ceiling price information.

Nine Die In Crash Of Peace Chopper

By DENNIS NEELD
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP) - A helicopter carrying peacekeeping officials was shot down Saturday after it was reported to have wandered off course over Communist-held territory. All nine passengers died.

The Viet Cong expressed "deep regret" Sunday at the loss of the American-piloted International Commission of Control and Supervision aircraft.

A South Vietnamese military spokesman claimed it was shot down by Communist ground fire, and an ICCS official said the helicopter was hit by a missile, probably a Russian-made Strela.

A second helicopter carrying peacekeeping delegates landed safely in Communist territory and its 10 passengers and crew were taken to Gio Linh, 40 miles away, the Viet Cong said here.

The Viet Cong statement claimed the downed helicopter was 15 miles off its approved flight path, entered an area often overflown by South Vietnamese reconnaissance aircraft and "met an accident."

Communist forces dug in along the banks of the Mekong River, meanwhile, ambushed a supply convoy taking food and fuel to the Cambodian capital of Phnom Penh, setting two ships ablaze.

Five vessels, sailing under an umbrella of U. S. warplanes, got through the ambush.

A dozen other ships turned back to the South Vietnamese river port of Tan Chau but later made another attempt to run the 60-mile gauntlet. According to field reports, they failed again and dropped anchor for the night in Tan Chau. Tan Chau itself was hit several times by Communist rocket fire apparently aimed at the ships. Cambodian refugees streamed across the border into South Vietnam where authorities were said to be turning many back.

The official North Vietnamese government newspaper said Presiden Lon Nol's administration in Cambodia "is going to collapse, even though the United States is concentrating its air power" there to save it.

In an editorial broadcast Sunday by Radio Hanoi, Nhan Dan said the situation in Phnom Penh has so deteriorated the United States is considering an emergency airlift to save the capital and the country.

The four ICCS delegation chiefs went into an emergency session of in Saigon Sunday night. Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau of Canada announced in Quebec the Canadian contingent will not pull out as a result of the incident.

The other members of the International Commission of Control and Supervision are Hungary, Indonesia and Poland. An ICCS official reported the military chiefs of the four delegations were in Gio Linh but had not yet received Viet Cong permission to visit the crash site.

Killed in the downed aircraft were two American civilian pilots and a Filipino crewman, one Canadian, one Indonesian, two Hungarians and two Viet Cong liaision officers.

Thieu: Concerned But Confident

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nguyen Van Thieu of South Vietnam said Sunday his country is concerned about the Cambodian situation.

But asked if he were optimistic peace would come, he replied, "I'm very confident."

Asked about the situation in Cambodia, Thieu replied in an interview on CBS's TV program, Face the Nation: ". . .we are very concerned with the situation . . . the North Vietnamese and the NLF troops should be withdrawn unconditionally, according to the Paris accords. Buth they have not done yet. They continue to launch attack."

Thieu said if the Communists are allowed to continue, the situation can get worse "and is a very great danger for South Vietnam."

Asked if South Vietnam could handle the threat if Cambodia fell to the Communists, or if his country would expect American planes to help it in South Vietnam, Thieu repled, "I think that we are capable to defend our country from the border."

The interview included questions about any understanding among the Russians, Chinese and Americans about preserving peace in Southeast Asia and preventing a new war.

". . .if the North Vietnam accepted to sign an agreement and to observe a cease-fire and to end the war in South Vietnam, it must be something behind, and something behind is a must from Russia or Red China," Thieu said.

Asked again about any understanding, Thieu said that before the peace agreement was reached he was concerned about a guaranteed peace, addding, "And I think that I have been made understood that the - some understanding between the United States and Russia and the China is - was in that way."

Even to reduce military supplies to North Vietnam? he was asked.

"I think that the most practical way to guarantee the peace and to secure this-to prolong the peace is that," Thieu replied.

On the matter of U.S. aid to South Vietnam, Thieu said his nation needs civilian aid to reconstruct and develop the country.

He did not set a specific figure, and he said he could not say exactly how many years aid would be needed. On continued fighting, Thieu said this depends on the Communists.

Kodak, First National Pay For Release Of Executives

By LOUIS UCHITELLE
Associated Press Writer

BUENOS AIRES (AP)—Left-wing terrorists extracted $2 1/2 million in ransom last week from two American companies whose executives were kidnapped.

Eastman Kodak Co. announced that $1 1/2 million was paid to free Antony Da Cruz, 43, an American kidnapped last Monday. He was released Saturday night. The First National Bank of Boston paid about $1 million Wednesday, bank sources reported, to free Gerardo Scalmazzi, 55, an Argentine branch manager. Scalmazzi was a prisoner eight days.

Da Cruz was the first American to be kidnapped in a country which has had nearly 100 kidnappings in the past two years. His ransom was a record.

Argentine companies generally are forced to pay under $500,000 to ransom kidnapped executives. The ransom for executives of big foreign companies, however, has risen from $500,000 last September to a million or more today.

The left-wing urban guerrilla groups which kidnap foreign company executives are reported to use the money to buy arms and finance underground life.

Besides the record ransom, Da Cruz's kidnappers, the Liberation Armed Forces, obtained a promise from Kodak that the executive would leave Argentina immediately. They apparently fear Da Cruz might be able to identify them or the place of his imprisonment if he remains in Buenos Aires.

"We agreed to his quick departure to obtain his release and we feel it is necessary to comply with the promise to avoid trouble with this organization in the future," said Lloyd Gilbert, marketing manager for Kodak's big Argentine operation.

Kodak delivered the ransom Saturday in dollars and pesos packed in suitcases. The denominations were specified by the guerrillas.

First National Bank of Boston paid its ransom in similar fashion in the city of Rosario, where Scalmazzi is branch manager. A Trotskyite group, the People's Revolutionary Army claimed credit for the Scalmazzi abduction.

The same group kidnapped Francisco Aleman, a retired Argentine navy rear admiral. He was seized last Monday and a communique from the kidnappers suggested Aleman is being held hostage to guarantee that the recently elected Peronist government fulfills a promise of amnesty for all political prisoners.

The outgoing military government, which has ruled Argentina for seven years, opposes amnesty. The issue is expected to produce a crisis after the Peronist president-elect, Hector Campora, takes office May 25.

Gas Prices Juggled?

By G. DAVID WALLACE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Federal Trade Commission is stymied in its 2 1/2-year-old investigation into whether producers are juggling the figures of proved natural gas reserves.

The price you pay for natural gas is linked directly to the size of proved reserves, and the only reserve figures available to government regulators in fixing rates are those provided by the gas industry.

Prof. Hired To Teach Special Education

By DON GLECKSTEIN

After years of delays and shortage of money, the School of Education is hiring a faculty member in the area of special education -- education of the mentally retarded.

Robert Jackson has been offered an appointment as Assistant Professor of Education according to Associate Dean Earl Seidman, in a memorandum distributed to education faculty and students last week.

Jackson earned his M.A. in Special Education from the University of Virginia and will, according to Seidman, "shortly" earn his doctorate in special education from George Washington University. Seidman said that Jackson has had "considerable experience at the public school level, the institutional level, and in higher education in the area of special education."

The appointment is subject to the approval of Provost Robert Gluckstern.

The School of Education has never had any teacher training programs in special education. Any student wishing certification to teach the retarded has had to transfer to a different university or college, or become an exchange student to Fitchburg State College for a year. The Fitchburg exchange program was open to only a limited number of students.

Locks Opened To Ease Flow

The Mississippi Is A-Risin'

By BILL CRIDER
Associated Press Writer

NEW ORLEANS (AP)-Army engineers, hoping to ease the flood threat at New Orleans, pulled a 20-foot opening in the dike of the Bonnet Carre Spillway north of here Sunday, diverting part of the Mississippi River into Lake Pontchartrain.

It was the first time since 1950 and the fourth time in 42 years that the river had been high enough to use the emergency floodway, some 32 miles upriver from the city.

Sen. Russell Long, D-La., operated the crane which caught hold of the first of 350 floodgates and pulled it up. Workmen took over then and began raising more of the heavy wooden structures.

The mud-red waters of the river gushed through, turning white as they spilled into a puddle at the foot of the huge floodway.

Army engineers said it would take 36 hours to "pull all the teeth," but said they have no plans to work straight through.

Use of the spillway, expected to lower the river by 18 inches at the city, rechannels river water into brackish Lake Pontchartrain, which is connected through a series of other lakes with the Gulf of Mexico.

Because of the size of the lake, 630 square miles, officials said the river waters would make no change in the lake level and cause no flooding along the lakeshore.

However, the sudden influx of fresh water and silt was expected to wipe out seafood in the lake, although salinity and the seafood are expected to return within months of the floodway's closing.

The Mississippi River was predicted to crest at 19 feet at New Orleans on Friday, April 13, but forecasters said there was a possibility of higher levels caused by strong Gulf winds and tides. Levees along the river average 20 feet.

The spillway lies about a mile downriver from the town of Montz, La., where 44 families had to be moved last week because of weakening levees. Army engineers are building a new backup levee where half the town stood a week ago.

The Bonnet Carre is a manmade cut, more than a mile wide and 5.7 miles long, which can carry 1.8 million gallons of water a second.

Israel Bans Sale Of Occupied Land

By MARCUS ELIASON
Associated Press Writer

JERUSALEM (AP)—The Israeli government decided Sunday against letting Jews buy real estate in occupied Arab territory, apparently fearing it might complicate future peace negotiations.

The decision—a serious setback to Defense Minister Moshe Dayan who fathered the idea—was reported by government ministers.

A cabinet announcement said there would be no change in the ban on private land buying in occupied territories. Since Dayan made his proposal, Israeli businessmen have flooded the occupied areas around Jerusalem seeking land for sale.

But the government decision appears to scuttle the controversial land boom.

The idea of letting Jews buy occupied land sparked heated public debate and evoked Arab protests to the United Nations.

Dayan had argued that even after a peace treaty, Israelis should be allowed to live anywhere in occupied territory.

Therefore, he suggested they be permitted to buy land, at least in the areas Israel will include in the new borders it demands as part of a peace pact.

But other leaders, such as Deputy Premier Yigal Allon and Foreign Minister Abba Eban, contended such a move would discourage the Arabs from making peace, and would undermine Israel's claim that it sets no preconditions for a settlement.

Supporters of the Dayan plan say Arabs are willing to sell their land to Israeli buyers who can no longer afford the sky-rocketing cost of real estate in Israel proper.

They also noted that in the 1920s, much of what today is Israel was purchased by Jews from Arabs.

One reason Dayan brought up the idea at this time was the forthcoming October elections. His dominant Labor party soon must prepare its platform, and the defense minister wanted the land issue to figure in it.

The state radio said that in the past two years, Israelis have purchased 25,000 acres of land through "conditional deals" with Arab proprietors, whereby money is paid, but the buyer cannot assume ownership unless the government removes the ban.

Pentagon Papers Case

Russo Takes The Stand

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP)—After three months as almost a forgotten man in the Pentagon papers trial, Anthony J. Russo takes the witness stand Monday to tell jurors of the path which led to his indictment with Daniel Ellsberg.

The soft-spoken balding Russo, an articulate speaker, is expected to tell the story of his transformation from "establishment" researcher to anti-war activist. He also plans to discuss his role in the copying of the top-secret Pentagon papers.

Russo, 36, is named in only three counts of a 13-count indictment charging espionage, conspiracy and theft. He was indicted six months after Ellsberg. During the trial, the government case has concentrated so heavily on the charges against Ellsberg that weeks have passed without mention of Russo's name.

But recently, Russo's name has come up. Antiwar activists called to testify spoke of their acquaintances with Russo and "Chicago Seven" trial defendant Tom Hayden gave what appeared to be a preview of Russo's testimony.

Hayden told jurors of a day when Russo came to lecture at a college class in which Hayden was the teacher.

"He spoke about the importance of the Pentagon papers to himself," Hayden recalled, "and about his past role working for the United States government through the Rand Corporation . . . . He spoke about what disillusioned him in his years in Vietnam. He spoke about how he came to feel that the war was wrong, that his role at the Rand Corp. was wrong."

Hayden said that Russo also mentioned his refusal to testify before a grand jury in the Pentagon papers case, his term in jail and his subsequent indictment. Russo has said he believes he was indicted because of his grand jury refusal.

"My testifying in secret," he said, "would have been collaborating with a star chamber proceeding . . . I had a story to tell and I wanted my day in court, but I wanted it to be public."

After Russo had spent 47 days in jail, in 1971 a federal judge ruled that he did not have to give secret testimony unless the government provided him with a transcript of what was said.

Discussion To Be Held For Feminist Arts Center

All women interested in the arts are invited to an organizational meeting to discuss establishing a Feminist Arts Center on campus in connection with Everywoman's Center. The purpose would be to create a place where women can display their work— painting, sculpture, jewelry, photographs, batiks, etc.—have a place to meet and talk with each other, build a library of feminist art and literary journals, and hold seminars in such topics as Women Artists in History, The Role of the Feminist Artist in Society, Developing a Feminist Esthetic, and others.

The meeting will be Tuesday, April 10 at 8 p.m. in Campus Center rm 908. Come and bring your ideas on what a Feminist Arts Center could do and be. For further information contact Gayle Dodson-Le Yaouanc at Everywoman's Center, Munson Hall, 545-0883.

Mark Twain: Temperamental Until The End

By JEANNINE VEOMANS
Associated Press Writer

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) - Mark Twain's final manuscript, made public Sunday after 62 years, shows the author kept his wit - and his temper - until the waning months of his life.

The 400-page document, handwritten in clear black script on new-yellowed letter paper, details how the author believed his secretary and business manager conspired to swindle him.

The University of California announced the book-length manuscript has been donated to its extensive Mark Twain collections by descendants of the family of the author, whose real name was Samuel Langhorne Clemens.

Also included in the gift were other papers and some 70 Twain letters.

Twain finished the manuscript six months before his death in 1910 at age 74. In the foreword, the man who chronicled American life before the turn of the century wrote: "There are three conspicuous characters in this true tale of mine, this queer and shabby and pitiful tale - to wit, a pair of degraded and sufficiently clumsy sharpers, and I the born ass, their easy victim."

Twain tells how in 1909 at his home in Redding, Conn., he began to suspect his business manager, Ralph W. Ashcroft, and secretary Isabel Lyon, of misusing his funds.

Suddenly Ashcroft and Miss Lyon married and went to England for their honeymoon.

On an envelope of a letter from Ashcroft, also included in the gift, Twain scrawled:

"Letter from a sniveling hypocrite - who is also a skunk, and a professional liar. It is precious. It has no doubt in publishing itself - don't let it get lost."

Frederick Anderson, editor of the UC collection which includes the gift, said the manuscript, which has never been published, and the last work has enormous value biographically but limited value as literature. He suggested it as somewhere that the autobiography was meant to be informal and private.

But Anderson said, the papers give a real sense of the last years in the life of the author, showing he retained his "remarkable energy and vivacity of wit until just before his death."

"This was his final burst of energy and he had an hard time. His two Twain's that ended and a word still just beautifully."

"The publication being hardly forced him to submit after this final outburst in a life which was marked by business and legal entanglements," Anderson said.

POWs:

'Reverse Brainwashing'

By DON MCLEOD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—American prisoners of war began rehearsing patriotic homecoming speeches two years ago, in a prison camp exercise some of them called "reverse brainwashing."

By speaking out in patriotic fervor, the prisoners sought to strengthen themselves against North Vietnamese propaganda.

Some former POWs say this practice may account for the similar patriotic tone and content of many speeches and statements made at different times and places by returned prisoners.

"The Communists spent upwards of four, five, six, seven, eight, nine years trying to turn us against our country, against our way of life, against America basically," said Air Force Maj. Ronald J. Webb of Hampton, Va. "And the natural reaction on the part of 99 per cent of us was to build our patriotism even stronger."

"It made us ardent anti-Communists for the most part and ultra-patriotic," said Webb, who spent five years as a prisoner.

The pro-administration line taken by most former POWs has led to charges they were delivering speeches prepared for them. But to a man they deny this.

Air Force Lt. Col. James E. Hiteshew of Weston, W. Va., a POW almost six years, said prisoners defended U.S. war policy because they were part of it, and could not concede that their suffering was in a wasted cause.

"Maybe we developed it ourselves," Hiteshew said, "that we spent so much time, that this time was not lost. I mean we didn't want to feel that we spent six years there for nothing.

"It's awful hard to spend six, seven, eight years of that and come out and walk out for naught," Hiteshew added. "That would be pretty difficult and we'd be a bitter bunch of individuals.

In the main prison camp in Hanoi, dubbed the "Hanoi Hilton" by its inmates, downed American airmen formed several toastmaster clubs and practiced public speaking.

Similar activities were reported in other camps.

The toastmaster clubs even staged news conferences, with some prisoners playing the parts of reporters and asking barbed questions while others rehearsed the roles they are actually playing now.

Connecticut Poll Shows Anti-Amnesty Sentiments

HARTFORD (AP) - An overwhelming majority of Connecticut residents questioned in a recent poll were against general amnesty for young men who evaded the draft or deserted to avoid serving in Vietnam, the Hartford Times reported Sunday.

Among the 500 residents questioned, 74 per cent were against "letting young men who left the country to avoid being drafted into the armed Forces during the Vietnam War come home with no conditions attached," the paper said. The same percentage opposed amnesty for deserters.

Moreover, only 14 per cent favored full amnesty for draft evaders, and 6 per cent said that should never be allowed in certain in the United States, the Times said. Nineteen per cent favored full amnesty and 10 per cent favored exile for deserters.

According to the poll, conducted for the Times by Decision Research Corp. March 2-4, 26 per cent would make draft evaders enter public service, and 17 per cent prefer putting avoiders into the military service now.

Counselors Needed

FTC Stymied On Gas Reserves

So the FTC wants the detailed background records that play a part in determining gas reserve figures. But it says gas producers, which it will not identify, won't provide them.

The commission has had nine months to ask the Justice Department for court action to obtain the records and has not done so. An FTC says such a request may be made soon.

Gas producers, who assert that their reserve figures are honest, say the records are so voluminous that it would take years to compile them and, at any rate, the FTC has no right to them.

Natural gas prices have risen 17 per cent since industry-reported reserves began dwindling in 1968. Skeptics, including the American Public Gas Association, question whether the decline was real or manipulated.

Sen. Philip M. Hart's sub-committee on antitrust and monopoly asked the FTC in 1970 to investigate whether there was collusion involved in reporting gas reserves and whether producers were trimming their reserve estimates.

Alan S. Ward, head of the FTC's bureau of competition and director of the investigation, said in an interview the agency has not proved whether there was collusion, but added: "There are certain indications on the basis of what we have found to continue the investigation."

Since the investigation is what the FTC terms non-public, the agency declines to disclose the details. But in testimony before Congress, Ward has given a few glimpses.

The probe is centered on 11 producers in the Southern Louisiana fields, which include the rich offshore area that provides a third of the nation's natural gas.

The reserve figures for the area are provided by the American Gas Association, which the AGA subcommittee charged with the task of estimating reserves, is dominated by specialists employed by the producers.

"The vital role of the AGA reserve data is obvious," said Ward. "And it is essential also to recognize the American Gas Association, a private organization, is the sole agency in the United States that reports the amount of proved reserves."

Marathon Begins

At 3 p.m. this afternoon, weather permitting, Associate Provost David Bischoff and School of Education Dean Dwight Allen will step into a gas balloon and rise majestically into the air by the athletic fields near WoPE.

This event will signal the start of the School of Education's 5th semi-annual Marathon.

Marathons have traditionally complemented the unique efforts of the School in positive ways.

They have allowed students to sample a large quantity of educational experiences.

They have opened up the entire University to the Commonwealth, and have ably contributed a public service.

They have enabled students from all majors to pick up an extra credit or two, a credit which might have prevented a person from graduating.

They have helped to explain the School of Education to the rest of the University.

This week, more than 600 different lectures, discussions, movies, and demonstrations are scheduled. Between 7000 and 10,000 people are expected to participate.

Some of the presentors include the American Bar Association, the Consumer's Union, S.A.S.S.I. Prep, the ARICA Institute, and hundreds of students and teachers from around the country.

We urge all faculty, students, and staff to attend Marathon events.

We hope that someday a University-wide Marathon will be held.

Can You Laugh?

By BRIAN FITZGERALD

I wish to consider this a formal satire against those who have the ability to capture another's thought train and put it to his own uses. Too long have these people been allowed to roam freely and openly enjoying the fruits of their material labor. This force that I speak of manifests itself in many different forms of people, not in any one individual, and if it is to be recognized at all by anyone who wants to be free of it, that person simply needs to learn to laugh at it. But there are people in this God forsaken planet who cannot laugh at this force and so are prisoners of it. These people are the object of this satire—those who cannot laugh at themselves. Perhaps if we look back to see how these people got this way we would make interesting deductions about their parents—but I wouldn't do that, no that would be too cruel I mean to actually present irrefutable evidence before a man charged with lying to himself, I could never do that, that would be too mean. I mean what the hell, it isn't his fault his father lied to him and it isn't his fault he can't forgive his father so he just goes blind deaf and dumb and that's the way it looks to his kid. To cure himself, all he had to do was learn to laugh at himself.

What is happiness? Could happiness be described as the ability to go in all directions at once? (Heavy symbolism related to earthly abilities). Isn't everybody looking for happiness? Even those who go around saying that they have the 'truth' and are willing to lay it on you but can't believe them because you know that they're just another bunch of assholes like you? Is zat whats bothering you, pal? Too many people running around claiming to have the supreme answer, each convinced of the fact that they own the universe and you are fucked if you don't believe them? Is that what i' looks like to you? Well, that's what it looks like to me. It looks to me like we are children of a society that has traditionally said: "Plan all of your future 'nows' now, later, when when those 'nows' come up—they'll all be 'was-es'. "Buy Savings Bonds" "Give to the College of your Choice" "Get your Social Security down now, plan for that Golden Day when you can retire to Florida" and then watch an old man rocking in his chair on his porch for a while and ask him what's going on. Interrupt his thought train and he'll tell you everything he's been sold. Take a human organism, train it to plan for the future and that only, and then tell it to go someplace to wait and die. Welcome to America. But can you laugh at this? Remember who this satire is aimed at. If you are not laughing, can you ask yourself why?

Cambodia, etc.

The latest news releases from Southeast Asia leave little doubt that the Nixon Administration is deeply committed to maintaining the Lon Nol regime in Cambodia. The President has "re-affirmed assurances of our continued support" to the shaky government, while ordering the heaviest B-52 strikes ever seen in that country. Nixon has dispatched General Haig, the Army vice chief of staff, to Asia to bring back a first hand account of the situation. I hope he will not be too surprised to find Phnom Penh, the capital, virtually cut off from the outside world by the Khmer Rouge guerillas. The reports from the area are not pretty, but they are all too familiar.

Due to the lack of American ground troops in Vietnam, we have not launched another of Nixon's protective reaction strikes into Cambodia, thank the Lord. And our good friend, Ronald Ziegler, has suggested that a re-introduction of ground forces to Southeast Asia is virtually unthinkable, and you know how believable old Ronnie is. So our fearless leader has taken to the skies, and is proceeding to "bomb them back to the stone age", or some such nonsense.

Now besides the obvious question of whether or not Nixon has the Constitutional authority to conduct such a policy, there exists another broader question: hasn't the American government learned a damn thing from the Vietnam involvement? Aren't we yet aware that we cannot continue to prop up tottering regimes around the globe in the name of world democracy? The days of blundering around jungles teaching peasants how to fire an M-16 should be over, and with a sign of relief. The swashbuckling days of CIA heroes slinking into villages under cover of darkness for the sake of motherhood are over, period. I wouldn't mind if the results of our efforts in Vietnam weren't so ludicrous, I mean just take a look at the "cease fire": a helicopter was blasted out of the sky just a day ago. And then there's Thieu, bowing at the grave of President Johnson, (and well he should), thanking all of us for helping his people enjoy self determination, at least that's what they call it nowadays. I could go on and on, but it just doesn't make sense anymore. Just when you begin to think that despite Nixon we may be setting our foreign policy straight, he lowers the boom on Cambodia.

Looking on the positive side, I don't think that Congress will ever pass another Gulf of Tonkin Resolution, at any rate. Which is to say, that it is Congress's responsibility not to allow the President to exert powers that are not granted to him. War is still a declaration of Congress, and the old excuse of protecting American lives won't work this time, unless the CIA fall into that category. Congress is more in tune with the country than the President is, and God knows we have enough problems to take care of here at home. So what I look for is another example of face-saving by the U.S. We can't very well walk out of Southeast Asia with another war brewing in our wake. Haig and Kissinger and the rest will try to reach some agreement, to buy a little time, and leave Cambodia shouting "peace with honor". It seems our unofficial policy is that as long as we're out of there they can do what they want, but please have the courtesy of waiting until we've gone. It's got one good point in its favor, at least we won't be doing the fighting. This whole mess reminds me of a stuffed closet, everything precariously in place, until you slam the door shut, and everything crashes to the floor. The trick is, to just keep walking.

Nixon And Watergate

Although news about Watergate slips from the front pages, the investigation of the conspiracy still continues. Talking, thinking, and reading about the unfolding circumstances around the inquiry is still very much in the forefront of the American mind. At the head of any discussion of Watergate lurks the question of Presidential involvement in espionage and sabotage. Richard Nixon has not been directly linked to the conspiracy, but events around the White House render him highly suspect to speculation to say the least.

The resignation of Dwight Chapin, presidential personal appointments secretary, last summer brought with it more suspicion to the White House.

Chapin was linked to two of the conspirators in the Los Angeles Times and shortly thereafter he resigned his position on the executive staff. Chapin's job put him in close contact with the President; close enough to implicate Mr. Nixon. Chapin's retreat from the White House puts him somewhat out of reach, and though his link to the conspirators is unclear and subject to verification, it does not withdraw any of the suspicion he left behind.

John Dean, personal counsel to the President, has been linked to the conspiracy by the testimony of James McCord. McCord maintained that Dean at least knew of the conspiracy all along. Dean's position is also very close to the president and accumulates more suspicion around the Oval office.

There is also John Mitchell, former Attorney General and close personal friend of President Nixon's. Mitchell was the head of the Committee to Re-elect the President at the time of the Watergate break-in. Two weeks after the break-in Mitchell resigned after his wife threatened to leave him if he didn't leave politics. Subsequently, the operations of the conspirators was traced to the Committee to Re-elect the President. Mitchell however conveniently left politics before this revelation. John Mitchell's close working and personal relationship with Richard Nixon puts the story of presidential ignorance at a premium.

The investigation of Watergate will proceed, and more evidence may close the doors of doubt about Nixon's involvement. The hierarchy of functions and division of labor within the executive bureaucracy make it conceivable the President was ignorant of his staff's corruption. If this is so Nixon would be in the similar situation of Grant and Harding. Although both men were personally exonerated their corrupt administrations were repudiated by the public. The actions of the Nixon appointees are meeting up to the infamous notoriety of the Grant and Harding administrations, and should succumb to the fate of their predecessors.

Letters To The Editor

Isn't It A Bit Biased?

To The Editor:

Imagine, if you please, the following headlines:

"The rotten officials we had for Yankee Conference Championship Game" by Dick MacPherson.

"Bad officiating made us lose the NIT's" by Jack Leaman

"The controversial match we should have won" by Homer Barr, etc., etc.

Unthinkable? Coaches, admittedly biased, are not suitable persons for writing about their team performances as sports writers. A sportswriter has to give an outsider's view. Agreed. Fine.

Then why has women's gymnastic coach Mike Kasavana written all the articles about the women's team? They have all been extremely biased. If our girls did poorly, officiating was blamed. On away meets, no individual scores were given so that knowledgeable readers could draw their own conclusions. Our girls were being built up as the best in the nation, who always seemed to run into poor officials, wherever they went.

So they went to the Regional meet, away from home officials, for the first real time. Those officials did not think our girls were that great. They "insulted" our poor little darlings with low scores! Isn't that awful—especially since the "insulted" girl was MRS. KASAVANA, competing under her maiden name. Now, what kind of objective reporting can you expect under these circumstances from the coach-husband?

Have your reporting standards really fallen so low that you will accept this kind of journalism? I'm really disappointed in you. I'm willing to bet that our girls will get the same kind of scores from the country's top officials at the Nationals. If almost everybody thinks that is what our girls deserve, the coaches better wake up and start doing something different. They are obviously out of step with the times.

One more point—according to team scores our girls earned during the season, 100 was the second best score all year. The girls topped this score only once, to the best of my knowledge. All the other times they were below 100 points. So, what is Kasavana griping about? Apparently even the home officials think that 100 point range is where our girls belong. And if this is not enough to win any championships, it is too bad. It means that our girls just are not good enough yet. And biased reporting by coach-husband is not going to alter the issue.

I do not expect you to have enough courage to print this letter, since you killed my last one, giving in to the pressure . . .

ROTC Yes

To The Editor:

The whole question of whether R.O.T.C. receives credit involves the concept of academic freedom. The Faculty-Senate recognized this in February by voting overwhelmingly to recommend the return of accreditation to R.O.T.C. This university supposedly prides itself in being an institution where all points of view can be heard, tolerated and taught. To deny to R.O.T.C. runs counter to this concept of academic freedom.

As an example, University Year for Action Program today conducts the education of its students in non-university controlled environments. These people learn by doing in the real world. The education experiences encountered in this program justify their accrediration and rightly so. The same should be no less true of the R.O.T.C. Department. Here, as Ms. Houghton pointed out, management, race relations, and drug control are taught as well as tactics. Guest lecturers are already invited from the various university departments when their expertise is greater than one of the military instructors. However, there are areas where a military instructor with 14 or 15 years practical experience can teach more effectively than a civilian, as do the personnel working with UMass students in the Action program.

Denying credit to the 150 R.O.T.C. Cadets is a blatant act of discrimination. The Faculty-Senate recognized this two months ago, but credit is still being denied. Now is the time for the Board of Trustees to correct this inustice.

Column Attacked

To The Editor:

The irresponsibility of Galen Tinder's "Non-radical Manifesto" cannot go by unnoticed. The article displays a gross misunderstanding of Marxist principles.

1.) The author takes vague consequences of the Soviet Regime as embodying the philosophy of Marx (and at that mistakenly), and then assumes such "quasi-Marxism" as applying to all radical Marxists.

2.) In Marx's dialectical-materialist conception of history, it has been a common misconception to believe that there is an end to the dialectic, that there is ultimately a static, utopic society. For Marx, there is never an end to change. To posit elsewise is to fail to recognize the complete difference between Marx and Hegel.

3.) The imposition of the existence of absolutes other than the absoluteness of reality in change in the Marxist system is to fail to grasp the meaning of materialism.

4.) Responsibility lies at the core of Marxist society. For communist society as envisaged by Marx is based on the social responsibility of each individual in that society. It is only with the assumption of responsibility by all that each can be free.

Is it responsible for a person to write of what he doesn't know?

Grad Student Tax

To The Editor:

Dear Dean Appley:

A graduate student, I have just received at my request your office's certification of my enrollment during 1972 and my eligibility for tax exempt status as a research assistant.

On the one hand, I want to thank your office for handling my request with dispatch.

On the other hand, it occurs to me that this service should be performed automatically without the need for special request. I suspect that many students are unaware, or caught unaware, at tax-time of their most favored nascent state. Couldn't you have what is now a hit or miss proposition reorganized into a standard operating procedure?

Editorial Points

Mr. Stoneham: We thought it interesting that you can boycott meat and reduce your purchases of meat and provide meat substitutes, but you cannot boycott lettuce. Isn't boycotting meat as political as boycotting lettuce?

And we wonder how much those pretty flower designs that were hung in Berkshire Commons over vacation cost students. A couple hundred?

On the positive side, we commend the Food Services for their soy bean analogs. The ham was hammy and the chicken was real. Let's have more soy bean substitutes. They're good!

On the negative side, why didn't they close the coffee shop at 7:30 p.m. and keep the Hatch open? Address your protests to Vice-Chancellor Gage.

And in the midst of all this meat stuff, we hope that Athletic Director Frank McInerney is planning to phase out the use of steaks next season in favor of a cheaper cut of meat--like hamburger or soy bean substitutes.

On a lighter side, Ass. Provot Bischoff and Dean Allen are scheduled to balloon into oblivion at 3 p.m. today from the WoPE fields. It's for the Marathon at the School of Ed. We hear that Chancellor Bromery was scheduled to go with the, except that someone close to him wouldn't allow it.

Co-ed Sorority

To The Editor:

A co-ed sorority of 20 individuals is being started in Sept. of '73. We are looking for people to join whose own interests and goals would relate to and grow with the goals of the community.

Our over-all goal is to develop alternative life styles at UMass by planning and building co-operative housing off campus. With this in mind the objectives of our community are as follows:

1) to live within a family-like co-ed sorority where people would be as brothers and sisters sharing household responsibility as well as play.

2) to encourage the self expression of each individual as a means of realizing one's own full potential as a human being.

3) to explore alternative styles of living for ourselves, the university, and society through a restructuring of the socio-economic units, such as family and community.

Commitment to these objectives is essential for the success of this project. No community can exist without total support from its members. It is an easy thing to talk about or write about, but to make it happen much work is required.

What we want is change—and for change to occur a lot of things must be challenged. Are you willing (and able) to express yourself as the individual you are—with total freedom? Do you even realize fully who that individual is—and the potential you have because you are a human being?

Society, in its present form, makes it necessary to suppress many feelings and thoughts that are an integral part of you human, individual nature. By changing a basic part of society (living situation) there will be a freedom for true individual expression and growth, people will begin to understand their potential to formulate constructive ideas, and to act on these ideas instead of dreaming, discussing, or writing about them.

What are your ideals? Are they actually dreams—or do they have some possibility of becoming a reality? Are you willing to work to make your ideals real?

Our ideal is a utopia—here is what we are doing to make it a reality: There is a house being vacated by a fraternity on N. Pleasant St. It holds up to 23 people comfortably with single, double, and triple bedrooms. Two of the four floors are open community rooms (living room, game room, kitchen—whatever).

Anyone who is required to live on campus can live in this house. If you would like to live with us—or if you would like more information write us a letter, and we'll be in touch real soon. We want to be with and share with a group of committed, caring people.

Naiads To Demonstrate Synchronized Swimming

Naiads, the Aquatic Art Club of the University of Massachusetts, will present their annual spring performance the evenings of April 11, 12, 13, and 14. The performances will be held at the North Physical Education Building (WoPE) at 8 p.m.

The club is composed entirely of University students who have been studying synchronized swimming and aquatic art under the direction of Ms. Pat Griffin. Naiads was founded and previously directed by Ms. Esther Wallace.

Aquatic art, while performed in and around a pool, is similar to dance, in that each composition conveys a theme or message. An aquatic art composition combines floating patterns, underwater figures, and synchronized swimming to illustrate the theme. The compositions in this year's show range from a refreshing comedy to a representation of the turmoil of the 1972 Olympic Games.

Tickets are now available at WoPE and the Campus Center and can be obtained free by all University students with an I.D. prior to the performance. Non-students can purchase tickets for $.50 each.

Come To Agape!

What's Agape? Agape means love in Greek, and also feast.

Wednesday, April 11th, and again on the following Wednesday, April 18th, residents in the five-college area are invited to attend free dinners where there will be good food and plenty of it.

On April 11th George Gentsch, Steve Gilmore, and John Fittz will be speaking briefly, and Chip Hayes from the "Ark" in Springfield will provide special music. Come for dinner and a time of song and fellowship. The time is 6 to 8 at the Folklore Center in Amherst. Hope to see you there!

O.H. Admission

Students wanting to move to Orchard Hill next semester may obtain applications at the Orchard Hill Student Affairs Office, 103 Grayson House. These applications must be completed and returned by noon on Monday, April 16, to be considered in conjunction with the Residence Hall Room Choosing Process that week. Acceptance and waiting lists will be posted Tuesday morning, April 17, at the Orchard Hill Student Affairs Office. Inquiries can be made by phone at 5-2883.

WMUA Focus

Budget Cuts And The County

Tonight at 10 WMUA's "Focus" series will broadcast a discussion on the effects of President Nixon's proposed budget cuts on the future of the Hampshire Community Action Commission (HCAC), which presently serves more than 8,000 consumers throughout Hampshire County.

Moderator Ken Mosakowski's guest on tonight's live, 60-minute forum will be Barry Wendell of Northampton, who is Program Developer for HCAC.

At a chapter meeting of Amherst Citizens for Participation in Political Action last Wednesday, Mr. Wendell warned that if the President is successful in phasing out the Office of Economic Opportunity (OEO), the Hampshire Community Action Commission would lose one of its major sources of funding and would probably be forced to shut down. He noted that some 15 service programs now administered by HCAC—including day care, alcoholism prevention, Head Start, and ACTION—might be adversely affected.

Listeners are invited to call in questions to Mr. Wendell during tonight's discussion at 545-2425 or 545-2876.

C.C. Examines Space Utilization

All space in the Campus Center Complex is assigned on a temporary basis. In an effort to utilize space most efficiently and economically as well as accommodate new requests, it is necessary to evaluate all Space Assignments for next year. For this reason all present space allocations will be terminated as of September 1, 1973. All RSO groups, administrative and staff departments must submit new space requests regardless of whether or not the group presently occupies space. Requests may be made for new space, old space or for additional space requirements. All groups regardless of present status, must request space if they wish to obtain or retain it for next year.

Typewritten requests should be made no later than Friday, May 3. Included in the request should be the following:

1) Name of the group; 2) Name of person in charge, position and phone number; 3) Space requested and explanation of all space used and purposes it will be used for; 4) Equipment needed (i.e. desks, phones, files, etc.); 5) Capital expenditures necessary, i.e. any remodeling.

Meetings will be held by the Board of Governors Building Committee to determine space assignments to become effective after September 1.

A list of requests for each room and the justifications will be compiled. The Building Committee will then discuss the issues and make recommendations to the Board.

It is important to note that no space requests for next year will be honored after the May 3 deadline. If the parties desiring space do not submit the requests as of the date stated, it will be assumed that the group does not need the space and it will be assigned to another group.

School Of Ed. Marathon

Up, Up, And Away

University of Massachusetts Assistant Provost David Bischoff and Dwight Allen, Dean of the UMass School of Education, will take a balloon ride on Monday at 2:30 to kick off the School of Education's semi-annual Marathon Week.

During Marathon Week, the School of Education excuses nearly all of its classes and sponsors a variety of events in the form of workshops, lectures, seminars, films, projects or whatever. The Marathon is designed to provide a platform for discussing and exchanging new, pertinent and innovative educational ideas.

Eight to twenty different events are usually scheduled at any one time with the program beginning in the morning and running into the late evening (8 am. to 10 p.m.) Past Marathons have grown from a one day, 10 hour schedule, to a full 60 hour schedule containing 150 hours of events.

The balloon ride is being arranged by the Future Studies Teacher Training Program. During Marathon Week. The Future Studies Program of the School of Education will put aside its worries about population expansion, resource depletion, "Big Brother," and the future of education and society to give their Dean a balloon ride. In keeping with the general spirit of Marathon, they decided to give higher education a lift.

The Future Studies Teacher Training Program is dedicated to contemplating the alternative futures likely in the world, and the serious consideration of the role of education in the future. They train teachers in new teaching methods, alert administrators to change on the horizon, and speculate on desireable futures for mankind.

"There are many things happening today analogous to the invention of lighter than air flying machines in the 1800's," explained Paul Burnim, Future Studies Teacher Training Director, "New forms of educational packaging, such as Sesame Street, new forms of educational certification, the unionization of teachers, educational satellites--all of these require deliberate consideration."

With few exceptions, most people tend to regard them like people in the Middle Ages regarded the invention of the balloon--unwieldy, expensive, dangerous, useless inventions. Yet, like the balloon, their impact will be felt in many fields. We are pleased that the Marathon gives us the opportunity to point out to desireable forms, and hope they can attend some of the offerings we suggest."

Ram Dass To Talk On Eastern Experience

During the weekend of April 28-29, Baba Ram Dass will speak at the Symposium on Transpersonal Psychology and Healing, at the Amherst College Gymnasium, Amherst College.

Ram Dass was formerly Richard Alpert, Ph.D. In the early 1960's, Alpert, then a successful professor of psychology at Harvard University and therapist in the Cambridge area, became involved with Timothy Leary in research on LSD, psilocybin, and other psychedelic drugs. Their research soon attracted too much notoriety, and they were fired from Harvard. For the next several years he researched and experimented extensively with all kinds of psychedelic drugs.

In 1967 Alpert went to India, hoping to find someone who knew what LSD was. Eventually he encountered people who knew what he wanted to know, and began the transformation into Ram Dass, devoting himself to study and practice of ancient Eastern methods of raising consciousness.

Since his return from India, Ram Dass has been teaching and lecturing about his experiences, the process of his transformation, and the various disciplines he has studied. He has been especially influential because he has retained his western intelligence and learning, while embracing the Eastern spiritual teachings, and living the life of a yogi.

Be Here Now, a book he has published with the Lama Foundation, has sold nearly half a million copies and has had a great impact on people, particularly those who have become interested in spiritual ideas and higher consciousness after extensive experience with drugs.

Registration for the Symposium is at the office of Continuing Education, 920 Campus Center. The cost is $5.00 for students and $15.00 for others. For further information please call Room To Move at 545-0400.

All In A Woman's Day

All women interested in the arts--painting, poetry, sculpture, literature, film, photography, etc.--are welcome to an organizational meeting to discuss establishing a Feminist Arts Center in connection with Everywomen's Center on the University of Massachusetts campus.

The purpose would be to create a place where women can display their work, have a place to meet and talk with each other, build a library of feminist art journals, and hold seminars.

The meeting will be Tuesday, April 10 at 8 p.m. in Campus Center 904-908. For further information contact Gayle Dodson-Le Tourneau at Everywoman's Center, Munson Hall, University of Massachusetts.

"Women and Trades" will be the subject of a vocational workshop sponsored by Everywoman's Center at the University of Massachusetts April 10, at 7:30 p.m. in the Gallery Room at the Jones Library in Amherst.

There will be a broad discussion about this whole area of employment and training for women. It will deal with such questions as: the difficulties involved in becoming tradeswoman; what can be done about it; opportunities; kind of training; where to get it; and state regulations.

There will be a small panel of resource people. They include Peggy Linderman, a graduate student in the Labor Relations Center, Iona Reynolds, associate director of the Stockbridge School of Agriculture, Emily Simpson, Community Representative for Manpower in Franklin and Hampshire Counties, and Anne Wilson, a founding member of the Ithaca Project in New York.

Peace Corps, VISTA To Rap With Students

Former Peace Corps and VISTA volunteers will be on campus this week to talk with students interested in summer or fall training programs.

The Peace Corps needs graduates with degrees in math, science, engineering, languages, and social sciences as well as education degrees. However, if you have lived or worked on a farm you are a good candidate for a Peace Corps assignment, regardless of current major.

The representatives will be in the Campus Center the week of April 9-13. They will also be in the Placement Office in Whitmore, for interviews on April 9 & 10.

Programs are being filled quickly. If you are a senior and at all interested in the Peace Corps or VISTA please sign up for an interview at the Placement Office and take an information package at this time.

...NL East

chell will contend for the other starters jobs. The relievers will be Max Scarce and Bill Wilson. The catcher will be either rookie Bob Boone or veteran Mike Ryan. The first baseman will be Deron Johnson, Terry Harmon will play second base, Larry Bowa is the shortstop and Tovar will play third base. The outfield will have Greg Luzinski, Mike Anderson, Unser, Willie Montanez, Tom Hutton and Bill Robinson fighting for starting positions.

The NL East will have a good solid race between the Mets and the Pirates. The other teams, though, can be spoilers on any given day.

UMass Dancers To Perform In Fund Raising Concert

This Tuesday evening the University Dancers will perform in Hampden Student Center in Southwest. This performance, besides providing the community with an enjoyable evening of dance, will also assist the group in attaining the funds needed for the trip to Iran, where the group has been invited to perform in the seventh International Congress on Girl's and Women's Sports.

The University dancers have been invited to Iran for this Congress, which will be held from August 19 through August 23, 1973. However, they must raise their own funds in order to participate, and it is hoped that the various projects in which they are involved will help them realize this goal.

Their program for the evening is entitled, "An Evening of Dance", and will begin at 7:30. Admission is 75¢ and will go entirely towards their trip to Iran.

The University Dancers have been in existence since the Fall of 1970 under the direction of Marilyn V. Patton. The group is composed of 19 regular members and 7 understudies. Most of the students are in the Dance Concentration Program, and several are majoring in Theatre. This Dance Group, comprised of both men and women, graduates and undergraduates, has performed throughout the Commonwealth, as well as in Rhode Island and Connecticut. As a result of their efforts and hard work, and their seriousness in performance of Dance, they have been invited to perform at the 7th International Congress on Girl's and Women's Sports, which will be held in Iran, from August 19 through August 26, 1973. The University Dancers must raise their own funds to participate in this Congress and are working on many projects to help raise funds. It is hoped that they will realize their goal.

Quartetto Italiano To Perfrom In Series

Quartetto Italiano makes its bow at UMass tomorrow, at 8 p.m., under the auspices of the UMass Fine Arts Council. It is the fourth event of this season's Chamber Music Series, and will be in Bowker Auditorium.

The program will consist of Quartet in D major, Opus 6, No. 1 by Boccherini; Quartet in F major, Opus 96 subtitled "American" by Dvorak; Franz Schubert's Quartet in E flat major, Opus 125, No. 1, D.87; and Langsamer Satz by Webern. Members of Quartetto Italiano are Paolo Borciani and Elisa Pegreffi, violins; Piero Farulli, viola; and Franco Rossi, cello.

Reserved tickets are $1.50 for UMass undergrads and $3 for others, and may be obtained through the Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall in Amherst, telephone 545-0202. Remaining tickets will be available at the Bowker Auditorium Box Office one hour prior to the concert.

UMass To Host Soviet Scholar

The Department of Slavic Languages and Literatures is proud to announce that Dr. Yuri Glazov, a renowned Soviet scholar, will speak at the University of Massachusetts on April 10 at 4 p.m. in Herter 227. The title of Dr. Glazov's lecture is "The Defeat of the Moral Protest Movement in Russia in the Sixties."

Dr. Glazov, an internationally renowned linguist, scholar, essavist, lecturer and novelist, is a former member of the Oriental Institute of the Academy of Sciences in Moscow, Professor of Linguistics at Moscow University, and Senior Editor of the State Publishing House of Foreign Dictionaries. Dr. Glazov's scholarly activity originally centered on the Dravidian language and matters pertaining to South India, about which he has published numerous articles and books.

Dr. Glazov is more widely known in Europe and the United States as a critic and student of the Soviet system. He left the U.S.S.R. in April, 1972 and is currently stateless.

His lecture will be in English and is open to the public without charge.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your personality sparkles. Member of opposite sex could present you with token of affection. Accent is on home, security, ability to know what is required as opposed to what is merely desired. Taurus, Libra persons are in picture.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): What was a dark, mysterious area of your life now receives benefit of greater light. You know where you are going and why. One who knows the way is willing to share knowledge. Be receptive. Capricorn is featured.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Friendships, desires, the materials you need to function are all likely to come into focus. Aries plays prominent role. You feel good. You make emotional comeback. Now is time to speak up, to present your wares.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You get what you want-recognition is keynoted. Stress initiative, originality, greater independence and creativity. You are rewarded emotionally and financially. Move ahead. Make contacts. Imprint your style in unmistakable fashion.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22): Your philosophical concepts are sharpened. Travel and publishing could be on agenda. Get ideas across to more persons. Shake off lethargy. You have no need to fear the unknown. Many now look to you as example.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Intensified relationships are featured. Forces tend to be scattered. Sagittarian could be involved. Have alternatives at hand. Don't be pointed into emotional corner. Strive for freedom of choice.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Many who opposed you take different view. You could even attain public acclaim. Much depends on how you are prepared-key is to be thorough where rudiments are concerned. Don't delegate duties. Set sights on ultimate goal.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov.21): You have choice between continuing routine and breaking away to new horizons. You are likely to choose the latter, but not without some regrets. Gemini, Virgo persons could play important roles. A change does represent positive step.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Family affairs, domestic situation, home environment-these are apt to dominate. Adjustment is in offing. There also could be talk of change of residence. Finances should be reviewed with mate, partner.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Take steps slowly but surely. Maintain basic rhythm. Be sure there is solid ground beneath you. Reaching too far, too fast could now be form of self-deception. Avoid it. Pisces is apt to be in picture.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You know what you need but may be puzzled regarding specific course of action. Key is to go with experience. Means it is best now to stick with what you do best. Obtain valid hint from Capricorn message.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Spend it necessary to get rid of burden hanging on from past error. Young person makes demands but repays by providing stimulation. Be flexible. Aries could play paramount role. Money situation is better than it may appear on surface.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are drawn to law, medicine and possess natural acting ability. You are fiery, independent, able to make your mark and imprint individual style. November could be an outstanding month for you in 1973.

Basketball Play-offs

Hawks Top Celts, 97-94; Even Series At 2-2

By TOM SALADINO
AP Writer

ATLANTA (AP)—Pete Maravich triggered an aroused Atlanta rally late in the fourth quarter powering the Hawks to a 97-94 triumph over the Boston Celtics Sunday, squaring the National Basketball Association Eastern Conference semifinal series at two games apiece.

Maravich threw in 13 of his game high 37 points in the final period. The teams will meet in Boston for game No. 5 Wednesday and return to Atlanta Friday.

Maravich snapped an 88-88 tie on a 25-foot jumper with 3:28 left, and the Hawks never trailed again. However, the Celtics got to within 95-94 on a pair of free throws by Jo Jo White with nine seconds to play. Maravich then put the game out of reach with two free throws two seconds later.

The Hawks had spurted to a 77-63 lead after three quarters, but the Celtics came roaring out with 14 consecutive points, six by John Havlicek, to gain a 77-77 tie after four minutes of the final period before Maravich took charge.

Maravich got scoring help from Lou Hudson, who finished with 28 points, while Havlicek led the Celtics with 21.

The Hawks stormed to a 32-24 lead after the first quarter in which Hudson threw in 12 points. Atlanta then moved to its biggest margin of the half after three minutes of the second quarter, 39-26, before Boston's superior rebounding began to take its toll. Havlicek hit his first basket of the half with 30 seconds remaining and added a pair of three throws, giving Boston a 50-47 edge at halftime.

Knicks Eliminate Bullets In Game Five, 109-99

NEW YORK (AP)—Walt Frazier scored six points during a decisive 13-1 splurge in the fourth quarter as the New York Knicks won a berth in the National Basketball Association's Eastern Conference playoff finals with a 109-99 victory over Baltimore.

The Knicks eliminated Baltimore four games to one.

They now will meet the winner of the Boston-Atlanta series for the Eastern title.

The Knicks, leading only 78-76 after three quarters, raced to a commanding 91-77 advantage at the outset of the final period.

A free throw by Phil Jackson began the spree. Frazier followed with a jump shot, then Dave DeBusschere, Frazier and Willis Reed connected on field goals before Baltimore's Elvin Hayes interrupted the burst with a free throw.

Jackson then hit a driving two-pointer and Frazier followed with an unmolested layup after a steal.

After that, the Bullets never came closer than 10 points.

Earl Monroe, the Knicks' leading scorer with 26 points, drove, jumped and outsmarted young Phil Chenier, popping in 20 points on 10 of 13 field goal attempts in the first half when the Knicks surged to a 54-45 lead, outscoring the Bullets 28-14 in the second quarter.

Bosox Win 4-3 On Cepeda HR

BOSTON (AP) — Designated hitter Orlando Cepeda drilled a home run leading off the ninth inning, powering the Boston Red Sox to a 4-3 victory over the New York Yankees Sunday and a sweep of their three-game series.

Cepeda's shot came off New York's ace reliever Sparky Lyle shortly after the Yankees had tied the game 3-3 in the top of the ninth on a Boston error.

Felipe Alou came in with the tying run as Red Sox second baseman Doug Griffin threw wild to first in an attempt to complete a game-ending double play.

Earlier, Reggie Smith capped a sixth-inning rally with a two-run double to give Boston a 3-2 lead.

Held to one hit for five innings by rookie right-hander George Medich and trailing 2-0 the Red Sox rallied in the sixth.

Medich had retired 14 batters in order before Griffin lined a single to left. Then, with one out, Tommy Harper grounded a single through the middle and Mike Guerrero beat out a hit behind second base.

With the bases loaded, the Yankees summoned Lyle to face Boston slugger Carl Yastrzemski. Yaz grounded out, Griffin scoring, and Smith followed with a shot off the left field wall.

Bulls Tie LA

CHICAGO (AP) - Bob Love pumped in 38 points and sparked a fourth-quarter rally Sunday to lead the Chicago Bulls to a 98-94 victory over the Los Angeles Lakers in a nationally televised National Basketball Association playoff game.

Love put the Bulls ahead to stay 87-86 with about six minutes remaining, then teamed with Chet Walker and Bob Weiss as the Bulls mounted a 96-88 advantage and coasted in the closing minutes. The series is tied at 2-2.

VYING FOR BABE RUTH'S RECORD-Chart shows record number of home runs hit by famed Babe Ruth and the only two active players, Hank Aaron and Willie Mays who are close to surpassing Ruth's 714 home runs. As the 1973 baseball season gets underway Hank Aaron of the Atlanta Braves has 673 runs to his credit with Willie Mays of the New York Mets with 654. (AP Wirephoto)

Whalers Nip Nats 4-3 In OT

BOSTON (AP)—Brett Selby slapped in a rebound at 3:37 of overtime to give the New England Whalers a 4-3 victory over the Ottawa Nationals in the first round of the World Hockey Association playoffs.

The Whalers now hold a 2-0 lead in the best-of-seven series.

Ottawa's Ron Climie rammed a power play goal past Whalers goalie Al Smith with only 54 seconds remaining in regulation time to send the game into overtime.

The Nationals piled up a two goal lead in the first period on Brian Conacher's breakaway at 5:37 and when Whaler defenseman Ted Green inadvertently knocked in an Ottawa shot at 15:59. Gavin Kirk got the puck behind the net and fed out, the puck striking Green and popping into the open net.

Trades Give National League Teams New Look

(Ed. Note: This is the second and final part of Estelle's professional baseball outlook, the National League rundown.)

By BOB ESTELLE

Trades made over the winter have put some new faces on each of the teams in the NL West. Four of these teams have just some new faces but the Atlanta Braves and Los Angeles Dodgers have almost entirely restructured their ballclubs.

NL West

Atlanta Braves

The Atlanta Braves have six new pitchers on their roster. Their pitching staff, baseball's worst in 1972, has been strengthened with the addition of Gary Gentry and Danny Frisella (from the Mets), Pat Dobson and Roric Harrison (from the Orioles), Carl Morton (from Montreal) and Jim Panther (from Texas). They will join Phil Niekro, Ron Reed, Cecil Upshaw, Pat Jarvis, and Joe Hoerner in fighting to stick. The catching position will be taken over by ex-Oriole Johnny Oates. The incomparable Henry Aaron will play first base, Dave Johnson takes over at second, replacing the departed Felix Millan. Marty Perez and Darrell Evans will respectively play shortstop and third base. The outfield will have Ralph Garr in left, Dusty Baker in center and either Mike Lum or Sonny Jackson in right.

Los Angeles Dodgers

The Los Angeles Dodgers have an entirely different infield from last year. Maury Wills and Wes Parker have retired and Jim Lefebvre has gone to Japan. Replacing them are Bill Buckner at first base, Lee Lacy at second base, Bill Russell at short and Ken McMullen, acquired over the winter from California, at third. The outfield has Von Joshua or Manny Mota in left, Willie Davis in Center and Willie Crawford in right. Dick Dietz and Chris Cannizzaro will catch and the pitchers include Don Sutton, Claude Osteen, Andy Messersmith, Tommy John, Al Downing and Jim Brewer.

San Diego Padres

The Sand Diego Padres are still in the process of building up a team that one day may be a winner. They are going with young ballplayers, some of whom are real fine prospects. They include first baseman Nate Colbert, who has become a big offensive threat, second baseman Dave Roberts, shortstop Derrell Thomas and third baseman Dave Hilton. The outfield has Clarence Gaston and Leron Lee and problems. The rest of the outfielders on the roster are weak hitters. The catching job may go to youngster Mike Ivie or veteran Pat Corrales. The pitching staff has two fine prospects in Clay Kirby and Steve Arlin but the rest of the staff leaves a lot to be desired.

San Francisco Giants

The San Francisco Giants are trying to build back up to the championship ballclub they had two seasons ago. They could do it with the combination of youngsters and veterans that are on the roster. Willie McCovey (1B), Tito Fuentes (2B), Chris Speier (SS) and Dave Kingman (3B) will be the infielders. Gary Mathews, Garry Maddox and Bobby Bonds are the outfielders. Dave Rader will be the catcher. The pitching staff got a boost with the acquisition of Tom Bradley from the White Sox. He joins Sam McDowell, Juan Marichal and Ron Bryant in the starting rotation. The relievers include Jerry Johnson and Randy Moffitt (Billie Jean King's brother).

Houston Astros

The big acquistion for the Houston Astros this season is Tommie Agee, from the Mets, who will be the rightfielder. Jim Wynn will be the leftfielder and Cesar Cedeno will be in center. The infield has Lee May at first, Tommy Helms at second, Roger Metzger at short and Doug Rader at third. Bob Watson's conversion to catcher will be manager Leo Durocher's big gamble in trying to add more muscle into the Houston lineup. If he can't make it old pro Johnny Edwards will catch. The pitching staff has starters Larry Dierker, Dave Roberts, Don Wilson, Ken Forsch and Jerry Reuss. Jim Ray and Fred Gladding provide relief help.

Cincinnati Reds

The defending champion Cincinnati Reds strengthened themselves by acquiring Roger Nelson and Richie Scheinblum from the Kansas City Royals. Nelson joins a staff with Gary Nolan, Ross Grimeley, Jack Billingham and Don Gullett. Relievers include Tom Hall, Clay Carroll, and Pedro Borbon. MVP Johnny Bench will be behind the plate, Tony Perez is the first baseman, Joe Morgan is at second base, Dave Concepcion is the shortstop and Denis Menke is at third base. The outfield has Pete Rose in left, Bobby Tolan in center and Scheinblum in right.

A lot of changes have indeed helped to strengthen some of the ballclubs in the NL West and it should be an interesting race.

NL East

Pittsburgh Pirates

The Pittsburgh Pirates have won this title in each of the last three seasons but the rest of the division may be catching up to them. Their real leader, Roberto Clemente, died tragically last December and the Pirates will miss him. But don't count them out. Converted catcher Manny Sanguillen will take over in right field and still have a lot of muscle with first baseman Willie Stargell, second baseman Dave Cash and third baseman Rich Hebner, not to mention, of course, outfielders Vic Davalillo, Gene Clines, Al Oliver, and Dennie Stennet. Milt May will also pick up some of the slack, filling in for Sanguillen behind the plate. The Pirates mound corps, with the lowest team E.R.A. in the majors last year, will have Dock Ellis, Steve Blass, Nelson Briles and Bruce Kison as starters with Bob Johnson and Bob Moose as backup men with Ramon Hernadez and Dave Giusti coming out of the bullpen.

New York Mets

The most serious challengers to the Pirates may be the New York Mets. The Mets went to the trade market last winter and came up with a lot of new faces. To begin with, they obtained second baseman Felix Millan and pitcher George Stone from Atlanta but had to give up pitcher Gary Gentry and Danny Frisella to get them. The Mets also obtained reliever Phil Hennigan from Cleveland who will along with Tug McGraw handle short relief. The rest of the mound corps includes super all star Tom Seaver, rookie of the year Jon Matlack, Jim McAndrew, Jerry Koosman and Ray Sadecki. Either Jerry Grote or Duffy Dyer will catch, John Milner will be at first, Millan at second, Bud Harrelson at short and Jim Fregosi will play third. The outfield will have Cleon Jones in left, Willie Mays and Rich Chiles in center and Rusty Staub in right.

Chicago Cubs

The Chicago Cubs, feeling that their relief pitching left something to be desired, dealt away starter Bill Hands and a score of youngsters to obtain relievers Dave LaRoche and Bob Locker. The gap created by Hands' departure is expected to be filled by Rick Reuschel, who will join Ferguson Jenkins, Milt Pappas, and Burt Hooton in the starting rotation. Dan McGinn and Jack Aker will provide some help. The catcher will be Randy Hundley, Joe Pepitone will be at first, Glenn Beckert at second, Don Kessinger the shortstop and Ron Santo will round out the Cub infield at third. The outfield will have Billy Williams in left, Rick Monday in center, Jose Cardenal in right, and Jim Hickman filling in.

St. Louis Cardinals

The St. Louis Cardinals have one big decision to make and that is where Ted Simmons will play. If he remains the catcher, the Cards will have to find a first baseman but the Cardinals have an abundance of catchers so Simmons will probably wind up at first. This leaves the catching job open for either veteran Tim McCarver or rookie Gene Dusan. Filling out the rest of the infield will be Ted Sizemore at second, Ray Busse at shortstop and Joe Torre at third. The outfield has Lou Brock in left, Jose Cruz in center and Bernie Carbo in right. The mound corps will be lead by superpitcher Bob Gibson. The rest of the starting rotation will consist of Rick Wise, Scipio Spinks, Reggie Cleveland and Diego Segui. Relief help will come from Wayne Granger.

Montreal Expos

The Montreal Expos are young and still building. But it will be quite a while before they are good enough to challenge the Pirates. Their mound staff will be lead by Bill Stoneman and Mike Torrez. Ernie McAnally, Steve Renko and Balor Moore will contend for the other starting positions. Mike Marshall will provide relief help. The catcher will be either Terry Humphrey or John Boccabella. Ron Fairly will be at first base, Ron Hunt will be at second. Tim Foli is the shorstop and Bob Bailey is at third. The outfield has Ken Singleton, Mike Jorgenson, Ron Woods, Clyde Mashore and Boots Day.

Philadelphia Phillies

The Philadelphia Phillies are trying the trade market in an attempt to build thir team up to respectability. New faces include pitchers Jim Lonborg and Ken Brett, infielders Jose Pagan and Cesar Tovar and outfielder Del Unser. Steve Carlton will lead the mound staff while Lonborg, Brett, Barry Lersch and Wayne Twitchell will provide the rest of the pitching staff. Infield help will come from Larry Bowa, Tim Cullen, Mike Ryan and Ed Sprague. The outfield will have Bill Robinson in left, Oscar Gamble in center and Willie Montanez in right.

UMass, White Halt Yale Rally; Win 9-8

By GEOFF KURINSKY

Was it the same Tom White? The guy who had an ERA on the West Coast trip that he nor anyone else dared talk about. The hard-throwing southpaw put the California trip behind him and started out anew, while bailing John Olsen out of a ninth inning jam to preserve a 9-8 victory for the UMass baseball squad over Yale, in a game played Saturday afternoon at Lorden Field.

Enter White, Candy Grossman hit a little nubber back to White who flipped to catcher Tom McDermott getting Rodman coming to the plate for the second out. White got Pat O'Gara to fly to right and the Minutemen had squeaked out a victory.

The UMass hitters showed their hitting fineness early, building up an 8-2 lead after four innings. Flannagan, who gave up five runs in an effective five inning stint, banged a double up the left-center field gap to produce two runs in the second inning.

The Minutemen picked up three more in the third run, producing singles by Eddie McMahon and Mark Palau providing the bombardment. The Minutemen had a cushion, ahead of Yale 5-2.

UMass picked up three additional runs in the fourth as Howie Palmer, the second Yale pitcher of the afternoon ran into a streak of wildness and the Minutemen batters walked leisurely around the bases to give UMass a seemingly comfortable 8-2 lead.

The Elis were not dead yet however, as they chipped away picking up three runs in their half of the fifth, two runs driven home by Rodman's triple, closing the gap to 8-5.

After UMass picked up a run in the sixth, things were quiet until the top of the eight. Without benefit of a hit (four Olsen walks and a couple of infield miscues) the Elis picked up three runs to put Yale back in the ballgame 9-8.

Southpaw Mike Flanagan started for UMass on this beautiful clear spring day. Why a break from the rain, nobody knows! Flanagan was tough, especially through the first three innings, as he was changing speeds very effectively and fooling nine Eli batters into strikeouts. Both runs in the fourth inning were unearned as Mark Palau had trouble on a ground ball. Two plays before Palau made a great play on a hard shot by Greg Daniels, but he couldn't quite recover to make the play.

The Yale runs in the fifth were no fluke as the Elis got four straight hits from the middle of their batting order all after two men were out. But the three runs in the eighth, reminded people of the old Chicago White Sox at their best as they sandwiched walks around infield errors, with a wild pitch thrown in. Ala-three runs.

For the Minutemen of Massachusetts, they'll face the Amherst Lord Jeffs on Wednesday afternoon at Amherst College, in Act II of the lengthy Omaha Trail.

Tracksters Fall To NU

By WALT POWERS

If you had told track coach Ken O'Brien that his team would go into the two-mile of Saturday's meet with Northeastern only five points behind, and then lose it on the next to last event, he would have smiled and recommended you to a psychiatrist. After all, the Huskies were favored, but the two mile was an event in which the Minutemen hadn't been blanked in more than two years.

Well, it happened. On a warm, sunny, Saturday afternoon, at Leweloyn Derby Track, N.U. ran to a 1-2-3 finish in the two mile, and sneaked away from an upset-hungry UMass team with a 90 1/2-791/2 victory. Boston University, coached by former Olympic great John Thomas, was missing some of their better runners, and could only manage to score 33 points.

The Minutemen got off to a flying start when Bobby Adamson broke Phil Hood's thirty year old freshman record in the long jump. UMass also took second and third. Northeastern evened the score with a 1-2-3 finish in the hammer throw, and then built up a ten point lead by dominating the weight events, the six-mile, and the high jump. The Huskies, though, were never able to take a commanding lead, and their biggest shock came in the discus, where Mel Taylor, highly touted as the next New England champion, lost to UMass Dennis Boisvert.

"We psyched Taylor out," said weight coach Gideon Ariel. "Their weight coach asked me about our strength in the discus and I told him that Boisvert could throw 135 feet, and he's the only man we have. Taylor usually throws in the 150's, so he didn't seem very concerned.

Boisvert then went out wearing a full sweatsuit and set a UMass record with a throw of 161.2. This rankled Taylor so much, that he bounced his next throw into the ground.

Victories by the New England champion 40 relay team, Steve Levine in the 440, and a 1-2 finish by Randy Thomas and Bill Gillin in the mile kept UMass in contention. All eyes were on Tom Gilliams in the triple jump, and they stayed there until Bobby Adamson hopped, skipped, and jumped fourteen inches past Gilliams' old school record. Adams set four official records in the two events he entered, an outstanding feat for a freshman in his varsity debut.

After fifteen events, Northeastern was leading by fourteen points, but a 1-2-3 finish by Tony Pendleton, Dennis Busa, and Tom Beland in the 220 quickly cut the margin to five. With two events left and both of them strong points, UMass stood on the verge of an upset.

It looked good for a while in the two mile, but the eratic pace took its toll on Randy Thomas and Bill Gillin, both insufficiently recovered from earlier races. With three laps to go, Mike Buckley, Ken Flanders, and then Steve Hamel of Northeastern pulled away from Tom Wilson and Tom Maguire, taking the meet with them.

Crew Sweeps

By MDC STAFF

The UMass Crew teams swept Worcester Polytech in all three races Saturday on the Connecticut River.

In the varsity race, UMass finished 38 seconds ahead of WPI on the choppy upstream course by a time of 601.7 seconds to 639.9 for WPI. UMass started at 36 strokes per minute and settled to 32, while WPI went from 44 to 36 strokes per minute.

In the other races, The UMass J.V.'s had an equally easy time with the WPI lightweight (under 160 lbs) crew beating them by a 626.5 - 657.6 score. The UMass freshmen "A" and "B" crews (6:09 and 6:41 respectively) also had little difficulty with the WPI frosh (7:15).

Stickers Whip Green

By HOWIE BLOOM

It was real wild west stuff. The Indians invade from foreign stamping grounds, with the idea of running rough-shod over the good guys foremost in their minds. They draw first blood, of course, but after a fiercely fought battle, they succumb to the superior firepower of the good guys, and retreat back to their own reservation to regroup for their next encounter.

Thank the Lord the good guys always win. And thank Him again that Garber's Gorillas were able to recove~ from the quick 1-0 deficit the Big Green from Dartmouth placed upon them.

The good guy Gorillas were determined not to make it another little Big Horn, and their coach another General Custer, so to speak. After Dave Cranshaw's quick tally put Dartmouth in the lead for the first and last time in the ballgame, UMass set down to some serious lacrosse playing. Freddie Michels, who is one third of a line that's already making people ask, "Hardy, Nagle, and Ritch? Who?"; scored four goals as did Frank Garahan, an attackman from Long Island. Frank Garahan, who was scoring goals for Nassau Community College at this time last season, made everyone glad he tired of the Long Island school by putting the Gorillas on top, 3-1 at 3:23, with his second goal after Michels put UMass ahead to stay, 2-1 at the 2:12 mark. The score came at the culmination of some nifty passing by midfielders Hirsch Seidman and Jack Moran, who started a fast break after a diving save by goalie John Rutledge off pesty Bob Vaeth. Seidman ran downfield with the ball, fed to Moran at his left, who flipped the ball in the crease to Garahan for the Gorillas' third score. After Cranshaw started his coach wondering why he had him running on second midfield by cutting, UMass' lead to one goal, Michels started everyone grabbing for their hats by putting the Gorillas up, 4-2. The period ended with Garahan completing his line's monopoly of the action, and the score at the end of one was 5-2.

The visitors started the 200-odd UMass lacrosse fans' blood pumping a lot faster as the second stanza opened by making it a game again on two scores by senior starting attackman Dick Gamper. But the glory was to be short-lived, because no sooner had Gamper finished his act than Moran gave the UMass middies a piece of the action, with special thanks going to Seidman and Dwight Blomquist. Bruce Sibson made it attack—5, middies—2 at 8:08 of the period after goalie Rutledge survived a sustained offensive by the visitor's big three, Scott Anderson, John Lyons, and Bruce Stuart. 7-4. Anderson, who has been Dartmouth's big gun the last two seasons, played more like his ammo is Greenie Stickum' Caps than as the All-Ivy pick he was in 1972. Moran ended the half's scoring, and with it any hopes Dartmouth had of winning, and it was 8-4.

Not very imaginatively, the Big Green Indians put on another period—beginning, two-goal show as the second half got underway to cut the Gorillas' lead in half, 8-6. But wait. There was help on the horizon. 'I won't let those native Americans take away all we've worked so hard to attain.' And with those words, Steve Crimmin came to his team's rescue, putting it out of reach for good, 9-6. Rutledge was superb.

The fourth period was a good time, if you happen to be a student at UMass. The final score was 12-6, with Michels scoring two and Garahan tallying his third of the game. The last goal was the nicest of the sunny afternoon, as Seidman took a feed from Rutledge, raced the length of the field, scooped it to Garahan in front of the net, and the rest is history. Goalie Mitch Whitley never saw it.

UMass is now 1-1. Their next game is this afternoon, a makeup of last Friday's rainout against Connecticut. Game time is 3 o'clock, on the upper Boyden Field.

NEW YORK (AP)—Goalie Ed Giacomin earned his first Stanley Cup shutout Sunday night as the New York Rangers defeated the Phil Esposito-less Boston Bruins 4-0 in the fourth game of the National Hockey League Playoff.

The victory gave the Rangers a 3-1 edge in the best-of-seven quarter-final round with the fifth game scheduled for Tuesday night.

Ed. Marathon Begins Flight

By DON GLICKSTEIN

"We have certain basic lapses of intelligence, and this is one of them," observed Associate Provost David Bischoff as he climbed into the giant hot gas balloon.

The balloon lifted off from the North P.E. Athletic field yesterday carrying in its wicker basket Bischoff, School of Education Dean Dwight Allen, and pilot Bob Sparks.

The event signalled the start of the School of Education's 5th semi-annual Marathon, a pot pourri of discussions, lectures, films, and for the first time, balloons.

Holding a brightly-painted sign that read "Quality Education or Bust!", Dean Allen said that the flight's purpose was to point out that "serious educational efforts can be pursued light-heartedly."

"Out of 700 hours of scheduled events," Allen said of the Marathon, "one hour of levity is appropriate. People can have a good time and learn something, too."

The pilot, Bob Sparks, holds the world duration record for hot air balloons, 11 hours 14 minutes, set last December. At the end of June he will take off in a balloon from Bar Harbor, Maine bound for Europe on what he claims will be the first trans-Atlantic balloon flight.

Sparks has been ballooning for three years. He's never had an injury, but says that he's always had a fear of height. His personal flag has a white field with one yellow stripe and a chicken in the corner.

Associate Provost Bischoff was invited to balloon by Dean Allen. As a token of gratitude for the companionship, Dean Allen brought six cans of Coca Cola and Tab to share with Bischoff. Allen is a legendary soft-drinker.

Associate Provost for Special Programs, Robert Woodbury, who works with Bischoff mused that Bischoff's motives for going up with Allen were solely professional.

"One of his major responsibilities," Woodbury said, "is to oversee the School of Education.."

Allen said that he wasn't afraid of the flight, but he preferred to land in "friendly territory." As the journey was a free float, the only directions that could be controled were up and down.

The balloon's name is "Tamiment," an Indian word meaning "friendly". When filled, it holds 76,000 cubic feet of hot air. Allen said that he was sure that "a lot of metaphorical allusions will be made" about that fact.

The flight last one hour. The daring trio landed on Route 63 in North Amherst.

The idea for the balloon flight originated with the Future Studies Teacher Training Program of the education school.

The Marathon will continue throughout the week. Detailed schedules are available at the School of Education.

Dwight Allen, (left) Dean of the School of Education, takes off in a hot air balloon to initiate the fifth semi-annual School of Education Marathon. The purpose of the flight, which was manned by Bill Sparks, was to demonstrate that "serious educational efforts can be pursued light-heartedly". The flight lasted about an hour.

Black Musicians' Conference Underway

By GARY GOMES

A five day conference on the "Historical Role of Black Music" began yesterday morning with a discussion which featured many black musicians known nationally.

Chancellor Bromery welcomed the conferees to UMass noting that he himself had played the alto sax his youth. "My father played the jazz trumpet for forty years.", he said. Bromery also called attention to those who have "on the African continuum and in the millenium . . . chosen to resist. In the substance of that resistance lies the nucleus of the culture and the only real beat that moves us is the beat of the drum . . ."

Yesterday morning's panel discussion was introduced by Bill Hasson, one of the coordinators of the program. Participants included Art Davis, who has played with such notable musicians as John Coltrane, Charlie Parker, and the keynote speaker, Professor Max Roach, who teaches in the department of Afro-American Studies and Music at UMass.

Others on the panel included Clayton Riley, Ortez Walton and Sunny Murray, a percussionist-composer who has played with musicians such as Cecil Taylor and Albert Ayler, and has been for over ten years one of the prime rhythmic innovators in Black music.

Hasson, in his opening comments to the audience explained the format of the conference. Every morning there will be a keynote speech in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union which will cover topics in a panel discussion. The topics will cover "Black Music as a Domestic and International Political Phenomenon", "The Music Business and Legal aspects", "New Compositions and Technique", and "Drugs and Penology as a System of Oppression of Black Musicians". The discussions will take place from 9 a.m. until noon.

There will be workshops in the afternoon to discuss certain aspects of these phenomena. Concerts will be featured every night, viewing various aspects of Black music.

Planned workshop coordinators will be such innovators as Ornette Coleman, McCoy Tyner, Cecil Taylor and Joseph Jarman. Speakers will be Max Roach, Archie Shepp, Donald Byrd and Clifford Thornton.

In yesterday's discussion, Professor Max Roach placed heavy emphasis on Black Music as a "chronicler of the times", and viewed the blues as the first internationally felt manifestation of what he feels is America's main art form—Black music. He also pointed out that the universal unity and simplicity of the blues form made "Black music a prize commodity which could be easily exploited."

Roach said the fluidity of Afro-American music as an ongoing historical process can be seen in Sunny Murray, a co-panelist.

Clayton Riley, who once wrote for the New York Times told of his difficulty in getting articles on Black culture printed, citing as an example a review of Ortez Walton's book, which he submitted months ago and the Times has still

Grad. Senate Requests RSO Group Privileges

Neal Tolciss, of the Grad Senate Students Affairs Committee outlined last night the formation of a student grievance procedure to avoid the expense of a lawyer.

By JOAN FASSNACHT

The passage of a motion to request that the Campus Center Student Union Governing Board grant all graduate student organizations the same use of building facilities afforded to RSO groups highlighted the Graduate Student Senate meeting last night.

Following a short discussion, the Senate members voted to add two amendments:

The first amendment defined graduate student organizations as all organizations approved by the Graduate Senate, plus any organizations added to those already approved by request of senators from any graduate department to the Graduate Student Senate which will vote on approval.

A second amendment stipulated that the organizations using such facilities shall be wholly responsible for them.

In other new business the Senate voted to renew Mr. Richard Howland's contract for legal counseling for 1973-74.

Speaking before the Senate last night, Ron Bagard, a representative of WMPIRG, appealed to the senators to pass a voluntary tax of $2.00 per semester for WMPIRG for graduate students. The motion was quickly seconded and passed.

Under the President's Report, Neil Tolciss of the Graduate Student Affairs Committee outlined the formation of a grievance procedure in which students will be able to follow so as to avoid the expense of a lawyer. Tolciss cited the case of Frank Skinner's unfair treatment and said, "By establishing an orderly complaint procedure for students, we can avoid the legal confusion which Skinner experienced. Basically, the procedure will consist of a fact-finding committee and levels of appeal up to the Office of Academic Affairs. We hope to have it ready by next fall."

A motion to fund the committee chairmen of the Student Union Governing Board $125.00 per month was tabled. Concerning this motion, the Senate also moved to have the Student Union Governing Board reconsider their decision to fund themselves.

John Muller, Vice President of the Graduate Senate, moved to open the floor to nominations for the Senate's upcoming elections. In a short speech about the elections, Muller stated, "I am particularly interested in having these elections held two weeks early so that the newly-elected officers can be trained by their predecessors. I would like to see the elections held on April 23 or May 7 at the latest." The nomisations will remain open until election day.

There will be advertisements in future editions of the Collegian. The Graduate Senate will be taking nominations of graduate students for the offices of President, Vice-President, Treasurer, and Secretary.

Harvey Scribner: A True Professional

By FRANCES BROCK

Dr. Harvey Bertram Scribner, veteran of New England schools, is returning to New England as a professor at the University of Massachusetts School of Education next fall.

Dr. Scribner is currently completing his term as the first Chancellor for the city school system of New York City. He took the post in 1970 when the Board of Education in New York decided to become decentralized and revamp the administrative bureaucracy. Many well known personalities were asked and considered for the post but Scribner was chosen because he was a fresh, innovative face for a somewhat stale school system.

Prior to his New York position, he served as Commissioner of Education in Vermont. During his two years there, he wrote his educational beliefs in a pamphlet entitled, "The Vermont Design for Education." He feels that "the emphasis must be upon learning rather than teaching . . . A student must be accepted as a person . . . All persons need success to prosper.

Schools should be compatible with reality." Vermont, having a very decentralized system, locally and statewide, and very small schools, was able to successfully adopt some of his concepts but there were many who opposed Scribner. Legislators questioned his doing away with too many standards, and many school boards felt that by giving the students too much freedom to explore for themselves, the classrooms were getting too noisy.

Scribner is an ideological person as well as a Puritan. He believes that it would help if the teachers, administrators and other facets of the system would get out of the way occasionally so that the students could learn once in awhile. It was this refreshing outlook on education that intrigued New York. Unfortunately, it did not work out. Because he could not teach old dogs new tricks, Scribner was unable to get the teachers to accept the responsibility of teaching. They had become dependent on the administrative guidance.

Scribner was opposed to the exam system which gave him much opposition. He was opposed to the licensing system of teachers, and appointed a non-licensed Black as head of a high school which was predominantly Black and Puerto Rican. This gave him even more opposition. He gained a reputation as being "gutsy" but in actuality, did not have near as much power as he was supposedly allotted in the re-defined administrative set-up.

Born in Albion, Maine, 58 years ago, Scribner has been involved in the educational system all his life. During the Depression he taught in a one room school house in a nearby town of Unity, Maine. In 1946 he received his bachelor degree from Farmington State Teachers' College, and in 1960 he received his doctorate at Boston University.

In 1954, Scribner had his first superintendent position for the Dedham, Mass. schools. It was there, when he obtained federal funds for an experiment in which he wanted to see the effectiveness of students teaching each other, that he was accused of standing "for all the things Communists stand for."

Scribner feels he has been destined to be a loser and his entire life has been spent fighting up hill. However, as superintendent for the schools of Teaneck, New Jersey, in 1961, he was the first to propose a busing system to integrate the schools. At first it was voluntary but it was finally made mandatory.

While in New York, Scribner proposed "The Learning Cooperative." He is very interested in elementary schooling and his proposal was to set up a system where five schools would be set up around the nucleus of one teachers' college. It is this interest in teaching that makes him a popular addition to the UMass faculty. Assistant Dean Earl Sideman of the School of Education here at UMass, said, "we are delighted he has chosen to come." Sideman felt that Scribner could add considerable strength to the department in preparing [illegible]

Prof. Says Grades Immoral

By DEBBIE MORIARTY

Dr. Sidney B. Simon, a professor of Humanistic Education, said yesterday, during a session of the School of Ed. Marathon Week, that "Grades are absolutely the most immoral thing in American Education today."

Simon compared students to shoppers in a supermarket automatically throwing courses, into their baskets regardless of their content, because it is expected of them. Simon gave as the only reason for students doing this is the green stamps or diploma, the recieve at the checkout counter. Simon said that if the pressure was not on for the "green stamps" students would be more selective in picking their courses, and would choose courses of interest to them, and not just courses that would get them to the checkout counter quicker.

Simon also discussed four myths that exist in the grading system today. The first myth is that you need the grade to know where you are. Simon said that there is no research evidence at all that states that grades can rate you accurately in regards to what you have learned, and in comparison to what others have learned.

The second myth, Simon said, is that grades predict success. As an example Simon mentioned a research study concerning men who were Phi Beta Kappa key holders twenty years ago. The research showed that most of these men were in the lower percentile of today's work force.

The third myth is that grades are objective and fair. As contradictions to this myth Simon mentioned the "Apple-polishers" and "brown-noses" who dropped by his office for a friendly chat the week before an exam. Concerning cheaters, Simon said: "Some cheaters were so creative, you could only admire their creative ability." Concerning professors, Simon raised the question as to whether professors really read the final exam. After all, he said, professors only have twenty-four hours to correct exams, and they are not going to see the student again, and the student isn't going to see his exam again, so isn't it possible for the professor, to put down the same grade received in the mid-term?

The fourth myth, is that colleges need grades. Simon mentioned a growing movement who feel we don't need grades. He said that is is only in school, do we tolerate being catoragorized and rated by a single letter.

As an alternative to the present grading system, Simon suggests a "complete credit, no record system". This system would not include pass-fail courses. This system would allow a student to learn because he wants to learn, not because he is pressured into learning. Simon said that this system would also eliminate inadequate teachers because the student would not be interested enough to attend his classes.

In the present system Simon said: "Grades are more destructive to "A" students than anyone else. They are toilet-trained to do others work for the rest of their life, and they never find out who they personally are."

Selectmen Receive Boltwood Money

By ED FOGARTY

The Amherst Board of Selectmen signed a receipt last night accepting $1,200,000 from the State as a matching grant to the Town's already appropriated $1,436,000 toward the Boltwood Walk Project.

The Boltwood Project is a plan to renovate Amherst Town Center into a mall area. It will involve a housing unit for the elderly and a shopping area.

Raymond Werbe, Chairman of the Amherst Redevelopment Authority, presented the bill to the Selectmen. "The money will be paid in twenty yearly payments, and is $163,000 more than we had contemplated", said Werbe.

The project is estimated to take five years to complete.

Eric Walgren, sponsor of a bill to establish a Law Enforcement Study Committee, (LESC) threatened the Selectman with a law suit if they did not "follow something in the spirit of my original plan."

Walgren stated that the original intent of his committee was to include ten citizens and four administrative persons. He said that the committee was to review the law enforcement situation in Amherst and report its findings and recommendations to the Town.

The Citizens Review Commission has received authority to establish a subcommittee to perform the functions of the LESC. Walgren said this was not the original intention of the Article.

"What you have done is substitute a previous committee for an appointed one," said Walgren.

The Selectmen reviewed a proposal by Selectwoman Nancy Eddy to "place a brick in every toilet" in order to save water from the sewer systems of Amherst.

Eddy said that the brick in the toilet would save up to ten million gallons of water per day. She also proposed that the Board move to recommend that the townspeople cut down on the overall use of water.

The Board voted to table the motion until it was determined what type of brick to use in the toilet.

The Valley Peace Center lost a motion to give them the right to place a sign on the Town Common asking people to give money for Medical Aid to Indochina.

The fund drive will be held during the week of April 23 to 29.

MSP Approves Minority Plank

By BOB SCHEIER

The Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) yesterday approved a substitute plank in its proposed platform calling for a committee to deal with "specific questions" affecting women and ethnic minorities at the UMass campus.

The MSP, at a meeting attended by about 25 MSP members, other faculty, and several students, also formally approved a Professional Unity Agreement with the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) with which it plans to bargain to represent the campus' 1400 faculty members.

Also approved at the meeting were 16 other platform planks, calling for the "retention and strengthening" of tenure for faculty approved through the peer evaluation process, "legally binding and efficient grievance procedures" included in the negotiating contract, and a Faculty Bill of Rights, among other items.

The minority plank was approved by the MSP after a half hour of discussion about its length and wording. At four paragraphs, it was about four times as long as other planks in the platform, and used stronger language than other planks and made a specific recommendation for the committee to handle women's and ethnic concerns.

Prof. Michael M. Thelwell, head of the Afro-American Studies Dept., presented the plank. He acknowledged it was longer than most other planks in the platform, but added he assumed the other planks would be longer and said its importance justified its length.

The plank called for the "strengthening and expansion of programs and policies" opening the university to minority peoples, and supported Affirmative Action to recruit women and ethnic minorities into the faculty and professional staff.

It also called for a permanent standing committee of women and ethnic minorities to design policies and programs dealing with women and ethnic minorities.

The entire platform, including the new plank, now goes back to the AAUP for approval.

Other planks in the platform supported a strengthening of tenure, legally binding grievance procedures, faculty input in the budgetary process, and a ratio of full time (as opposed to on leave or part time) faculty members to students of 15 to 1.

The tenure plank opposed denial of tenure for budgetary or quota reasons, and asked the "retention and strengthening of academic tenure" for all faculty approved by the peer evaluation process.

The union also called for binding grievance procedures, "including binding arbitration where necessary". On the budget, it said "budget preparation and submission should be a joint effort of the faculty and administration."

In other matters, it said teaching faculty performing "supportive functions" was "inefficient and wasteful," and hit the proposed reorganization of education in the state, saying "we are opposed to control of university affairs by the bureaucracy of the Governor, and his executive branch of the state government."

The MSP also empowered its executive committee to name seven temporary members to a 19-man governing board for the MSP/AAUP. They will serve until May 9, when elected officers will take over.

This move came because a state hearing to reach an informal agreement on a collective bargaining unit for the campus is scheduled for next week in Boston. The meeting, to be held between the UMass administration and the MSP/AAUP, had been postponed from earlier in the month at the request of the administration.

Danny Scarborough, doctoral candidate in the School of Education, explains the history of the SASSI Preparatory Dance Troup. Scarborough's Troup performed as part of the Ed. Marathon's first day of activity.

BDIC's Role Discussed

By DENNY MATTEAU

"We're now discussing the possibilities of working out some kind of program (akin to Bachelor's Degree in Individual Concentration) with the community colleges," said Prof. Arthur Kinney, director of BDIC, as he addressed a small group of students and visitors in the School of Education Marathon yesterday afternoon.

"BDIC (at UMass) has not yet reached its saturation point," he said, "but we may reach it by next year."

According to Prof. Kinney, a cooperative BDIC program with the other state colleges is one alternative to placing an arbitrary ceiling on the program, which he feels would be "inherently unfair".

Mount Wachusett and Berkshire Community Colleges have already expressed an interest in the idea and, Prof. Kinney said, he sees "the possibility of building closer ties between the community college and the university faculties."

Harvard Clinical Psychologist Daniel Goleman said last night that the first five states of consciousness are: waking, sleeping, dreaming and the trance state. The fifth state, he said was meditation.

Goleman Explains 'State Of Consciousness'

By STEVE FERNANDEZ

Harvard Clinical Psychologist Daniel Goleman, featured speaker in a program sponsored by DVP in conjunction with Room to Move, said last night that Western psychologists have not taken altered states of consciousness and their place in the real world seriously.

"Psychological theory is an extension of the theorist," said Goleman, "and Western psychologists are just now beginning to undergo experiences with meditation and other states of consciousness."

Goleman spent fifteen months traveling in India and studying meditation. Some of that time he was with Baba Ram Das, formerly Dr. Richard Alpert and author of the book Be Here Now.

"Our culture lacks a model." [illegible] state. This fifth state, he explained, is a world which only becomes available "when one gives up wanting and expecting."

Goleman shared a meditation exercise with the audience as he read from the Tibetan recipe to attain the fifth state. The audience kept perfect silence in tune with the relaxed mood he presented.

He also showed a slide of the Tibetan wheel, which explains the six states of mind in the Tibetan psychology. The fifth state or the Buddha realm lies outside the wheel. "This wheel did not fit into any categories of psychology I have ever seen," he said.

"India is totally supportive of spiritual work," he said. He added that in this country, if you see someone meditating you are likely to ask "why are you doing that?" In India [illegible] "why not?"

The program began with music and chanting by an Cambodia, a Buddhist monk teacher from Baba Ram Das's ashram in Hanover. He said the chant word chant "Gate Gate Para Gate" was "to get our own vibrations even to harmonic mass-vibration." Judging from the audience reaction he continues to do very well.

Athletic Council Tackles Aid

By STEVE CROWE

Scholarship policy was the main issue at the meeting of the Athletic Council yesterday afternoon. The council voted on an internal working document for their Barber awards policy and heard a policy complaint from basketball coach Jack Leaman.

Leaman, invited to discuss his basketball program criticized the current "use it or lose it" scholarship policy. At the present time, if a sport does not use its allotted number of scholarships in a year, the team loses the aid.

Leaman suggested a change in the policy to allow the sport to keep the scholarships left over from one year if the available talent is not suitable for the UMass program.

The present policy, according to Leaman, sometimes forces the team to waste money on less talented players or else lose the money altogether.

"I don't think that it's wise to have a "use it or lose it" policy if you want to have a good athletic program," said Leaman.

The basketball coach also stressed the problem of the devaluation of the scholarships. As tuition rates rise, the value of the scholarship is going down, therefore less players can be recruited on the same amount of money.

Leaman emphasized his need for more money in the basketball program. "Our aim is to be No. 1 in New England," he said. But many other schools in New England are spending more money than UMass, including Bentley, AIC, and Fairfield.

"URI and UConn are moving forward in their programs while we're, in reality, moving backwards (because the funds are remaining the same as the rate increases)."

In other action, the council adopted a "general policy statement" for the priority disbursement schedule of Barber Scholarship Awards.

The bill was designed by Ms. Maida Riggs to give the council a written policy for scholarships and was passed with minor amendments.

The policy listed the recipient programs of the award money in three basic categories. The first priority will go to "those teams that generate income for the fund, such as football, basketball, and hockey." These sports accounted for approximately 70% of the Barber Fund. The money collected at the gate and additional tournament money goes into the fund.

The second priority will go to those "other sports (the ones that don't bring in the money) that the Department wishes to encourage and help develop" to the level

Gen. Charges Copter Shot Down

By DENNIS NEELD
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP) - A Canadian peacekeeping investigator charged Monday that a ceasefire commission helicopter was shot down in flames by a heat-seeking missile while flying over Viet Cong-held territory in South Vietnam.

Maj. Gen. Duncan McAlpine sharply disputed a Viet Cong claim that the helicopter met with an accident in which nine of its passengers, including a Canadian and two American civilian pilots, were killed Saturday.

"An accident!" McAlpine snapped. "Surely, with everyone in the area knowing this was an approved flight, and with verbatim reports of the survivors, I think otherwise.

"The fact is that the helicopter... did in fact sustain a heat-seeker."

"The helicopter was on a mission in South Vietnam's northwest corner for the International Commission of Control and Supervision - ICCS. Among the dead were four commission members, three crewmen and two Viet Cong liaison officers.

A second commission helicopter was hit by "sustained ground fire" and made a forced landing near the first in what McAlpine called "desperate circumstances." Its 11 passengers and crew were not hurt.

McAlpine said the pilot of the second helicopter reported seeing a missile. He quoted the airman as saying: "I saw it go by-pow!-then it burst in a ball of flames."

McAlpine, head of Canada's military delegation with the international commission, was speaking at Saigon's airport on his return from an investigation of the incident in Quang Tri Province.

Reports that the aircraft was hit by a missile were a "distortion of the truth," the Viet Cong declared in a statement.

The bodies of seven crash victims-two American pilots and a Filipino crewman, a Canadian, an Indonesian and two Hungarian officers-were brought back to Saigon from the jungle crash site Monday.

In Washington, a White House spokesman said President Nixon views the attacks on clearly marked ICCS helicopters as "extremely serious." The State Department said the incident was a "totally callous flaunting" of the cease-fire agreement.

In a speech to the Saigon Lions Club, Ambassador Michel Gauvin, chairman of the Canadian delegaion, said that Canada had agreed to extend its original 60 days of participation in the truce observer body "with grave doubts about the usefulness of our presence."

He said this was the result of the "rather dismal record of the ICCS so far in fulfilling its responsibilities objectively and impartially, as well as our skepticism that the ICCS can or should in fact perform the symbolic political function that some would thrust upon it.

"But we are remaining in the hope that within a relatively brief period of time the parties to the conflict will move toward a political settlement that will make our presence unnecessary."

Canadian officials have stated repeatedly that the Polish and Hungarian delegations have refused to participate seriously in an investigation of truce violations except those demanded by the Communist side.

In neighboring Cambodia, it was reported that the United States has doubled its air shipments of military equipment since the beginning of the Communist offensive early in February.

TO DISCUSS ICC PLANE DOWNINGS-High officials of the International Commission of Control board a South Vietnamese boat at Quang Tri for the northern bank of the Thach Han River, where they are to meet with Viet Cong officials about Saturday's downing of two ICC helicopters. There were no survivors in one helicopter believed to be carrying nine or ten passengers. A Viet Cong official said the second helicopter was "down, but safe." (AP)

"Although there has been a slight acceleration of deliveries, there has been no increase that could remotely be called an airlift," said a U.S. Embassy spokesman.

Khmer Rouge insurgents and their North Vietnamese and Viet Cong allies have cut nearly all highways to the capital and fuel is running short. Food and other essentials, however, are said to be adequate.

Communist forces along the Mekong River ambushed a supply convoy at the weekend but five vessels got through to Phnom Penh to ease the food and fuel situation. Two ships were set ablaze, a dozen others turned back to South Vietnam.

Capt. C.S. Lo, master of the 7,000-ton Lucky Star, reported the convoy sailed up river under an umbrella of U.S. war planes which strafed the river banks a quarter of a mile ahead.

Cambodia's Prince Norodom Sihanouk, who heads a government in exile in Peking, claimed in a message read over Hanoi radio that he narrowly escaped being killed by U.S. B52 bombers during a secret visit last month to rebel-held areas of his country.

Sihanouk, who was ousted in 1970, claimed many air strikes were made about a mile from where he was sheltering.

He said the raids were far from the battlefront and from the Ho Chi Minh trail and other Communist supply routes.

"I have seen with my own eyes the U.S. Air Force kill our civilians," he charged. "U.S. warplanes repeatedly pounded our mountains, forests, rivers, canals, rice paddies and roads.

"In reality, this is an attempt to destroy our people."

In the central highlands of South Vietnam, Communist-led forces drove a company of government militiamen from their position 10 miles southwest of Kontum, the Saigon command announced.

Russo Weeps In 'Papers' Trial

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Anthony J. Russo wept on the witness stand at the Pentagon papers trial Monday as he told jurors of the sufferings of a North Vietnamese villager he encountered while interviewing captured prisoners for a research study.

Russo, calling the prisoner "the strongest man I ever met," dropped his head and wiped his eyes as he told the story to jurors. Then, laughing through his tears, he said.

"See, even now when I talk about it, it comes back to me."

The 36-year-old defendant, on trial with Daniel Ellsberg, told the story to illustrate the experiences which transformed him from an "establishment" researcher on government projects to a vehement antiwar activist.

He admitted to jurors that he helped Ellsberg copy the Pentagon papers study of the Vietnam war in 1969, but said he had never seen the documents before copying them, and indicated he did not know their contents.

The balding, bespectacled Russo told of his Vietnam experiences as a researcher for the Rand Corp. think tank " it was at Rand that Ellsberg and Russo met.

Assigned to interview captured prisoners, defectors and refugees for a study of Viet Cong motivation and morale, Russo said he encountered the prisoner by accident.

"I don't remember the man's name," he said. "I remember his hand his manner. He was the strongest man I ever met. I mean he overshadows personally. It had quite an effect on me."

The man, he said, had been a soldier since 1946 and participated in 1969. His job with the North Vietnamese had been as an "education cadre," teaching young people theater and songs to sing.

"He was very committed and very sincere. We talked for two whole days... It was from him that I learned first what the people in the villages really thought. People in the villages are the people whose voices are never heard.

"He said he would never give up, no matter how much he was tortured - and he had been tortured.

"... I knew that he was telling me the truth because on the second day of the interview he recited poetry to me. He sang a song to me. He said this was a song he sang whenever he felt down.

"We had good rapport. We were friends. It was a very moving experience."

Then, Russo covered his eyes and cried.

He told jurors of his disillusionment with the results of his work in Vietnam. He said he submitted one report to the Air Force which he felt was ignored. It was a report on the use of "antipersonnel weapons" which frequently killed civilians.

"I was kind of secretly hoping that the Air Force, when they saw how bad these things were, would stop using them. But I think I was very naive." He said the use of those weapons subsequently increased.

SPILLWAY OPENS-Youngsters watch from a seawall as a crane begins pulling teeth on the Bonnet Carre Spillway near New Orleans to divert part of the rising Mississippi River into Lake Ponchartrain to ease the threat of flooding in the Crescent City. (AP)

Miss. River Rising

By BILL CRIDER
Associated Press Writer

NEW ORLEANS (AP) - Army flood control experts said Monday one of the century's great Mississippi River floods was still safely squeezed within the levees-but they're girding for higher water.

"I can't tell you now whether we're peaking out or whether we're going to get a worse situation before we're through," said Maj. Gen. Charles C. Noble, president of the Mississippi River Commission.

Much depends on the runoff from thawing snows and spring rains in the river's 1.24 million-square-mile watershed area, especially along the Ohio, he said.

He estimated that backwater from the river's choked tributaries has temporarily forced some 6,000 families from their homes-mainly in sections near St. Louis, Mo., and in Mississippi.

Noble ordered the opening of all 350 panels of the Bonnet Carre Spillway dam Sunday to ease the pressure on levees protecting New Orleans.

When the spillway is completely opened Tuesday nearly a sixth of the river's flow, measured at 1.6 million cubic feet a second at Vicksburg, Miss., will be diverted. It will stream through a 5.7-mile through a low land into salty Lake Pontchartrain, which connects to the Gulf of Mexico.

The order opening the dam for the first time since 1950 came after the River Forecasting Center said the water was going to 20.2 on the New Orleans gauge-within four feet of the levee top.

Opening the spillway was expected to drop the level back to 17.5 at New Orleans by Wednesday. But the latest computer readouts at the forecasting center predicted 18.6 here by April 16, even with the spillway open.

Two emergency points were reported along the 2,200 miles of levees: Montz, La., and Louisiana's Angola prison.

Angola prison farm lies inside a big bend of the Mississippi. Sand boils and seepage indicated the strain as the river leaned on the levees. Authorities stood ready to move 2,000 convicts to an Odd Army base near Alexandria, La., if conditions get worse.

At Montz, big draglines were raising a new 3,200-foot main levee at a river bend 33 miles upstream from New Orleans. The new levee backs up one being undermined by streng currents.

Gen. Noble said a rough estimate of backwater damage in seven states would exceed $150 million but stated it was nearly all in unprotected flood plain areas.

Arabs Stage Cyprus Raid

By ALEX EFTY
Associated Press Writer

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) - Two groups of Arab guerrillas bombed an apartment building Monday where the Israeli ambassador lived, then shot up an Israeli airliner parked at the airport.

About 12 hour later Israeli commandos, apparently landing from helicopters, raided Palestinian guerrilla installations in and near Beirut and Sidon, Lebanon. Dozens of Palestinian Arab guerrillas were reported killed or wounded in the Lebanon raids.

The Israeli military command did not say whether the raids were retaliatory, but Israel in the past has struck swiftly at Palestinian guerrilla camps in Lebanon in response to terrorist acts.

At Nicosia the Arabs fought gunbattles with Cypriot police at the airport.

The government said one of the attackers, wounded in the head, died in a hospital. Three other Arabs and a Cypriot policeman were wounded.

No one was hurt in the bomb blast at the three story apartment building.

The police said they found a note indicating that the Arabs intended to hijack an airplane.

It was the fourth attack on Israeli diplomats abroad since September and the first major Arab-Israeli encounter on Cyprus, a Mediterranean island with deep troubles of its own.

Security was tight here after a weekend of bombings carried out by members of Gen. George Grivas' underground army which seeks to force union of Cyprus with Greece. The first fatal casualty of Grivas' four-month campaign came during a gun battle Monday morning in the village of Koutrafas.

Police gave this account of the Arab guerrillas' attacks:

A group of Arabs drew up in a car in front of the Israeli residence, a three-story apartment house. One ran up to the front door and left a bag of explosives there. He then rushed back to the car, but Cypriot security guards opened fire as the car started away and three of the Arabs were seized.

The bomb went off, tearing open the front of the building and blasting out the rear wall on the ground floor, so that it looked like a tunnel.

The Israeli ambassador, Rahamin Timor, said later he had left his residence on the third floor for his office just before the blast.

Timor reported in a telephone interview with the Israeli radio that the embassy was aware of the possibility of a terrorist attack.

He went on: "I heard a powerful explosion and a second one immediately afterward.

"Just as I was about to enter the embassy building my staff told me they saw smoke coming from my house. I ran home . . . and saw the first floor was almost completely destroyed.

"Just then they were carrying away the wounded policeman."

Shortly after the explosion, Arabs traveling in two cars crashed through the gates of the airport. One car reached the El Al Viscount which was waiting to take on passengers for Tel Aviv in Israel. Police forced the other car aside and it crashed into another gate.

The men in the first car opened fire on the plane and Cypriot police and the Israeli security men started shooting in return.

Witnesses said the Israeli first fired a revolver, then ran into the aircraft and emerged with a submachine gun. He opened fire and hit all three Arabs as they scrambled out of the car which by this time had crashed into a mobile generator near the tail of the plane.

Occupants of the second car jumped out and one of them knocked out a policeman by hitting him on the head with a hand grenade.

After a brief gun battle two Arabs were captured. Unconfirmed reports said a third man in the second car managed to escape.

Israelis Retaliate In Lebanon

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Israeli raiders struck Arab guerrilla bases in Beirut and Sidon, Lebanon, Monday night hours after Arab commando raids on Israeli targets in Nicosia, Cyprus, the military command in Tel Aviv announced.

A communique said the Israeli forces withdrew after "mission accomplished," with four of their number wounded. It was the first Israeli raid into Lebanon since Feb. 21.

Police in Beirut, the Lebanese capital, said the Israelis struck a number of Palestinian offices and killed or wounded 40 guerrillas.

Among the Arabs reported dead were Mohammed Yussef Najjar, No. 2 man in the major Palestinian guerrilla group Al Fatah, and Kamal Adwan, a leader of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

First reports in Beirut said five civilians also were killed and 10 Lebanese security police were wounded.

The Israelis landed by helicopter at Ouzai, three miles south of Beirut, took over civilian cars and went to the Sabra Palestine refugee camp near the airport, Lebanese police said.

Other Israelis headed for the center of the city to an area near the Hotel Bristol, where one of the slain guerrilla leaders lived.

The Israelis were dressed in civilian clothes, police said. Lebanese security police and guerrilla forces engaged one group.

The attack occurred 12 hours after Arab guerrillas bombed the Israeli ambassador's residence in Nicosia and attacked an Israeli airliner there.

Israeli forces had not struck at the Lebanese capital since December 1968, when airborne commandos hit Beirut airport and blew up Arab civilian airliners.

The Israeli military command said Monday night's raids were on "terrorist" bases inside the two Lebanese cities. It gave no other details.

The military communique, issued early Tuesday, said Israeli forces had returned to their bases.

The military command refused to say immediately whether the deep penetration raids were a direct reprisal for the attacks in Cyprus, but the assaults were in line with Israeli's "strike hard" policy against the guerrillas.

The Israelis announced last October, after 11 Israeli sportsmen were murdered by Arab terrorists at the Munich Olympic Games, that they would hit the guerrillas wherever they could be reached, without waiting for provocation.

Other reports in Beirut said Israeli gunboats landed on beaches near the city and unloaded Mercedes cars were unloaded to be used in the raids.

The Israelis fired tracer bullets from the gunboats toward the refugee camp, which is located near the airport within sight of the sea, the reports said.

Indians Take Grievances To Washington

By PEGGY SIMPSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—Indian activist Russell Means was accused at a congressional hearing Monday of leading a "group of goons" during the seizure of historic Wounded Knee.

Means ignored the personal comments by Rep. James A. Haley, D-Fla., a member of the House Indian Affairs subcommittee that is holding hearings on Wounded Knee and the seizure of the Bureau of Affairs last year.

Haley said the American Indian Movement demonstrators led by Means were "a group of goons or gallery rats, if you want to call them that."

Means was asked by Haley: "How do you figure you have a protest right . . . to go out and break the law? If you and your bunch of hoodlums go out and destroy property how are you going to contribute those people to it?"

Means' followers at Wounded Knee were still holding out in their weapons Monday, ignoring government appeals to surrender them.

The Indians say they will not lay down their arms until progress is made in negotiations on Indian treaties.

The government, however, says there will be no further talks until the arms are turned over to marshals.

Before appearing at the hearing, Means held a news conference where he said the Indians have agreed to stack arms if the White House will meet with representatives. He said he had received no immediate response from the White House.

At Wounded Knee, Kent Frizzell, U.S. assistant attorney general, said there would be no talks until the girls on account of a message he said after the village battles night. Frizzell said the Indians sent word they wanted a meeting at the square chapel at Wounded Knee.

Frizzell said he regretted the government's audio surveillance or rejection of plans scheduled and Saturday night.

At the Capitol, the House Indian affairs subcommittee opened three days of hearings on the Indian problems.

The first witness was Toby Eagle Bull, a longtime Oglala Sioux tribal officer who spoke for the tribe rulers.

Meat Price Concern Continues

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Consumers who took part in the nationwide boycott of beef, lamb and pork started back to the meat counter yesterday, but supermarket spokesmen said it was too early to tell whether sales would return to normal.

An Associated Press spot check showed mixed reaction yesterday - the first shopping day in most areas after the end of the week-long boycott and the deadline for posting price ceilings imposed by President Nixon on most meat items.

A spokesman for Grand Union said he had talked to personnel from several of the chain's 43 outlets in the Washington, D.C. area and commented: "We've gotten a Monday like we can't remember. Things are jumping."

He said, however, that he would not know until later in the week just how sales would compare to preboycott weeks. The spokesman said price ceilings had been posted throughout the chain which announced last week that it would hold meat prices at least 10 cents per pound below the ceiling for the rest of April.

The meat manager of an Acme Markets, Inc., in Philadelphia said, "We're selling a little less than on an average Monday for us."

He said meat sales last week were down almost 25 per cent from the normal total of $29,000 and added that the store had to throw out a lot of unsold items.

Consumers were divided over whether to stock up on steak and other higher priced items. Several boycott groups, including FIT-Fight Inflation Together - called for a continuation of meatless menus every Tuesday and Thursday.

One woman at a Miami store said she was buying meat as usual because "I'm tired of suffering for noble causes."

Another Miami housewife, Carol Oppel, said, "I intend to cut back and to continue to buy selectively and buy as little meat as possible. Once you get used to it, being without meat is not difficult."

A spokesman for the 61-store Salt Lake City, Utah district of Safeway said he didn't know yet whether the meat business was back to normal. He said, however, that the boycott didn't decrease total business, but resulted in a change in buying habits. Meat sales were down about 15 per cent last week, he said, and sales of items like fish and TV dinners were up 15 per cent.

Columbus housewives apparently were buying chicken as a substitute for red meat. One supermarket manager said there was a "chicken crisis" and announced he was limiting customers to two chickens each; another store owner said poultry was sold only to people who bought other meat items too.

There was some concern about a possible red meat shortage because of lower livestock supplies at market last week. Farmers withheld cattle and hogs from the stockyards, protesting declining prices.

Frank Vaia, vice president of Nation Wide Beef Inc. of Chicago, said there was presently a 10 per cent decline in the availability of livestock products and said blizzards may cripple the transportation of dressed beef from Western and Southwestern areas.

The Berks Packing Co. in Reading, Pa., shut down Monday because of a shortage of meat for processing. A company spokesman said the firm, which mostly handles pork, would reopen Tuesday.

A retail meat dealer in Reading said, "The farmers held back last week and we are feeling it this week." Meat prices generally remained stable during boycott week, but there were scattered cuts and some new reductions were announced Monday. The Giant Eagle Supermarket chain, with 37 stores in western Pennsylvania and one in Ohio, said prices in every category of fresh meat would be reduced as much as 30 cents per pound below the ceiling starting on Tuesday. Two other chains in the area announced similar moves last week.

Barbara Kaiser, a native of Cleveland now living in West Germany, is on vacation in Florida and was piling her cart with steaks at a Miami area store on Monday. "By comparison with the prices in Germany, meat here is cheap," she said. "My four children and I were longing to have a good steak when we arrived in the States last week. That is all we are eating until we go home again."

Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz said he wasn't surprised that Patrick Gorman, secretary-treasurer of the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen's union, has asked President Nixon to fire him. Butz said Gorman apparently was disturbed by his Butz' "laying it on the table" about farmers getting only 43 cents of the consumer food dollar while middlemen take the rest.

Picasso's Family Discusses Funeral

By MICHAEL GOLDSMITH
Associated Press Writer

MOUGINS, France (AP) - Icy rain fell on the Riviera home of Pablo Picasso all day yesterday as his family met in seclusion to discuss funeral arrangements for the century's most influential artist.

His son Paulo, apppearing at the gate of the villa to let in members of the family, told newsmen nothing had been decided.

"There is nothing definite yet," said Paulo. "You know, the death of my father causes problems."

He refused to speak at length with newsmen at the closely guarded gate. But authoritative sources confirmed earlier reports filtering out of the villa that the family wanted a private funeral, perhaps away from the Cannes area.

Paulo, son of Picasso's first wife Olga, refused to explain what he meant by problems surrounding Picasso's death.

The painter died Sunday at age 91 from a heart attack and fluid in the lungs. His body lay in a bedroom on his hilltop home surrounded by white flowers.

Armand Antoby, Picasso's business manager and an attorney, indicated to newsmen that Picasso had left no will directing the disposal of thousands of paintings, worth perhaps millions of dollars, stored in various rooms in the villa.

Whether this was one of the problems alluded to by Paulo Picasso was not clear.

Son Paulo, 52, arrived at the villa late Sunday. He joined the painter's widow Jacqueline, 47, and her daughter Catherine by a previous marriage.

Picasso's three illigitimate children, known to have been on uneasy terms with Jacqueline, did not come to Mougins. They were his daughter Maya, born of his liaison with Marie Therese Walter, and a son, Claude, and a second daughter, Paloma, born of his liaison with French artist Francoise Gillot.

Several years ago, Claude and Paloma lost a French court case in which they tried to force Picasso to legitimize them. They are expected to launch new proceedings to claim a share of the painter's immense inheritance, including millions of dollars worth of paintings.

Patients Get Atomic Pacemakers

Associated Press Writer

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) - Doctors implanted the first American-made nuclear-powered pacemakers in the hearts of volunteer patients yesterday. The atomic devices are expected to last five times longer than battery-powered models.

Seven patients received the plutonium units, about the size of a cigarette lighter, early in the day. Eight similar operations are planned this week.

The operations were the first approved by the Atomic Energy Commission although a French model has been implanted in about 20 patients in the United States and many more in Europe.

A pacemaker modifies irregular heart beats by sending out electric signals. It can keep the heart going at the normal rate of 72 beats per minute.

Among the patients receiving atomic pacemakers Monday was Max Spieler, a 60-year-old meat inspector for the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Given a local anaesthetic, he was conscious during the hour-long operation and met with reporters minutes after leaving the operating room.

"I feel very good, all charged up," he said.

Spieler, from Nutley, N.J., is the president of the Pacemakers Foundation, a group he organized to promote research in the field. He was one of the first persons to volunteer for a nuclear-powered pacemaker four years ago.

The youngest patient to undergo the operation was Roxanne Hutchinson, a 12-year-old school cheerleader from Grand Rapids, Mich., who brought her uniform to the hospital for "good luck."

She suffered her first heart attack at the age of 5 weeks and had her first pacemaker when she was 22 months old.

Monday's operations were at the Beth Israel Medical Center and nine other hospitals are expected to implant 39 nuclear pacemakers in the next few months.

Dr. Lawrence Gilbert, one of four surgeons performing the operation, said: "The amazing significance is in the fact that these people were being operated on every two years and now it may be every 20 years."

Conventional models, now used by some 60,000 Americans, are powered by electrical batteries and must be replaced after about 18 months.

Their protective capsules are believed to be strong enough to withstand direct impacts of bullets, a hospital spokesman said, and give off less radiation than a radium dial on a watch.

The nuclear model, weighing about 3 1/2 ounces and powered by plutonium 238, a radioactive isotope, is expected to last 10 years or more.

Each patient will carry home a telephone monitoring device and periodically call the hospital to have the pacemaker activity checked. The federal government is paying for the implants in the first 54 volunteers around the nation. The estimated cost is about $5,000 per pacemaker.

Black Music Fills S.U.B.

not printed. He cited the need for free access, using as examples such magazines as Down Beat and Rolling Stone as undertaking a concerted effort to destroy Black popular music.

Art Davis pointed to the multi-million dollar aspects of the music industry as being "not controlled by the innovators", saying that many innovators "die penniless", and that many radio stations "will not play the real thing". He thought that craft unionization should be formed on the basis of "awakening of musicians". He also cited his recent court case with the New York Philharmonic as an example of Racism within the music establishment.

Sunny Murray talked about the process whereby the people "feed the monster", referring to the music business as a whole. He also stated that "before the music was dying . . . it now needs a shot in the arm." He rejected the ranking of Black percussionists by merits as "games" and the degree of work involved as "unpaid overtime", taking instead the music's relationship to the Black person.

Dr. Ortez cited the need for the professionalization and ownership of Black music, left up to the musicians themselves. He pointed to the resurgence of interest in jazz, and hoped that this time it would not be easy to manipulate.

A member of the Art Ensemble here at UMass, Clayton Riley spoke of the history and interpretation of Black music by whites. He stressed the need for Black literature on this subject. He also asked the participants to remember that there was a unique quality to Black music in that it has been "our (the black people's) literature". He cited this quality as one of the intrinsic strengths of the Afro-American tradition as opposed to the European tradition of knowledge through the printed page.

Workshop topics for the afternoon included "Black Music and the Latin Carribean Influence" and "Folk, Gospel, Blues, Black Music Continuum and Community Concepts".

The Black Musicians' Conference is being presented under the auspices of the Institute for Pan—American Studies.

Harvard Objects To 'Indian College'

BOSTON (AP)—Harvard College, which ran an "Indian College," for 40 years in the 1600's has objected to legislation which would require establishment of at least 25 American Indian fellowships.

The bill's sponsor, Rep. Charles F. Flaherty Jr., D-Cambridge, told a legislative committee Monday the bill "corrects a major injustice perpetrated on Indians by that noble institution in the city of Cambridge."

He also added his measure "gives Harvard a little tickle in the process."

Flaherty's bill, filed for Russel Barsh of Cambridge, would require the university to establish the post of Chancellor of Indian Studies and to establish at least 25 fellowships, providing tuition, board and room expenses, to American Indians.

The measure notes that Harvard received a 400-pound grant from the Commissioners of the United Colonies of New England in 1653 to build a college for Indian scholars. It says Harvard abandoned the college in 1693 on the condition that Indians subsequently get "rent free" studies at Harvard.

A university spokesman told the Education Committee Monday it regards the bill as "unconstitutional".

Atty. Roger A. Moore said the measure sought to intrude on the province of the state's courts to determine whether a "charitable trust" was being properly administered.

Moore said Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn is now studying the situation and "will take whatever action he deems appropriate."

And he said the university administration has taken no position on the substantive issue-whether Harvard should establish an Indian fellowship program.

Members of the committee were skeptical about legislation that would force a private university to adopt a program, but Flaherty's bill noted the Massachusetts Constitution authorizes the legislature to "alter the government of Harvard University, in the best interest and advancement of the University and of letters."

Moore submitted to the committee a legal memorandum stating that the issue was one of a charitable trust and said "the question of determining what a group of Englishmen meant in 1653 is extremely difficult."

Flaherty's office said Barsh was an Indian student at Harvard. Barsh did not appear at the hearing.

The measure picked up some support from another legislator, Rep. James E. Smith, D-Lynn.

"Harvard is so often in the forefront of things," said Smith. "Let's put them in the forefront here."

Student Athletic Fee

determined by the University and recommended by the Athletic council.

This second group of athletic programs would move towards a "phase out" or at least a reduction of their need for Barber money as their program becomes more "attractive to the prospective student-athletes."

Director of the Department of Athletics, Frank McInerney was hopeful that when these programs reached such a level, "athletes will be more attracted..and when this happens, less scholarship money will be needed."

The third priority for scholarship aid would go to those sports "that have had support and are in the 'phase out' stage of their development."

Other business included a limited report on the National Invitational Tournament (NIT) by Assistant Athletic Director, Bob O'Connel. It was concise due to the fact that he had not as yet received a financial report from the NIT committee. The general feeling, he said, was that UMass (with 4 of the tourney's 66 shares) would earn $6-7,000.

Students To Protest Tuition Hikes In Boston

Several busloads of students from North Adams State and Boston State as well as representatives from all the member schools in the state system of higher education are expected to converge on the State House in Boston this morning as several tuition related bills come up for a hearing at 10:30.

The expected onslaught of students is being brought on, according to Rick Hardy, Chairman of the University and State Communications Committee (USCC), by several bills which, if eventually enacted into law, could result in tuition increases up to $1,000.

The substance of these bills is this: they would set tuition rates for public institutions as a function of the student's ability to pay. Hardy says that if these are eventually passed tuition rates could, for the average UMass student, go as high as the $1,000 range.

Hardy, as spokesman for USCC will speak in opposition to these bills today.

Other bills which are scheduled to be discussed at the hearing include one which would place a freeze on all tuitions at public institutions and one which would increase student financial aid.

Hardy says the USCC supports these bills.

The hearing is scheduled for 10:30 a.m., somewhere in the State House. Hardy expects it to be in Gardner Auditorium, but that is not definite.

Indians: 'We Are Not Playing Here'

"We have sat and watched them pass here to get gold out and have said nothing. My friends, when I went to Washington I went into your money-house and I had some young men with me, but none of them took any money out of that house while I was with them. At the same time, when your Great Father's people come into my country, they go into my money-house (the Black Hills) and take money out."

--Mawatani Hanska (Long Mandan)

WOUNDED KNEE, S.D. (LNS)--"We smoked the sacred pipe with our white brothers in the past," said Wallace Black Elk after the signing of the agreement between the U.S. government and the Indians at Wounded Knee, and the treaties were broken. This is real. We are not playing here. Our life is at stake. It concerns our children and children unborn."

The Indians (Oglala Sioux from the Pine Ridge Reservation plus American Indian Movement (AIM) activists and other Indians from all over the country) had held the tiny town for 37 days. They had held it against a force of FBI agents, Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) police, federal marshalls, vigilantes and the "goon squad" of corrupt tribal chairman Richard Wilson. The federal force was armed with M-16s and other automatic weapons as well as teargas and armored personnel carriers. Over 100,000 rounds of bullets were fired into Wounded Knee. "People would wake up with bullets lying under their beds," said an observer in Rapid City.

So after days of negotiations with the Justice Department officials, an agreement of six points was reached. They are:

1. Traditional chiefs of the Teton Sioux from all Sioux reservations will meet the third week of May with the White House, to set up a Presidential Treaty Commission to examine the 1868 Sioux Treaty. Russell Means of AIM will attend a preliminary meeting on April 7, and will telephone the Indians occupying Wounded Knee from Washington. If the negotiations are going well, the people at Wounded Knee will begin to lay down their arms.

2. Occupants of Wounded Knee against whom federal warrants are pending will submit to arrest and be taken to Rapid City. They will be released but eventaully will have to put up bail. They will be searched for "snipers, unlawful weapons, and other dangerous devices." Federal marshalls and FBI agents will be stationed on the reservation until the situation is "stable". No person involved in lawful political acitivity in connection with the reservation will be interfered with.

3. The government agrees to mount an intensive investigation into violations of Federal criminal laws throughout the reservation--including abuses by any governing authority, such as the tribal government or the local BIA.

4. The government agrees to audit tribal funds, federal funds and police financing on the Pine Ridge Reservation. The results will be made public.

5. The Department of Justice is to institute civil rights proceedings to protect the personal property and the civil, political and legal rights of individual Oglala Sioux against unlawful abuses by the tribal governing authority. This is to be done according to the Indian Bill of Rights in the 1868 Treaty. The Justice Department will seek to apply restraint against any actions of the tribal council, tribal court or the BIA police which are in violation of the rights of individual tribal members.

6. The above agreement will serve as the basis for Wounded Knee occupants to lay down "unlawful" arms, for the evacuation of the bunkers and the removal of roadblocks.

Russell Means described the agreement as "a small victory, a preliminary victory, in our war with the United States over our treaty rights." The government has agreed to discuss the 1868 treaty, in which Sioux were promised much of the land of North and South Dakota and Wyoming unless 3/4 of the adult, Indian male population agreed to sell it. But by 1876 the Indians had already been swindled out of most of the land, including their sacred Black Hills, where gold had just been discovered.

In the treaty the government also had agreed to respect the tribal governing structure. However, by the 1920's and '30's the U.S. government had instituted its own system for the election of tribal governmental offices.

The Indians consider it a victory that the present agreement was negotiated directly between the U.S. government, traditional tribal leaders and AIM. They have succeeded in bypassing the authority of Richard Wilson, the tribal chairman controlled by the local BIA office.

The Indians' occupation of Wounded Knee served to bring the condition of Indians into national focus. The Harris poll--hardly a radical barometer--reported that 76% of the people polled felt that Indians have not been well treated, 59% said that the U.S. government had not lived up to its treaties with the Indians, and 59% believed that Indians have not been given a chance to determine their own future through self-government.

Indians inside bunker they built in Wounded Knee. (LNS)

Pernaps it is public and world opinion that forced Nixon to grant as much as he had to the Indians, and fear of what would happen if he let the feds loose with their guns in Wounded Knee. At the beginnig of the takeover, a federal official was quoted as saying "I'm not going to have another Kent State' I'm not going to give them another Wounded Knee. That's the name of the game."

There is still much to be settled over the peace agreement. Already the government has claimed that all arms are to be surrendered. On the other hand, the Indians claim that they should only have to surrender illegal weapons such as automatic weapons.

Nixon has promised that a commission would investigate the broken treaties after the Indians' November occupation of the BIA offices in Washington. The commission never materialized.

Yet some things have been gained. "They didn't recognize us as human beings--they have to now," said Grace Black Elk. "We also want to be recognized as a nation. We don't want to constantly be placed in reservations--I call them concentration campus--where they want to keep us. I don't want to be trained to stay in a certain place--like you train a dog or something. It's about time we stood up and were recognized as human beings."

Two Indians in basement of church in Wounded Knee where the kitchen is. A quote found on the wall from Red Cloud is, "They made us many promises, more than I can remember, but they never kept but one—they promised to take our land and they took it. (LNS)

Dominican Repression Increases

SANTO DOMINGO, D.R. (LNS)—Two months ago in early February, a guerrilla force was reported to have landed on the southern coast of the Dominican Republic. Two weeks later the government of Joaquin Balaguer claimed to have killed the alleged leader of the guerrillas, ex-colonel Francisco-Alberto Caamano Deno. Caamano had also led the Constitutionalist Revolution of 1965.

Two journalists were allowed to take pictures of the corpse to give credibility to the claim. Eventually, a blurred photo of a group of men standing around what appears to be the body of a man appeared in papers around the world. Most of the international press at that point considered the "abortive invasion" a closed case.

However, there now appears evidence that this is not the case. Following the invasion, thousands of troops were sent into the area where the guerrillas were supposed to be. By the end of February the government claimed to have encircled the guerrillas close to the point where they had landed. When the guerrillas refused to surrender, the area was systematically bombed for two days. Government troops which then honeycombed the area could not find a trace of the invasion force.

The Armed Forces now admit that the guerrillas had outmaneuvered them and are progressing north towards the heart of the country and into the central mountain range. Two thousand troops, helicopters (five of which have already been crippled by guerrilla fire) and a Special Operations unit of the National Police subsequently moved their center of operations to the district of Bonao. The possible area of guerrilla activity now covers 500 square kilometers.

The credibility of the Armed Forces was further undermined when enough evidence was provided from different sources to question the assertion that Caamano had been killed in battle. The government refused to turn the corpse over to Caamano's family despite the fact that Caamano's father is a high-ranking officer in the Dominican Armed Forces.

Meanwhile the wife of a taxi-driver who bore a striking resemblance to Caamano reported that her husband had disappeared. She claimed that it was his corpse which was shown to the journalists, not Caamano's. Finally a member of the guerrilla band, Peno Jaquez, who had been sent shortly after the landing to Santo Domingo on a mission, was secretly interviewed by a major Dominical newspaper, Ultima Hora.

He denied Caamano was dead and challenged the government to publicly present the corpse for identification. The regime refused to comply.

Balaguer responded by accusing Pena Jaquez of engineering a plot to murder him. At the same time, the National Police asserted that Pena Jaquez was one of their undercover agents and that he had made the statements under pressure from the "Communists."

This is a copy of the photo that appeared in the papers around the world announcing the "death" of the alleged leader of a guerrilla force in the Dominican Republic, ex-colonel Francisco-Alberto Caamano Deno. The "fact" of his death was refuted as soon as it was reported, but most of the international press still considered it as fact. Increased Guerrilla Action has furthered popular disbelief in Official reports concerning Caamano's death.

The confusion and contradictions within the ranks of the Balaguer regime became even more glaring when another person they had identified as a slain guerrilla gave a press conference in Havana where he is studying. The Army later admitted to the error.

These successive blunders not only spread popular disbelief of official reports but have also led most observers to question the efficiency of Dominican counter-insurgency forces. This is a surprising situation considering the millions in U.S. aid which have gone into training and supplying Balaguer's Green Berets and National Police.

If Balaguer wasn't able to wipe out the guerrilla force he did take advantage of the circumstances to decree special security measures, close down the university and secondary schools, and intensify the repression against all political opposition forces.

Repression is a fact of life in the Dominican Republic. Its history consists of a succession of dictatorships and U.S. interventions. Since his 1966 election to the presidency, Balaguer has worked hard to develop and refine the repressive tactics of his former mentor, dictator Rafael Trujillo.

Balaguer was "elected" in 1966, with the help of 40,000 U.S. troops, sent by President Johnson. In 1965, Juan Bosch and his Dominican Revolutionary Party (PRD) was elected on the promise that he would institute major economic reforms. His election provoked a right-wing coup, led by General Wessin, which many observers believed was backed by the U.S. Wessin y Wessin, which many observers believed was backed by the U.S.

In response to that coup, some of the military, led by Francisco-Alberto Caamano Deno, organized a move to restore Bosch's constitutionally elected government. When it became clear that Caamano's was leading a popular uprising, the U.S. sent 40,000 Marines to "keep the peace." After a series of further complications, they pushed forward Dr. Balaguer as a compromise president.

When it came time for Balaguer to be re-elected in 1970, he was forced to bring his U.S.-trained National Police and Green Berets into the streets to insure that things would go well. Ballot boxes were stuffed. Many voters who wished to support a boycott of the election promoted by a left coalition led by the PRD, were forced to vote. Many were paid to vote more than once.

Of course, there was violence. Even the N.Y. Times columnist observing the election noticed: "the police chiefs, who are all military officers, are more important as organizers of Mr. Balaguer's re-election campaign than the local chairmen of the President's Reformist Party. Opposition activities, such as street meetings, are violently repressed by the police."

The death rate caused by government repression is the highest in Latin America. The World Council of Peace published the following statistics showing the death rate either by "disappearance" or outright assassination by the right-wing terrorist groups like "La Banda" and "Los Incontrolables."

*1966: one death of "disappearance" every 2 days and 6 hours.

Total Repudiation

Although the Watergate investigations are far from complete, news sources have leaked enough information to give an outline of who and what was involved.

The investigations may not uncover all the facts, and the whole truth may never be revealed, but the evidence and information which has been reported points to a peculiar atmosphere at the White House.

Although the role of President Nixon has not been uncovered, this aspect of the Watergate scandal is anticlimactic at this point.

As more information is revealed the nature of White House Staff involvement grows. It is beyond the point of innocence. The Nixon administration will be written up in the history books with the likes of Grant and Harding.

It seems fitting therefore that the actions of the Nixon appointees should succumb to the same fate of the Grant and Harding administrations; total repudiation by the American public.

He's Our Man

Collegian supersleuth Charles Camelopard remained in Washington this week to monitor President Nixon's private lines. Suspicion that there would be much talk about the resignation of L. Patrick Gray as replacement for the late J. Edgar Hoover was confirmed by the recordings of Camelopard's ever-ready ear. The most revealing news came by way of a call between Attorney General Richard Kleindeinst and President Nixon:

Ring, Ring.

"Hello."

"Hello Dick, this is Richard, what are you up to?"

"Oh, not an awful lot, nice day for golf isn't it?"

"Yeah, but I haven't played since I worked with Ike, I just played to keep him happy, you know this generation of peace has to be a personal thing too."

"I know it, what's on your mind, Mr. President?"

"It's this FBI mess. Since I gave Gray the nudge to withdraw himself as a candidate I've been having a hell of a time deciding who to push for the job. The Senate has been giving me trouble all along. First Carswell, then Haynsworth, now Gray; the only reason he withdrew was because he wasn't going to be confirmed."

"I thought you hinted that maybe Henry Peterson or John Ingersoll from BNDD would take the job."

"Well I suppose so, but what I really need to do is to re-organize the FBI. Everyone is complaining that since Edgar died the whole thing is too partisan. We've got to find someone who cannot be linked to me like Gray was, that way no one will think the FBI is on my side. It still will be, if we get the right man."

"Who do you have in mind?"

"Well Dick that's where you come in. I want you to look around in the Justice Department and find someone for us to nominate. I've got a list of qualifications that he should fill, you take them and look around and call me back in a couple of hours."

"Yes, Mr. President."

"What are the qualifications."

"I think that we should try to keep the man as non-partisan as possible so the first requirement is that he must never have voted in any election, that way Byrd and all those bomb throwing Democrats won't be able to say our man has any allegiances. If you can find a man that's generally apathetic we'll be in business. Secondly, he shouldn't attend church because we have to make sure that he isn't pressured from the Pope or Golda Meir or the Guru or anyone. I want a man who is uninvolved. Make sure he doesn't read the papers or subscribe to Playboy, and lastly make sure he is willing to relocate."

"Why is that?"

"I've decided to move the bureau out of Washington altogether. All this talk about the proximity of the FBI to the Executive Branch is causing me to turn grey."

"Where are you going to move the Bureau to, Sir? I heard that there's some space available at the Watergate Complex."

"That place is too damn expensive. Since all that bugging mess started they've doubled the rent. They've used American politics for personal gain. I find that intolerable. But I have a better idea. Bebe Rebozo has some land in Westfall Oregon. It's a small town, the population is eight. We could build an office out there. If any of the locals ask what's going on, we'll run 'em out of town, or put them on welfare."

"Good idea, how can you explain all this to the voters though."

"Oh never mind, we can get Ziegler to make up some explanation."

"Right, of course, I'll look around in my files and call you back in a couple of hours."

"OK, goodbye Dick."

Camelopard waited the two hours and then some passing the time reading The Diet Revolution. Finally the phone rang.

"Hello, Mr. President, Dick here. We're in luck. I found just the man you wanted. His name is Harold Oninger. He's a janitor in the computer room. He doesn't vote, go to church, swear, drink, carouse, and he doesn't mind moving. He lives in a little rooming house over on N Street and can be ready to move in two hours.

"Beautiful. He's our man, we'll send him up for confirmation this week. That's really great, remind me to consider you as a possible partner for my law firm in 1976."

"Thanks Sir, there's one more surprise I have for you."

"Yeah, what."

"This guy Oninger looks like a bulldog."

"Gloriosky, ain't politics grand, see you around Dick."

Watergate

The Watergate incident, which here means the actual event and all its subsequent ramifications is one of the most complicated and potentially lethal scandals ever to be visited upon an American administration. The Nixon Administration has, from the very beginning, issued a number of brief and terse statements denying any White House involvement in the affair but has gone no further than this, to the increasing dissatisfaction of many politicians, Democratic and Republican alike.

To date the most damning finger pointed at the White House has been that of James W. McCord, one of the original Watergate defendants and a former member of the Committee for the Re-Election of the President. McCord, in the hope of getting a lighter jail sentence, has vowed to tell all and has, while testifying before a Senate committee, already implicated a number of former and present White House Staff members including former Attorney General John Mitchell, John Dean III, Nixon's legal counsel, and H.R. Haldelman, one of the President's right hand men. Since McCord has promised to provide documentation in support of his allegations and since a Senate committee will be holding televised hearings on Watergate next months, it is highly unlikely that the Administration's closed-mouth attitude will prove tenable for very much longer.

One of the most interesting aspects of the Watergate incident has been the reaction it has illicited from the American people which has not, to put it mildly, been one of outrage and indignation or even disbelief. By and large the American people have greeted Watergate with a mixture of apathy and resigned acceptance and a recent poll found that the political preferences of 71% of the voting public would remain unaffected even if it turned out that high-ranking Administration officials were involved in Watergate. Common justifications for this lack of concern were that one votes for the man and not the party, that candidates should be judged by "how they run their campaigns, what they say", and the conviction that "one rotten apple doesn't spoil the whole barrel".

Such attitudes are so appallingly naive that one is forced to conclude that something more fundamental lies at the base of Americas reaction, or lack thereof, to Watergate. The question of whether Nixon was personally involved in planning Watergate is of less importance than is commonly realized. Even if he was not, and this is far from certain, he was at the very least responsible for creating an atmosphere within his administration which encouraged such practices. It is difficult to imagine how a president who is incapable of setting a proper moral tone within his own administration could possibly to so for the entire country.

The two most obvious explanations for the public reaction to Watergate are 1) people don't simply care and 2) they are so alienated from the political process already that one more example of blatent corruption leaves them unsurprised and unaffected. Regardless of which explanation one prefers, and the proper one is probably a combination of the two, it is possible to draw from them some very pessimistic conclusions concerning the future of viable democracy in the United States. If American democracy is indeed entering into the first stage of its death throes, and there is other evidence to substantiate this view, then future historians will undoubtedly single out the Vietnam war and Watergate as two primary causes and manifestations of the decline. It is for this reason that regardless of the final outcome of the Watergate incident, that outcome will be of less importance than will be the public reaction it receives.

Racist Sports Story

To The Editor:

I am writing this letter to the Collegian to express my disappointment with the crude, racist sports story "Stickers Whip Green" which appeared on the back page of the Monday, April 9th, issue.

In this story, writer Howie Bloom tries to make an analogy between the UMass lacrosse team defeating Dartmouth and a saga from the American past where the "good guys"—presumably whites defeat the savage Indians. It's bad enough that stereotyped versions of American Indians have been perpetrated by Hollywood, dime novels, etc. that a UMass sports journalist should have to resort to this poor humor. Bloom's opening paragraph was particularly disgusting: "It was real wild west stuff. The Indians invade from foreign stamping grounds, with the idea of running rough-shod over the good guys foremost in their minds. They draw first blood, of course, but after a fiercely fought battle, they succumb to the superior firepower of the good guys, and retreat back to their own reservation to regroup for their next encounter. Thank the Lord the good guys always win." (Sounds like John Wayne wrote the article).

Fortunately, the UMass 'Redmen' are now the Minutemen and the Dartmouth Indians are known as the Big Green—but changing nicknames or mascot names to avoid offending ethnic or minority groups is not nearly enough to peel away the stigma of racist thought.

For weeks now, the Ameriaan Indian Movement has been challenging federal authority by militantly holding the area of Wounded Knee, South Dakota. Hopefully, Washington will ultimately listen and negotiate fairly, and maybe even make good on some of the hundreds of broken treaties and promises that have been dealt the American Indian enroute to their systematic murder, genocide, and cultural deprivation that native Americans have had to experience throughout American History's imperialism.

Unfortunately, America only seems to respond to the plight of the oppressed when violence is concerned, and the representatives of the various tribes at Wounded Knee may have to use their loaded weapons to achieve their objectives. Howard Bloom's pen was a loaded weapon when he wrote the beginning of his story—"Stickers Whip Green". Racist remarks, whether meant as satire, jest, or whatever only add ammunition to the lily-white conditioning of bigots who feed on stereotypes.

Dance Workshop

To The Editor:

There is a definite beauty attached to creative dancing. If you see your body as creative beauty, you can easily express it as such through dancing and acquaint yourself with the freedom that dancing gives. I am conducting a class at Southwest in Creative Dance. If you wish to come, join me in Cramden Hall on Thursdays from 3 p.m. to 5 p.m.

Ultra Bright

To The Editor:

The girl in the "Ultra Brite" ad is so beautiful. She looks at me alone with her bright eyes and smile. But she's not for me, she's for the sporting, bronzed lads who dash and splash and smile with her at the beach.

You mean to tell me that with all those wonderful girls in all the ads there's not one for me? Seems as though there's enough for every budding fellow. Will I end making it with one of those who don't make it on "Love American Style"? I must not be American if I don't field cuties like those seen there.

But what of the girls and guys that don't make the grade? Do they dream themselves to sleep with images of vanishing pimples replaced by golden, copper-toned skin? Or do they fight the cruelty of this warped society by bubbling forth with an aloofness of spirit, an ultra bright love of live more powerful than the rancid looks given by their sparkling fellows; female, male; some self- concerted, some frustrated; all watching, appraising, accepting, rejecting.

Who cares? Don't! Avoid those narrow-minded people who can't see beneath flesh.

Meal Ticket Blues

To The Editor:

The week before spring vacation I left my meal ticket home in Connecticut. After listening to an irresponsibility lecture, I was issued a two-day temporary pass, and told to produce the original ticket or buy a new one.

My second atrocity occurred when my temporary pass expired and I was still without my meal ticket. In attempting to eat, I was told that I could not, rules being rules. This same lady had seen me endlessly over the last two semesters. Explaining my predicament, I asked again if I could eat. In a triumphant, sneering tone, she refused, citing the same shitless rule. A 140-mile meal ticket- retrieving trip being out of the question, I was obliged to buy the rest of my meals.

These same ladies complain of student discourtesy, and are mystified by accusations of thievery. As long as I am treated in this crude, spiteful manner, I will have no sympathy. Hostility breeds hostility, and the next time I see a Salisbury steak plastered to the wall, I'll figure it serves 'em right.

Editorial Points

If you saw a bunch of guys in suits and ties taking pictures last week in the blue room of Worcester Dining Commons, it was Food Service honchos with some of the dudes who make that great fake chicken taking some publicity shots. One student interrupted the proceeds by giving the photographer the Hawaiian good luck sign. Even though the fake chicken was good, the dining commons deserve it for long lines at supper.

House Bill 2013

To The Editor:

House Bill 2013, a bill to require the posting of prescription drug prices, will soon appear before the State House of Representatives. The bill, sponsored by local state representative Edward McColgan and WMPIRG, represents the consumer research group's first attempt to have consumer legislation enacted.

Student energies have carried the drug price posting project from its initial, survey stage last October to the present, and are now crucial as the bill comes to the floor of the legislature. If concerned students successfully request their state representatives to support House 2013, passage of the bill may be assured.

The legislation stems from the conclusions of a survey conducted by students last October in several communities of Western Massachusetts. Students, requesting price information in area pharmacies, found that adequate prescription drug price information was not available and that prices for the same prescription drug differed as much as 400%. The price of Erythromycin, a common antibiotic, ranged from a low of $2 to a high $9.97. The survey demonstrated that because prescription drug prices are not available, consumers have not been able to shop effectively for the pharmacy that best suits their needs. And pharmacists, exempt from the pressures of free price competition, are able to charge inordinately-high prices for the products they dispense.

Every other item we purchase has a price tag that we may view prior to the sale. WMPIRG feels that this should also be true of prescription drugs. The poor, the elderly, and the chronically ill are those most effected. This legislation will help to ease their economic burden.

Passage of House 2013 hinges upon those students who are willing to inform their state representative that they support this legislation.

If you are interested, please visit or call the WMPIRG office at 233 N. Pleasant St., Amherst, 256-6434. Students working on the bill will provide you with the name, address, and telephone number of the state representative from your district. For long distance calls to state representatives, the phones in the WMPIRG office will be available. Please stop in.

She students who have worked for the passage of this bill over the past year, are asking for your support.

In Response To Walker

To The Editor:

I feel it necessary to respond to Pat Walker's criticisms (April 9) of my article (April 3) in an attempt to correct her misconceptions of Marxism and her misunderstanding of my article.

First, nowhere in my article did I claim that the Soviet government is the embodiment of the philosophy of Marx. I merely used one philosopher's defense of the Stalinist purges in particular as an example of the kind of thinking which I was attacking. I did not even claim that the Stalinist Purges were an embodiment of Marxist philosophy but what I did claim was that a defense of those purges is congruent with the radical idea that the ends justify the means.

Second, the author's claim that there is no end to the dialectic is simply wrong. Marx regarded his predictions in regard to the eventual collapse of capitalism as scientifically objective and inevitable.

Third, the term materialism does not, as the author believes signify the absoluteness of change in the Marxist system. Rather it refers to Marx's idea of the economic base and the social and political superstructure. Marx believed that the most fundamental fact about every society is its peculiar form of economic distribution. This is why Marx claimed that he turned Hegel, who believed in the primacy of ideas, upside down and hence comes the term materialist.

Marx was a brilliant thinker whose insights into history and society were extremely penetrating. Their immense value lies in their usefulness as a paradigmatic tool with which certain aspects of social and human However the point of my article was that Marx was not a God, some of his ideas have been proven false, and it makes little sense to ground one's entire view of present political reality in the framework of Marxist ideology.

Applications Available For Project 10

People wishing to move to Project 10 for next fall can obtain applications at the Project office in Pierpont House in Southwest any afternoon this week, or call the office at 5-0871 and an application will be sent through campus mail.

Project 10 is the University's five-year old "experimental college," based in Pierpont, a coed lowrise on the far corner of Southwest.

"The Project has become in the last two years one of the nationally-renowned centers for experimental undergraduate education in the country, constantly visited by groups of faculty and students from other colleges," according to Dave Hoffman, assistant director.

The novelist John Hersey, formerly Master of Pierson College at Yale University, described the Project as "infusing more intellectual life into the residential-college idea." A story in The Chronicle of Higher Education lauded the "enthusiasm and intellectual discussion" their reporter found in Pierpont. Naturally, though, the people in the Project are themselves very critical of the quality of life present in Pierpont.

Hoffman says many activities are generated from within the dormitory–a weekly newspaper; carrier-current radio station; a speakers' series bringing people like Harrad Experiment author Robert Rimmer and CBS producer Ed Fouhy; an academic corridor; a human sexuality corridor (complete with massage table); a film series; communal living options; and hopefully a dorm food service for next year. "There are also many points of controversy raised at the weekly community meeting," he said.

"The idea of "community" is itself one of the goals of the entire Project, though recently efforts to build the face-to-face reality of community rapport has focused instead on the corridor level. But many people do insist that Pierpont is one of the dorms on this campus which fosters an "open-door" friendliness," he added.

Project-10 has its own faculty, with offices in Pierpont, and functions in ways similar to an academic department, offering its own 3-credit courses ranging from Anarchism to Zen and from Beyond Corporate Capitalism to Mountaineering.

Many of the students in the Project are in the Inquiry Program, which began this year and frees the students from all core requirements. Instead, Inquiry students meet with a faculty advisor (called a tutor) to work out a "plan of study," documented in a portfolio of evaluations, which can include almost total independent study and "outreach" off-campus. (This program is designed for people with self-motivation. The Inquiry program is the University's "Nontraditional" degree program for freshmen and sophomores, and serves as an orientation towards BDIC as well as standard majors," Hoffman stated.

Hoffman believes people considering living on-campus next fall should consider Project 10 if the idea of a "small college" innovative approach to education is an exciting residential alternative. He said with questions should either visit the Project informally or telephone the office.

"The Myth Of Christ" Subject Of P-10 Discussion

An esthetic approach to the mythical meaning of the Christian "Holy Week" of Easter is the subject of tonight's Project 10 discussion series, "The Myth of Christ." The public is invited.

Speaking at 7:30 p.m. in the Project 10 Apartment at the front of Moore House (Southwest), Jim LaMacchia will seek to discuss a mythical and literary appreciation of the meaning of rebirth and resurrection with its opposite in the theological and literary approach.

LaMacchia is a Teaching Fellow of Project 10, the campus "experimental college," where he has taught courses in Norman O. Brown, Nietzsche, James Joyce and Literary Modernism. Next fall he will lead a seminar on "The Silence of God."

The Amherst

The Campus Center Hotel has, in an indirect way, lent a helping hand to the formation of the Carriage Shops in downtown Amherst.

The Carriage Shops were a motel until August when the Amherst Carriage Motor Inn closed down. The Inn closed down because of the amount of business taken away by the Campus Center. Jerald Gates, the owner of the motel, had to find an alternate use for the building so-presto, the idea for the Carriage Shops.

The whole deal was to be remodeled after the concept of an inside pedestrian's mall with fountains and the like and no roof on the buildings. But Amherst town zoning regulations wouldn't permit all the ramifications so the idea had to be revised to the present form.

That present form, near the Pub in downtown Amherst, includes several small shops such as a barber shop, a taxi service, professional offices, a law firm, and an accountant. Also there is the fountain, which was added after the shops were filled.

Two adjacent buildings have

Pastore To Argue Against Base Closings

PROVIDENCE (AP)—Congressional delegations from Rhode Island and Massachusetts plan to meet with Pentagon officials in Washington Tuesday to argue against rumored cutbacks at naval installations in southern New England.

Sen. John O. Pastore, D-R.I., toured the Quonset Point Naval Air Station and the adjacent Davisville Seabee Center in North Kingstown Monday to gain information for the case he will present to Defense Secretary Elliot Richardson.

"I come here with no answers, pledges or promises." Pastore told workers who had invited him to the facilities to discuss the status of their jobs.

Pastore, other members of the state's congressional delegation and Gov. Philip Noel met with Richardson early in February to discuss the future of the state's bases. At that time, they reported Richardson said no firm plans for base cutbacks and shutdowns had been made.

The latest meeting was arranged by Rep. Thomas O'Neill, D-Mass., the House Majority leader, because of a Pentagon move which Pastore had threatened the Newport Naval Base.

A shutdown or work cutback at Newport also would strike a blow at the Boston Naval Shipyard since the two rely on each other for naval repair work.

Pastore disclosed last week the Pentagon sent a request to Congress to "re-program" nearly $2.6 million that had been earmarked for new fleet facilities at Newport. Pastore said Sen. Mike Mansfield, D-Mont., assured him the request will be denied.

However, Pastore said the action still could signal "the beginning of the hatchet" for the Newport fleet.

Throughout his tour at the North Kingstown bases, Pastore referred several times to persistent rumors that cutbacks are in the works for Quonset Point and that the Seabee Center could be closed.

Carriage Shops

been added since the first shop, an art shop, opened in October and more new shops are on the way.

The idea of taking an unprofitable motel or hotel and turning it into shops of some kind is not unique to Amherst.

In San Francisco there are a couple of places, the Cannery and The Chocolate Factory, which are identical to the Carriage Shop concept but on a much larger scale.

So, after seven not so successful years as the Amherst Carriage Motor Inn, the Amherst Carriage Shops continue, during their first year, to grow with more plans for expansion in the future. If they, and their counterparts in San Francisco can make it big, it could be the start of a trend.

Third World Cultural Series

Opera Excerpts Offered

The New York Bass Violin Choir will appear in concert Thursday evening. As part of the UMass Fine Arts Council Third World Cultural Series, 10 black jazz personalities will offer excerpts from the jazz-folk opera "The Depot" by the Choir's director, Bill Lee, on the stage of Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m.

Joining in the performance will be seven New York jazz bass players--Richard Davis, Ron Carter, Milt Hinton, Lisle Atkinson, Sam Jones, Michael Fleming, and Bill Lee--as well as soprano A. Grace Lee Mims, Sonny Brown on drums, and Consuela Lee Moorhead on piano.

What the New York Bass Violin Choir is, was summed up one of its members, Richard Davis, when he said, "Everything that we play has a reason. Bill Lee has done a lot with new concepts and has brought a lot of recognition to the string bass. He founded the New York Bass Violin Choir, which really takes the place of an entire orchestra. This approach is a new surge, a new frontier of the bass."

The ensemble has met with wide critical acclaim for its performances at the Newport Jazz Festibal, and other leading sites.

Tickets for the performance at UMass are at $1 for UMass undergraduates and $1.50 for others, and may be purchased through the Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall in Amherst. Remaining tickets will be available at the door. This event is being presented in conjunction with the University's Third Alliance.

WFCR To Host Guests During Fund Drive

Robert Francis, Mrs. Edward R. Murrow and some other interesting friends of public radio station WFCR will drop in next week to help out with the April Earfun fund-raising campaign.

Today at the same time, Glenda Heneree, producer of the children's program Cat's Cradle, will appear with children from the program. Mrs. Janet Murrow of South Hadley, widow of Edward R. Murrow, will appear at the 9 a.m. time slot tomorrow with some personal recollections of great events in broadcast history.

Thursday at the same time, by way of contrast, the subject will be pop music, featuring members of the local group Clean Living. At each broadcast, listerners will be urged to call in pledges for the April Earfun campaign.

The drive will run for the month of April and will include talk shows, special events and a direct mail appeal, all in an effort to raise approximately $60,000. This is what is needed this year to maintain the WFCR operating schedule at its present high quality.

ACTION Receives Federal Funds

UMass has received a $41,956 grant from ACTION, a citizens volunteer service corps, to continue its University Year for ACTION (UYA) program. With more than 100 volunteers, the UMass program is the largest in the country.

UYA is part of ACTION, established July 1, 1971 to administer federal volunteer programs at home and overseas.

The grant will enable students at Amherst to continue their work full time for one year in anti-poverty projects while earning academic credit and a modest living allowance from ACTION.

The University has been involved in the UYA program since its inception in July 1971, being one of the first 10 schools to participate. This is the fourth grant received from ACTION.

UYA Program Director Dr. Ruth W. Burgin said that she thought an important factor in the decision to renew the grant was the effectiveness of the program's first 170 volunteers, who worked full time one year in Massachusetts anti-poverty agencies.

The volunteers assisted thousands of low-income people and trained others to take over positions the volunteers filled during their year in UYA. The UYA volunteers and those they recruited have provided the equivalent of over 200 full-time employees who otherwise would have cost the agencies involved well over $1.5 million. In addition, the university contributed faculty expertise, audio-visual aids and office space.

UMass volunteers receive a modest living allowance for ACTION and 30 academic credits from the university for their field experience and related course work.

Volunteers authorized by the new grant will continue the work of previous volunteers, largely in the same agencies. They will address legal, educationl, environmental, economic and health problems. They will be working with the Western Massachusetts and Northern Worcester County Legal Services, Friendly House in Worcester, Belchertown State School, the Springfield Urban League, Brightwood Social Services Program, the Hampshire Community Action Commission and the Belchertown Citizens Advisory Committee.

Bowditch Lodge Has 50 Openings

The University Day School, located in Bowditch Lodge, has openings for 50 children in the session beginning June 25 and ending August 17. To be eligible, a child must be between the ages of two years nine months and five years; and a parent must be either a student at the university or a non-professional staff member.

Class times and tuition are as follows: 7:30 a.m.-1:00 p.m., $60; 8:00 a.m.-1:00 p.m., $55; 8:30 a.m.-1:00 p.m., $50; 9:00 a.m.-1:00 p.m., $45.

The philosophy of the University Day School is based on concern for the individuality of each child, and the development of this individuality to its greatest potential. Activities reflect this concern for the whole child. Some of the activities included in the daily program are: crafts-painting, modeling, woodworking; creative movement with music; use of physical equipment; outdoor play; reading and sharing of stories; science—natural and physical experiments; math—beginning math concepts of size, shape, and number; social interaction through cooperative play. The format is one of open classroom through which the child is encouraged to choose an activity from those available and move from area to area according to his interest.

For further information and applications contact Betsy Pelz, director.

Maroon Keys Sponsors Whist Tourney

Recently the Maroon Keys and Scrolls, the sophomore men's and women's honorary service society of UMass., sponsored a Whist Tournament at Franklin D.C. A capacity crowd attended, and for three hours competed for the prize money of $25, $15, and $10. By the end of the night, first place was secured by juniors Maureen Sullivan and Cathie Callanan from Brett House. In a close race for second place, Stephen Delancey and Jack Livingston triumphed, while Steve Del and John Daisy took third. Honorable Mentions went to Nancy Adamonis and Donna Mackintosh from Kappa Alpha Theta for fourth place.

In addition to sponsoring the Whist Tournament, the Scrolls and Maroon Keys have been active for the past year in such activities as introducing freshmen to campus, sponsoring the Freshman Dance, ushering at football games, holding a bake sale, arranging a poster distribution service, sponsoring a commuter's punch hour, and working for the International Fair. In the near future the groups will be showing horror movies starring Vincent Price. Any freshman wishing to apply for membership in Scrolls or Maroon Keys for next year may pick up an application at the R.S.O. office. The deadline for returning these applications to the R.S.O. office is Tuesday, April 17, at 5:00.

Attention Vets

Through the Veterans administration's tutorial assistance program, eligible veterans are entitled to a supplementary allowance of up to $50.00 per month for up to nine months. Despite the fact that this money is not hard to get, few veterans have applied for it. The program is aimed at supplying veterans in academic difficulty with the money needed to get a tutor. To be eligible all the veteran must do is obtain a letter from his professor stating that he has a deficiency in a subject and that the tutor the veteran has chosen is qualified to conduct tutorial assistance in the subject. The subject must be one that is required for his program of study at the university. The veteran can now fill out the form, available in the Veterans Affairs Office (239d Whitmore), which will be sent to the Veterans Administration. A check made out to the student should be received in four to six weeks. These forms can be sent at the end of each month of instruction or for a previous semester up to a year after the semester has ended.

The Veterans Office on campus has recently initiated a supplementary program aimed at helping graduate students or other upperclass veterans whose benefits under the G.I. bill may have run out. We are compiling a list of graduate students who are qualified to be tutors and refer the veteran who needs a tutor to these students. A veteran could possibly make the equivalent of his prior benefits by tutoring three or four students a month.

Although the present list of tutors covers a wide range of subjects many more will be needed as more undergraduate veterans take advantage of the opportunity to get money from the government for academic assistance. Whether or not the veteran gets his own tutor or uses another veteran, the Veterans Administration tutorial assistance program makes it easy for any veteran with academic problems to get money and help. Come to the campus veterans office with any questions or suggestions.

BEER, BROADS, BANDS, BEDS was the headline on a poster announcing an upper-class (?) mixer at Mount Holyoke, received at the Career Counseling Office at Williams College, recently.

It was intercepted by an alumna now at Williams, who expressed her "extreme" humiliation at what she called a "degrading" event. The former Holyokel penned her displeasure to the editor of the Mr. Holyoke Alumnae Quarterly, President David B. Truman, and Choragos, where it appeared in the letters column.

Report Released By Wood On Land Grant Universities

A progress report on planning for increased cooperation among New England land grant universities has been released by the office at UMass President Robert Wood.

The report comes from the presidents of the New England land-grant universities, who met last November and issued the Durham Declaration, a joint pledge of intention to greatly intensify and strengthen inter-university coordination.

The group also authorized a special study of inter-university cooperation in the areas of graduate education, region-wide professional schools, joint programs of extension and continuing education, common international programs and the open university.

At a recent meeting the presidents reviewed the special study and reported:

"Some time this month we expect to distribute the final report on the study to appropriate bodies of our respective universities for review and comment. On the basis of these evaluations, we plan to take further action in getting specific common programs underway at our next regular meeting in May. We note with approval the endorsement of a thorough review of our graduate programs and we are glad that the deans of our respective graduate schools have taken the initiative to begin that crucial examination.

"We are also encouraged by the common activities of our continuing education and extension services and their meetings in response to the Durham Declaration.

"Finally, we have received the report of a joint working group proposing a regional open university, pooling the efforts of the six institutions. We encourage continued work to examine the specific character of such efforts, how best to relate to similar developments within our states, and with our northern neighbors in Canada.

"While we look forward to many useful suggestions from our university communities as to how to strengthen our collaborative efforts, we believe that we should establish a basic operating structure now to ensure that we begin work in selected areas in the next academic year. First we need to appoint an individual to represent the presidents' concerns and to coordinate our efforts. Next, we need to develop a pattern of continued interaction in our faculties and staffs.

Black Music To Highlight Bowker

The Fine Arts Council will present two evenings of black music, on campus Thursday and Friday as part of its Third World Cultural Series.

Thursday, The New York Bass Violin Choir will present excerpts of Bill Lee's jazz/folk opera "The Depot" in Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m. and will be followed Friday, by two jazz groups, Gary Bartz NTU Troupe and The Jackie McLean Quintet, in a joint concert. Both programs are offered in conjunction with the University's Third World Alliance.

Gary Bartz was born in Baltimore, at an early age, began to face the reality of growing up black in a city with severely drawn racial lines. His uncle knew several prominent jazz musicians and the young Gary Bartz was taken to concerts given by Charlie Parker, Duke Ellington, and Dizzy Gillespie when they appeared in Baltimore. Bartz's father owned a Baltimore jazz club, which offered the youngster further exposure to music. Gary Bartz' formal music training was at the Juilliard School and Peabody Conservatory of Music, and he received his first professional engagement with Max Roach, now a member of the faculty of the UMass music department. He appeared with top jazzmen, including Art Blakey, McCoy Tyner, Miles Davis and Max Roach before forming his own group in 1969.

Tickets to the joint concert by Gary Bartz NTU Troupe and The Jackie McLean Quintet are available at $1.50 for UMass undergraduates and $2 for others, and may be obtained from the Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall in Amherst, telephone 545-0202. Remaining tickets will be available at Bowker Auditorium one hour before the concert.

Gary Bartz, born and raised in Baltimore, has appeared with such top jazzmen as Art Blakey, McCoy Tyner, Miles Davis and Max Roach. Bartz will play with The Jackie McLean Quintet in a joint concert, Friday in Bowker Auditorium.

UYA Sign Up Today

University Year for Action (UYA) is presently involved in a recruitment drive for Phase V of the program, which will tentatively begin June 25.

Below are the recruitment times when UYA staff will conduct an overview orientation and administer federal forms for clearance:

Today, 7:30 p.m., 164 Campus Center;

Tomorrow, 8:00 p.m., 165 Campus Center;

Thursday, 7:30 p.m., 904 Campus Center.

Since volunteer assignments are filled on a first-come, first-served basis, one should come to the earliest recruitment meeting. UYA hopes to place approximately 100 Volunteers in paraprofessional positions across western Massachusetts.

University Year for ACTION (UYA) is a federally funded ACTION agency (Peace Corps, VISTA, etc.) geared toward undergraduate and graduate University students. Briefly, this office places students for one calendar year in an agency serving the needs of the low-income or disadvantaged communities of western Massachusetts. During this year the student receives a stipend totaling $3,360 and earns at least thirty (30) credits toward graduation. It is an excellent opportunity for students seeking an experiential learning program to combine the academic base with course-related field work.

Volunteers are assigned to full-time paraprofessional positions in community agencies serving the needs of the low-income or disadvantaged citizens of western Massachusetts. Program areas include Health, Education, Administration of Justice, Housing, Social Services, Environmental Protection, and Consumer Protection. Some of our active agencies include Western Massachusetts Legal Services, Belchertown State School, Hampshire Correctional Services, Urban League, Model Cities, and Woodstock Prep. Many of these agencies are directly related to the functions of your RSO group.

Please refer this information to members of your RSO group. If you request a staff member or Volunteer to address your group, we would be more than happy to accommodate you. Please refer all requests to Susan Carr or John Watson at 545-1381.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

"Would you tell me who provided you with encouragement in your astrological career—I mean, celebrities?"—Ralph Randall, Santa Monica, Calif. Answer: Many persons sparked my enthusiasm and made me feel the pursuit of truth in this area was worth the barbs and occasional ridicule. Among celebrities, an unlikely trio comes to mind: Henry Miller, Aldous Huxley and Jayne Mansfield.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Accent is on creative urge, ability to express yourself, intensified relations with opposite sex. Obviously, nothing occurs halfway—if now is all or nothing. Know it and prepare accordingly. Money situation improves.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Basic issues dominate. Finish what you start. Speak in frank, meaningful manner. Means don't beat around bush. Say what you mean—mean what you say. Aries person figures prominently. Review resources.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Emphasis is on dealings with relatives, short trips, visits. Ideas which can be developed into valid concepts. Bring forth creative resources. Deal with Leo. Show others that you can be independent without being arrogant.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Money, security, protection of property and loved ones—these are spotlighted. Your basic loyalties are magnified. You feel a need to count what you have and to cut off situations which drain assets. You will do it, too.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Cycle high; your judgment, intuitive intellect are on target. Strive for new contacts. Be independent in thought, action. Creative abilities are highlighted. Members of opposite sex flatter you. Keep your head.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Feeling of restriction could dominate. Be patient. You are about to receive exciting proposal. Cooperate with group, organization, special institution or hospital. Aquarius, Leo and Scorpio persons are in picture.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Open line of communication with one you admire. Friendship now proves to be a two-way street. If you give, you also will receive. Gemini, Virgo persons are in picture. Analyze desires and make some changes.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Be diplomatic in dealing with one in position of authority. Remember family obligations. Control emotions—and temper. You make significant advance if moves are planned. Taurus, Libra play prominent roles.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Lofty ideals could dominate. Key is to reinforce concepts with solid underpinning. Means don't take things for granted. Do your own checking. Separate fact from wishful thinking. Read reference material and apply knowledge.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Delve deep. Refuse to accept the superficial. Mate, partner shares dilemma concerning finances. Lend moral support. You are on brink of exciting discovery. What was a mystery can be clarified.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Maintain low profile. Patience now is your ally. Study Capricorn message. Be self-analytical. Check with mate, partner regarding legal document. Joint effort is most likely to result in success.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): New approaches to health, work problems are necessary. Old habits, procedures leave much to be desired. Be open to wider experiences. One who depends on you also is able to aid it you so permit.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are original, independent, at times forceful and usually creative. You attract many to you who are born under Leo. October could be one of your most significant months in 1973. You are a natural pioneer, inventive and basically courageous.

Ruggers Rip Holy Cross

By WILLIAM WEBB ELLIS

Before every basketball season Johnny Wooden seals his prediction for UCLA's record in a special envelope that is not opened until tournament time. His prediction is usually right.

Before every rugby season old "Doc" Laurence, coach and faculty advisor of the UMass rugby team makes his prediction, but he can't claim to be as prophetic as Wooden.

Doc has predicted 15 and 0 for the "A" team this season, and this weekend's games bear his prediction out.

On Sunday the UMass ruggers walloped Holy Cross 19-9. It was UMass' first win over the Cross in two years. In the traditional extra physical battle between these two teams, the kicking of backs Rick Scarpignato and Doug Knapp was the major factor in the victory.

Scarpignato, who is also the place-kicker, kicked a field goal and two conversions for seven points to up his total to 19 points and make him the leading scorer on the team.

Holy Cross scored first with a penalty kick, but later Scarpignato kicked one from five yards out to end the half at 3-3.

In the second period fly half, Doug Knapp utilized the wind and punted the ball downfield to put UMass in striking distance. Scrum half Steve Ferrara carried the ball over from five yards out, Scarpignato kicked the conversion, and it was UMass, 9-3.

Later in the half wing forward Don Auger smashed his way into the corner of the end zone to make the score 13-0.

Minutes later Steve Ferrara picked up the ball from a loose ruck on the three yard line for his second touchdown of the day. After the conversion UMass had build up a surprising 19-3 lead over the tough Holy Cross team.

Holy Cross managed its only touchdown of the day on a long run down the sidelines.

After the game president Art Shelley said, "We have the horses to be a really tough team this season."

On Saturday the ruggers defeated the University of Connecticut in Storrs, 16-3.

Rick Scarpignato stole a UConn pass and ran for forty yards to score his first touchdown of the season. Later he added a conversion kick and two field goals to score twelve points on the day.

After missing most of the Fall season with a bad knee, winger Art Shelley scored on a pass from forward Paul Greenfield. UConn managed only one field goal.

UMass' "B" and "C" teams, loaded with talented but inexperienced players, played to two ties and a victory this weekend. On Sunday the B team beat Holy Cross 6-3 behind the kicking of scrum half Malcolm Best. Best broke the 3-3 tie by kicking a 25 yard field goal that was set up three yards inside of the sideline. The C teams played to a scoreless tie.

On Saturday the UMass and UConn B teams played to a scoreless tie, but it was one of the fiercest and most entertaining games to be seen all season.

Sailors Win NE's

The newly formed Sailing Club opened its season by winning the 63rd Semi-Annual New England Intercollegiate Sailing Association Associate Member Championship. The crews that participated in the winning of the Bliss Trophy were Mike Morissey and Richard Kelleher who won in Division One, compiled a low score of six by placing first twice and second twice. The other UMass crew was John Kelly and Wes Golomb who easily won Division Two by capturing two first, a second, and a third place finish for a combined low score of 7. The two teams scores were combined giving UMass first place with 13 points. The runner-ups were Franklin Pierce with 18, University of Maine (at Portland—Gorham) with 24, and the University of Southern Connecticut with 33. The regatta held at Harvard's new Sailing Centre saw 5 out of the 8 contestants tipping over at least once during the series.

UMass, now owner of the Bliss Trophy is eligible to compete in the 15th Tufts Y.C. Spring Intersectional, to be held at Tufts on April 28-29. The winner will receive the Jan. J. Triis Trophy. Next weekend UMass will be hoping to send teams to an open invitational at M.I.T. which will be held this Saturday, starting time is 12:30 a.m. UMass will also participate in the 26th Connecticut Valley Championship to be held at the Coast Guard Academy this Saturday, starting time is 12:30 p.m. on Sunday, April 15. A freshman crew will represent UMass at the New England Intercollegiate Sailing Association Freshman Championship Eliminations to be held at Boston University.

Presently the Sailing Club is engaged in a fund raising raffle. All members of the University are invited to participate by buying a raffle ticket on a chance to win a 10 speed bike. The bike will be on display every Tuesday through Thursday from 9-4 in the Campus Center Concourse.

Fight!!!

SAN DIEGO (AP)—A possible heavyweight title fight between world champion George Foreman and Ken Norton is in "serious negotiations," one of Norton's financial backers said Monday.

"I would say negotiations now have reached the point where we'll get the fight within a week, or not at all," Bob Biron said.

There have been reports that Foreman was offered $1 million to defend his title against Jerry Quarry at Madison Square Garden in New York. Biron said the reports are false.

Fencers Win In Open

By MIKE ELLIOTT

On April 7 the UMass Fencers entered the Tanner City Open at Peabody, Mass. Bob Woolner, fencing in the Novice class for foil, took first place handily. Bernie Desautels fenced in the Open Sabre and Foil competitions. In the sabre event, Bernie competed against professional as well as nationally-ranked amateur fencers and finished fifth. In the Open Foil event he fenced members of the US National team and tied for third place but lost it on indicators to finish fourth.

On April 8 UMass travelled to R.P.I. in Troy, N.Y. Sue Uhl and Sue Pannel fenced in the Women's Foil Open with Uhl taking first place and Pannel, third. Both girls continue to show rapid improvement. Bob Woolner fenced in the Men's Foil Open and placed third on indicators. Bob fenced out of his class for the first time and looked very impressive against the more seasoned fencers. Bernie Desautels fenced in the Hudson-Berkshire Sabre Championship and tied for first place but won a fence-off to take first and the Division crown. Desautels' performance earned him a national rank as a class C fencer and a berth in the National Sabre Championship event.

Throughout the year the UMass fencers have performed superbly. Because of their performance they have been asked to join the New England Intercollegiate Fencing Conference.

Esposito Marriage Unsteady

BOSTON (AP)—Mrs. Phil Esposito, wife of the Boston Bruins' National Hockey League scoring champion, filed suit in Suffolk Probate Court Monday for separate support.

Mrs. Linda J. Esposito of Lynnfield alleged cruel and abusive treatment and desertion in the suit. Esposito is recuperating at Massachusetts General Hospital from surgery to repair knee damage suffered in a game last Thursday.

Probate Judge Mary Fitzpatrick granted Mrs. Esposito temporary custody of two children pending a hearing on the suit.

The Espositos were married Aug. 19, 1963, in Ontario. Mrs. Esposito did not indicate the amount of support sought.

Esposito, now reportedly living in a Boston apartment, is one of hockey's top paid players. He has completed two years on a four-year contract with the Bruins. He also has many other business interests.

HANGING IN THERE is Boston Bruins Super Star, center Phil Esposito who is in Massachusetts General Hospital recuperating from knee surgery on torn ligaments. If that isn't enough, his wife is filing for divorce in Suffolk County Court. (See related story)

Gorillas Scramble UConn 11-1

By HOWIE BLOOM

Oh well. Ho hum. Yawn. For the umpteenth year in a row, Garber's Gorillas are going to win the Northeast Division championship. They all but assured themselves of copping the title yesterday afternoon by defeating the team that was supposed to give them a run for their money. In a surprisingly easy victory, UMass made clean pickings of Connecticut, 11-1.

It's happened in football, basketball, and hockey, so it was bound to happen during a lacrosse game some time. After jumping out to a quick lead on the strength of Fred Michel's seventh goal of the season, Connecticut, er, UMass, tied it up, 1-1, on a goal that deflected off a UMass offenseman standing in front of goalie John Rutledge. That was the closest Connecticut came to scoring on their own all afternoon as Rutledge made 3 or 4 early saves and wasn't really tested after that.

Michels and Frank Garahan stopped chasing ground balls long enough midway through the first period to add to their line's scoring monopoly, and to make the score 3-1 at the end of the stanza.

With Rutledge and the UMass close defense, consisting of Bill Blaustein, Rich Lally, Rich Incorvia, and Tom Bock, giving the Huskies fits with their aggressive play, the Gorillas increased their lead to 5-1 by the end of the half. Joe DiRiso and John Martin, who seems to have an affinity for pipe-hitting, provided the firepower that made what was turning out to be a laugher all the more amusing.

The Gorillas came out in the third period, with the pinch marks still plainly visible on their arms. Is this really the UConn team that was supposed to make life tough for us, they pondered? So as not to wake up and discover the first half was all just a dream, UMass' fighting ten dazzled their opponents with a three-goal offensive show that had the crowd of 300 UMass lacrosse—and sun-worshippers going wild. Andy Scheffer, Garahan, and Michels did the entertaining.

Finally, digging the knife in deeper and twisting it, adding salt to UConn's wounds, really putting it to them, Garber's Gorillas punished the visitors with their aggressive checking game. UConn was not in possession of the ball for more than two minutes the entire period. Scoring in the stanza was left up to Andy Scheffer, (a freshman attackman from Plymouth, New Hampshire), Garahan, and Kevin Bush. And so, with that, UMass had its second straight win, and a 2-1 record.

GORILLA GRUNTS: "We really expected a much tougher game from the Huskies. It seems as though they just fold when they play us," said Coach Garber. The coach said that the Gorillas had been practicing scooping up loose balls, and that his team's fine effort was the culmination of their hard work.

Gorilla Goalie John Rutledge (not shown) could have taken the day off as far as the Huskies of UConn are concerned. 'OJ" relaxed yesterday while basking in the sun of the Upper Boyden Field. But it will be a different story tomorrow afternoon. The Gorillas host national power Adelphia in what one has to consider as the game. A win here could propel UMass into the nation's top dozen. Rutledge will have to be sharp. He usually is.

Aaron Masters Champ

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP)—Tommy Aaron, a quiet, curly-haired veteran who once scurried from the Augusta National Golf Club in shame, strode proudly past the game's greatest players Monday with a final round 68 and annexed the 37th Masters title Monday.

His 283 total, five under par, destroyed his inaccurate image as golf's perennial runner-up and helped erase the haunting memory of a slip of the pen that cost Roberto de Vicenzo a chance at the Masters crown in 1968.

His victory came in gritty, determined fashion as he ignored a gallant charge by Jack Nicklaus.

Nicklaus, eight strokes off the pace when the day's play started in mild, windy weather, shouldered his way into the ranks of the contenders with a sparkling, six-under-par 66 for a 285 total, three under.

He leaped high in the air and brandished his putter over his head after holing a 30-foot birdie putt on the final hole while Aaron, well behind him, was playing the 520-yard, par-five 15th.

The 36-year-old Aaron, just a face in the crowd for 13 years on the pro tour, was only four under at that point and faced the multiple dangers of the famed finishing holes.

He replied by chipping delicately to about 18 inches and tapping in the birdie putt that, in the end, won it.

He managed to par in, twice making nerve-testing little putts of two to three feet and just missing a bird on the final hole.

But he still had to endure the closing bid of J. C. Snead, the raw-boned 31-year-old nephew of Sam Snead, and Peter Oosterhuis, the 24-year-old Englishman who led by three strokes at the end of the third round.

Both were four under par and were three holes back of Aaron.

UMASS CREW WITH a victory over WPI under their belts are shown preparing for the meet by a few quick runs up and down the Connecticut. The crew faces Trinity and Ithaca at Hartford, Conn. on April 14.

"They Seem Unnoticed"

Sunday On The Boyden - It was unusually crisp that Sunday just past noon, an hour that most competitive college athletes never see. Also unseen was the context of that sport event. About 50 non-paying customers stopped by and of those many retreated to the comfort of their cars. But that was the only comfort available that afternoon for the rest of the story is pretty intense. A group of gentlemen from Holy Cross found that out-blood and all. But the postscript was not the pain of defeat, but a friendly handshake, meaningful conversation and of course, a hit of beer.

And so a typical Sunday afternoon passed for the UMass Rugby Club. You saw no cheerleaders, there were no bleachers, no oranges at half-time, no one bitched of scholarship or dying on the field of combat for the University of Massachusetts. And if I don't say so, in their own individual style and personality, which of course brought them to the UMass Rugby Club, they looked pretty sharp in their $11.50 red and white jerseys.

Some spoke with an accent resembling the Old Country, (Gr. Br.), others checked to see if their teeth were intact, and still another explained to me why Rugby is a "gentleman's game." But for almost 2 straight hours, or it seemed that long, two groups of 15 were pretty intent on kicking respective ass. With revenge in mind the Aggies turned back the Cross and by far no manners were used, but plenty of muscle, more wind, and an uncanny sense of athletic determination was exploited. Only the UMass Ruggers could rejoice in victory. No one else knew what the hell was going on. But the Rugby family was happy. They deserved it.

Hiding by themselves between the Sewage Plant and the Cowbarns, the Ruggers are alone in their sport. No one will ever affix scholarship to this game. It's a club. If you're into it, and it gets into you, you're cordially invited to get into the "scrum" of things. (Scrum is a masochistic term used to describe the huddling, kicking, and sometimes biting that you see when arms are locked and the ball is placed in the middle of a gang pile-gotta be there to appreciate it).

Rugby is pure, no politics involved. The players actually run the team. During the week a Selection Committee (consisting solely of players) meets before the game to pick the "A" and "B" teams for the upcoming match. They even have a "C" team (lower level J.V.) that performs. Someone suggested that even I get a jersey and suit up for the afternoon's match with the young Crusaders. But I balked at negoitations, sighting that the Infirmary is kind of lonely on a Sunday night.

The Ruggers are there because they want to be. The essence of sport is captured. They play because they love the game and it's their choice. When the battle has been waged, both teams traditionally tap a few kegs, friends are made, wounds heal that much quicker, and the sporting experience becomes that much real and stable. Rugby reputations vary. To some schools UMass is tougher than leather on the field; to others our Ruggers are the best beer guzzlers in New England.

Although the game was started at Rugby School in England and was given only to the sons of the rich in the private, upper-elitist schools such as Eaton and Cornwall, the lineage is not paralleled as such at Massachusetts. Oh, we may have a few kids with rich parents floating skyward in our dormitories, but the athletes who subscribe to UMass Rugby by the way for the most part are peasants. In the past they certainly didn't lead sheltered lives for there's nothing protective about UMass Rugby. And if you're tired there's no way in hell you can hide on the field. If somebody breaks your arm, you either play with pain or forever hold your peace and your arm on the sidelines. No substitutions.

Around Oxford way large English cities represent themselves in social circles with the game; the lower class rises through the sport. Professionals earn upwards to $5,000. At UMass Ruggers get no pay, no glory, and pain. But it's all pure. They'd have it no other way.

Music Conference Honors 'Bird' Parker

By DAVID SPARLING

The life and genius of the late jazz great, Charles "Bird" Parker, served as the symbolic focal point at yesterday morning's Black Musicians Conference discussion, "Black Music as a Domestic and International Political Phenomenon."

"This conference," Archie Shepp, keynote speaker, said, "should be dedicated to Charlie Parker and other musicians who began it all."

Speaking on the subject of "Black Music as a Political and Economic Phenomenon," Shepp gave the goal of such discussions as the "definition and an assessment of folk music . . . which is the highest achievement of that culture."

Shepp was joined in the discussion by panelists Richard Abrams, co-founder of the Association for the Advancement of Colored Musicians; Robert Ruff, "Poet of the Barricades," from Boston; and Reggie Workman, musician and professor at UMass. Members of the audience also joined in the discussion.

Shepp, a member of the Institute for Pan African Culture at UMass, asked if the black community controls and provides for the continuation of black culture.

The black musician was described by Shepp: "His youth bludgeoned, destroyed, misused. Where is he protected? He relies on a connection, which is support from his community."

Shepp noted the "new sensibility, the new consciousness' that began with Charlie Parker. "What," Shepp asked, "happened to the voice of Charlie Parker? We are left with rock and roll. Why?"

The white racist structure of society is the cause of this condition, according to Shepp. "Every step on the way in this process," Shepp said, "the black man is exploited."

Shepp cited the powerful white producers of black music. He said that the packagers and distributors are white. Disc jockeys are white, he said, and they have a quota on whom and how much someone will be played.

"The black community," Shepp said, "must produce what it creates."

Shepp closed his remarks by reading Ismael Reed's review of Charles Russel's biography of Charles Parker, Bird Lives.

Panelist Abrams addressed himself to the problem of "watered down ideologies." He cited the "permissiveness of the integrated cultures" that led to the downfall of ancient Egypt.

Also, Abrams said, the "spiritual criteria" was important. This criteria is not easily realized today because of the economic oppression of the black community and black musicians.

The widespread use of rock and roll is an example of this watering down of culture, Abrams said.

"Rock and roll," said Abrams, "does not describe, or address itself to what black music is. It is an integration of their (white) influence and economic control."

A member of the audience later described the situation in New York City today. He said, "Blacks in New York City sit around high, listening to apolitical music." (Music made by white musicians who coopt black culture) "They (white musicians) steal it, disguise it and deny it."

For these reasons, panelist Robert Ruff saw this conference as a highly political event.

"In any political system," Ruff said, "the nucleus is the people, which for us is the community. And the nucleus of the community is music. Today's music is being stolen more as the oppression of the black man increases."

Reggie Workman saw music's role as the nucleus of the community, "to reactivate the minds of the people."

Acklyn Lynch, an associate professor in the Dept. of Afro-American Studies called for the creation of a "think tank" to provide the missing link between the creative processes of black culture and the technical and economic realities involved. Until this is done, blacks will remain the "raw material" that other cultures use with no material gain to the vast majority of blacks.

Max Roach offered one last insight into Charles Parker. "It is a popular misconception," Roach noted, "that Parker's nickname, "Bird", stems from his fondness of chicken."

In fact, the name is short for "yardbird", a military term for one who will not cooperate. Roach called this unwillingness to contribute a "revolutionary" act.

Ed. Marathon Presents Women's Day

By ROBERTA MARTONE

"Women's Day at the Marathon"-education of, for, and by women, was presented in Mark's Meadow School by the Women's Caucus of the School of Education yesterday.

The events began at 2:30 p.m. and continued until 10:00 p.m., including: The Consumption and Packaging of Women by the Media; Feminist Counseling; Women and Day Care; Sexist Language; Physical Competence and the "Weak Sex;" and Consciousness Raising in the Classroom. Spokespersons for these events were, respectively: Allison Rossett, Peggy Sablove, Sherry Flashperson, Joy Hardin, and Kathryn Girard.

These lectures were followed by various skits on what it means to be a woman, and, also a pot-luck dinner. The events closed with a self-defense presentation and music. The general purpose of these events was to provide a day of discussion and analysis of the issues concerning women and their education.

In her talk on "The Consumption and Packaging of Women by Media," Ms. Rossett said, "Women are exploited by the media. Media changes behavior by giving promises that can't be kept. These promises influence our self-concept by creating our wants and masquerading them as our needs."

Ms. Rossettt then discussed some of the various promises that the media makes to the public: youth, beauty, the mother role, cleanliness, desirability, and fantasy creation. "Of course, these promises apply to men, too," added Ms. Rossett. She said that, although the women's movement has made an impact on television media, the media still presents women as a reward to men. Also discussed was the misrepresentation of the women's movement by the media (i.e., the bra-burning feminist).

Ms. Rossett concluded her lecture with: "I would just like to see different kinds of women on T.V. Women should have some control over the media."

There was also a discussion pertaining to the function of the Women's Caucus. Buffy Weissman, a member of the Caucus, said it was a support and service group of the School of Education. "We are trying to become a program in ourselves by offering these courses."

The Women's Caucus holds weekly meetings every Tuesday in the basement of the School of Education, room 21A. Today the Caucus is sponsoring a puppet show entitled "Judy and Punch" at the Mark's Meadow cafeteria. The Caucus will also show an Angela Davis movie tomorrow. All are urged to come.

Senate Committees

Concert Money Cut

By BRIAN COYNE

Approval of a compromise budget for the Concerts Committee and discussion of next year's budgeting procedures were the actions taken last night by the Budgets Committee of the Student Senate.

The committee recommended a Student Activities Tax Fund (SATF) appropriation of $16,947 for the Concerts Committee, a reduction from the $18,000 originally appropriated. The entire budget of the committee totals about $112,000, the rest of the money will come from ticket receipts.

Budgets Committee Chairperson Paul Doran said the Senate is, in effect, "guaranteeing" the money to enable the group to hire the performers. The receipts from the concerts will then go toward funding the free spring concert.

There will be eight concerts held in the Cage during the year. Based on 80% attendance at the concerts, the Concerts Committee expects to make a $6,000 profit.

Also approved was allocation of $300 to attend a conference for concert promotion being held here next year.

In other business, ideas were aired for facilitating operations of next year's Budgets Committee. Committee members suggested a definite deadline for rationales and budgets from groups seeking SATF funding. This year, the committee did not receive proposals from many groups until very late, causing a large backlog of budgets to be reviewed.

Also suggested were the establishment of an agenda for the committee; limits on absenteeism to groups at meetings when their budgets are to be considered; and an investigation into a pay scale for student administrators, such as the editor-in-chief of the Collegian and the station manager of WMUA.

$4000 To Sylvan Blocked

By SHARON HUGHES

The Senate Rents and Fees Committee last night rejected a motion to increase the Sylvan Area Budget by $4000 next year.

The committee also refrained from making substantial changes in the Food Services Advisory Board Act, which were requested by Chairperson of Government Affairs, Barry Cohen.

Rents and Fees Committee Chairperson, Mike Gregory, listed the contents of a book regarding the dormitory system, to be authored by the committee.

Chuck Hampson, financial manager of residence halls, approved a $4000 increase to raise Sylvan's budget from $17,500 to $21,500 at the suggestion of Sylvan Area Directors. The money would be drawn from an expected $12,000 excess of dormitory revenues in fiscal 1974. Excess revenue is placed in a dormitory system reserve account.

"Rather than keep the money in reserves, I suggest it go to Sylvan Area because they need financial help," said Chuck Hampton.

Senator Neil Coleman objected to the motion because the projected excess is based on 92 per cent dorm occupancy. Since occupancy cannot be accurately predicted, he said that excess revenue is not a guarantee.

But, Coleman said he would accept the proposal "if Sylvan realizes its $4000 will be the first to go if projected occupancy is not reached."

Senator Steve Von Lichtenburg argued for the increase despite the risk. "No area should have to plan on the contingency that occupancy won't be met," he said.

The committee discussed two possible binding clauses to the motion. One would cut Sylvan's budget if 90 per cent occupancy wasn't met next year. The second would cut all area budgets not meeting projected occupancy rates. Both clauses were rejected.

Neil Coleman raised a further objection to the motion, saying, "Southwest is an older set of dormitories with continually degrading facilities. $4000 could mean alot to them, as well as to Sylvan."

The committee rejected requests by Cohen to substantially amend the Food Services Advisory Board Act. They said that the Act stands a better chance of being accepted by Director of Food Services Joel Stoneham as it now stands.

Gregory relegated topics regarding the dorm system to committee members. The committee is authoring a 15-20 page book to be available next semester. Topics to be included are: Area Budgets, Physica' Plant, UMass Building Authority (UMBA) and the Resident Hall Trust Fund (RHTF).

Senior Committee Chooses Class Gifts

By DON GLICKSTEIN

The Senior Committee chose two class gifts last night: a contribution to an alternative school in Springfield and the publication of a handbook for the handicapped on campus.

The committee also voted to inform the Commencement Task Force that they want a minimum of three student speakers at Commencement. Details about interviews for the student speakers were also released.

Approximately $6000 will be available for the Class of '73 gift. The amount is an approximation because expenses and profits from the traditional Senior Day bash are not known.

The Committee decided to split the class gift money in a 2:1 ratio, with the larger segment going to publish the handbook, and to begin developing the communications system for a barrier-free campus for the handicapped. This system will include signs on buildings and raised numbers on elevators for the blind.

The rest of the money, about $2000, will be donated to the Street Academy System of Springfield, an alternative school for dropouts and students turned off by traditional schools, begun in 1970 by UMass students and Springfield residents.

UMass has traditionally been close to "SASSI Prep", as it is called. In 1970, the Student Senate, the Senior Class, and the Southwest Assembly gave it $3000. UMass sends student teachers to SASSI, and most recently, SASSI has been one of the sites for University Year for Action students. The headmaster of the school, William Smith, is a UMass graduate.

The seniors also voted to give SASSI the profits from the sale of soft drinks that, in the past, were given away at Commencement.

The senior speaker sub-committee chairperson, Bill King, reported that the Commencement Task Force had asked the seniors to select one or two student speakers. The Task Force is comprised of students, faculty, and administrators, and coordinates Commencement activities.

The seniors, however, felt that one or two speakers would not represent the diversity of the class, and voted to inform the Task Force that they would select a minimum of three student speakers. They urged the Task Force to reduce the speaking time from administrtion speakers, if necessary, to accommodate more students.

Any senior woman or man interested in becoming a student speaker should sign up for an interview in Room 177 Campus Center on Tusday, April 17 between 4 and 6 p.m. If they cannot sign up then, they should contact Barbara Glotzer at 549-6169. Candidates should be prepared to explain why they want to speak.

On University Governance

The following letter from Robert R. Wellman, Chairman of the Pan-University Study Group on Governance, is in reply to articles by Bill Densmore on the New Statement on University Governance, printed in the Collegian of Monday, April 9.

Sir:

In light of Mr. Bill Densmore's articles in the Daily Collegian April 9 on the new Statement of University Governance, it may be worthwhile at this time to briefly clear up some misunderstandings about it.

In June, 1972, the Board of Trustees established a Pan-University Study Group to Review University Governance, widely representative of all components within the University. The Study Group was charged with drawing up a statement of policies and procedures for University governance agreeable to all components of the University—students, faculty, administration, and governing board— which stressed the partnership concept of governance articulated in various AAUP statements. The major motifs of the Statement, therefore, are partnership and its corollary, consultation. Mr. Densmore fails to stress in his articles that the Statement guarantees consultation between all interested parties prior to policy recommendations and decisions—a matter which in the past has been left largely to chance or the initiative of individuals and groups, rather than stated governance policy.

Mr. Densmore goes on to point out that the Board of Trustees, while providing primary responsibility for University matters to various groups, nevertheless retains ultimate legal authority "despite the governance document." This is true, of course, since this is the law of the Commonwealth; the paragraph he quotes with some disdain ("The Board of Trustees has all authority . . .") is a direct quotation from Chapter 75 of the General Laws of the Commonwealth which sets up the University of Massachusetts. What Mr. Densmore again fails to stress, however, is that, with two exceptions, the Trustees delegate about as much authority to officers of the University as the law allows. The two exceptions are the appointments of the President and the campus Chancellors, exceptions which are understandable in light of the public charge entrusted to the Board.

On the other hand, the Board is expressly prohibited from delegating its authority on many matters at the very heart of the University. For example, it cannot delegate its authority to "establish, locate, support, consolidate or abolish classes, courses, curricula, departments, divisions, schools or colleges . . . (set) standards for admission, promotion and graduation . . ." nor can it delegate its authority to set "rules and regulations for the government of the university, for the management, control and administration of its affairs, for its faculty, students and employees . . ." In other words, in precisely those areas of most concern to students, faculty and administration, the Board is unable to delegate its authority. This is the context in which the "primary responsibility" section of the Governance Statement should be set. Mr. Densmore finds this section rather 'harmless'. To the contrary, it is the heart of the document since it provides a clear statement of responsibility for the various components of the University while allowing for the exercise of legal authority—required by law—through the mechanism of an automatic 70 day approval procedure. In a word, the primary responsibility section, far from being 'harmless' and simply articulating the status quo, provides a sort of functional delegation of responsibility with safeguards against administrative pocket veto and arbitrary decisions; for not only must the administration or the Board expressly disapprove an action of a campus governing body within 70 days in order to prevent it from becoming policy, but they must also provide written reasons in detail, for the adverse decision. Such instances occur rarely, of course, but I suggest that never before have the faculty and students had such guarantees of rights and responsibilities in governing the University.

Mr. Densmore goes on in his new analysis to charge that as the original draft was revised in light of discussion with Trustees, administrators, faculty, and students, it was "watered down" to a considerable extent. Certainly there were changes in the Statement as it filtered through the various interested parties, but I would argue that this is what compromise is all about when attempting to negotiate a policy statement agreeable to parties of diverse interests and talents. Nevertheless, the basic partnership concept and its attendant statement of primary responsibility remained substantially intact throughout all the revisions. Mr. Densmore states that "making policy" and "initiating recommendations" are different words and imply different conceptions of the kind of power the Trustees wished to delegate to the campuses of the University. It is difficult to deny these are different words, but there was never a draft of the Statement which stated that campus governing bodies "make policy." The first draft of the Statement, released after consultation with legal counsel, stated that various "components may

Black Musicians' Conference

Workshops Highlight Day

By MARY MULLOY

A series of speeches and workshops highlighted the second day of the Black Musicians' Conference, taking place in the Student Union this week.

Bill Hasson, presiding over introductions, presented the first speaker, Norman Reid, who discussed the concept: "Masses and the Media, A New World View."

Reid said that preparations are being made by a group in Washington, D.C. to put together a multi-media consulting firm and referral service. "In time, as people call asking for assistance and their needs are met, communications will be available with a large number of people," he said. "There is a great need for black people to communicate with each other and transfer ideas and cooperation."

In this workshop, he planned to look at the media to see how various ideas are projected to vast amounts of people. He spoke of the many people who are creations of the media, and have even gained control over the creation of their own image. "These people never seem to die," he commented wryly, "you never know how much of these people are real; even when they do die, they have a son or daughter with similar characteristics who can take their place, and even get an Academy Award."

The second topic introduced by Hasson was "Nightclubs, Concerts and Management as Political Entities." "Today, black musicians do not have a place in the nightclubs," he said.

Max Roach, instructor in the Afro-American Studies and Music Department, commenting further on the subject, traced the development of black music throughout the nightclub period, "the only facilities black musicians originally had to work with."

"Often musicians were brought in just to sell whiskey or to be used by the syndicate as a legitimate operation to cover illegitimate businesses," he added.

Playthell Benjamin, currently writing for publication a paper entitled "The Americanization of Afro-American Music," spoke at length on this topic. He described his numerous visits to New York City, where he could observe "any major cultural developments happening in the world. Rhythm and blues," he said, "serves a psychic function for blacks today, similar to the psychic function provided by the gospels during the time of slavery." He scorned the "cultural plagarism and rip-off" of black music by whites evident in the Broadway musical, "Two Gentlemen of Verona," and elsewhere.

The final speaker, an Arabic poet, Mukhtarr Moustapha, from Sierra Leone, approached from a historical and anthropological perspective, the topic of why black music is the way it is and why it has not been accepted. "M is music and Mass," he said, "when we convert mass into music we are only resurrecting what belongs to us, our own innate creativity. Music with literature is the united collective end, the sum total of our reflections."

Grads' Job Outlook Improved

By BILL DENSMORE

Accountants are needed more than ever to keep the books, but humanities and social science majors will find employers less than willing to accommodate.

These are two of the predictions made by UMass Director of Career Planning and Placement, Robert J. Morrissey, during a March interview.

But according to Morrissey, "things are a lot better than last year," and the figures "don't mean there aren't jobs for liberal arts people."

According to Morrissey a UMass BA will earn a graduate an average $10,500 yearly salary according to current figures. A UMass MA should net an average starting salary of $11,500, and doctorates could earn $13,500 to begin with.

"The teaching market has fallen way off," Morrissey said, because "the towns are drawing back on building new schools." He said that he receives calls from school superintendents who have 400 applicants for one job, and want to know which of the UMass candidates is best qualified.

He said that "people don't always have the right credentials for certification," implying that the UMass School of Education does not educate graduates for the jobs available.

Morrissey cited increases in the number of campus recruiters and more corporate requests for students' resumes as indications of a definite employer interest.

We're getting more students into the placement office than we've had in other years," he said, adding that "the number of people requesting the sending of their credentials to employers has almost doubled over the last year."

According to Morrissey, the Placement Office sent out 6,000-7,000 transcripts or resumes on behalf of UMass students in 1971, and 12,000 in 1972.

And he says that 350 recruiters have scheduled appointments on campus this year, compared with 285 during the last academic year. "We used to have over 600 in 1966," Morrissey said, concluding that "this year it's really moving up a lot faster."

Accountants are most in demand, he says, followed by chemical, electrical, civil, industrial, and mechanical engineers, nurses, School of Business graduates, and College of Agriculture graduates.

He says the college youth of the sixties were "anti-establishment", but "they wound up in it anyway."

Wellman Replies On Univ. Governance

initiate recommendations which . . . may become policy" within terms of the 70 day approval procedure. The revised Statement, which was adopted by the Board, states that various components shall have the "capacity to initiate recommendations . . . in accordance with . . . section II. D below," i.e. the 70 day approval procedure. I trust it evident that the difference in wording is stylistic, not substantive. In rewording, set in its context of paragraph 1, Section I.B. of the Statement, simply clarifies the meaning of primary responsibility, rather than "watering it down." To my knowledge, there was never any misunderstanding as to the precise meaning of the phrase, namely, the capacity to initiate recommendations, with specified procedures in cases of disagreement.

Mr. Densmore also refers to substituting the word "privilege" for "right" in the final revision. As before, the change was stylistic; indeed, earlier in the document it is expressly stated that governing bodies shall be ensured certain "rights, responsibilities, and privileges"-so Mr. Densmore's "rights" are still there. He also refers to the addition of a paragraph in the Statement which reserves to the Trustees the right to amend and alter the Statement. I trust it clear from my earlier remarks this is simply a restatement of the law of the Commonwealth—whether it is included in the Statement or not.

Finally, Mr. Densmore seems especially distressed with the deletion of a paragraph in the Statement which commences "Recent changes within the University require, at this time, a re-examination of the functions of the various components of the University . . ." He concludes this section by quoting an unidentified "campus leader" who speculates that the paragraph was deleted "because the Trustees did not want to acknowledge publicly that a redefinition was necessary, or that 'recent changes'—perhaps faculty unionization attempts—were serious." I have no idea who the "campus leader" is, but he or she is at best ill-informed. The paragraph referred to was nothing more than an introduction to a lengthy statement on the responsibilities and duties of the various components of the University. It added nothing of substance to the Statement, and in writing the final version I simply omitted it since it was superfluous in a major statement of Trustee policy.

The new Statement on University Governance is nothing more or less than an effort to systemize a policy of joint responsibility and effort in governing the University; its implementation now depends on the continued good will between students, faculty, administration, and governing board.

Weeks Speaks On YSA

By HUGH OWEN

Arthur Weeks, a member of the Young Socialist Team, spoke on the role of the Young Socialist Alliance in the Black Nationalist movement last night.

Speaking to a small crowd in Room 175, Campus Center, Weeks said the Young Socialist Alliance is helping the black community to organize itself into a strong political faction.

The Young Socialist Alliance advocates the transfer of government funds allocated to black communities into the hands of the blacks themselves. The black community would also have control of all public services in their community.

"A community council," according to Weeks, "would control the police department, schools, libraries, hospitals, and local businesses." This board would be comprised by the working class of the community.

Weeks continued, "Through the efforts of the council, the black community's needs would be represented."

"The black people will never be liberated by supporting the parties controlled by their oppressors," he concluded.

Corrections

Danny Scarborough, a member of the SASSI Preparatory Dance Troupe, is not a doctoral candidate at the School of Education, as was reported in yesterday's Collegian. He is a Ph.D. candidate in the UMass English Department.

An article appearing in the Collegian incorrectly stated that a motion was passed which requested that the Campus Center Student Union Governing Board grant all graduate student organizations the same use of building facilities afforded to RSO groups. The motion was tabled.

The Collegian regrets the errors.

U.S. Airlifts Fuel To Cambodia

SAIGON (AP)—The United States began airlifting fuel Tuesday into Cambodia's capital, whose main supply routes have been cut or harrassed by Communist command forces.

The airlift was announced by the U.S. Embassy in Phnom Penh and the Pentagon in Washington. A C130 Hercules transport came in with the first load of fuel in a huge plastic bladder and unloaded it at Phnom Penh's airport.

The Pentagon disclosed that since July, an average of 10 cargo planes daily had been carrying supplies, mostly military, to the Cambodian capital.

Pentagon spokesman Jerry W. Friedheim declined to give the maximum number of flights in any one day for the new airlift but said, "This is not a major airlift."

In Phnom Penh an embassy spokesman said that without fuel resupply the city would have to shut down electricity generators and water pumps.

Five tankers arrived in Phnom Penh Sunday and Monday after passage up the Communist threatened Mekong River. They added two weeks' supply to the city's reserves, but the government was pessimistic of any more ships making the 60-mile run from the South Vietnamese border.

All major roads to Phnom Penh have been severed for more than three weeks by Khmer Rouge insurgents and their North Vietnamese and Viet Cong allies despite massive U.S. air support for government forces.

The announcement of the U.S. airlift followed a visit to Cambodia by President Nixon's special emissary, Gen. Alexander M. Haig Jr., who is on a four-nation tour to assess the general political, military and economic situation in Indochina.

Haig flew to Saigon Tuesday but will return Wednesday to Phnom Penh before flying back to the United States. He has made no public statement.

Communist troops to the south of Phnom Penh are within 12 miles of the city and may launch an offensive Friday to mark the Cambodian new year.

U.S. military observers, however, believe rebel forces lack the strength for a full-scale assault on the capital.

Prince Norodom Sihanouk, who heads a Cambodian government in exile in Peking, said Monday he has enough arms and ammunition from Communist China and North Vietnam to go on fighting until 1975.

Sihanouk, who is at least the nominal leader of the rebellion against President Lon Nol's regime in Phnom Penh was overthrown in a bloodless coup in 1970. Speaking at a banquet in Hanoi to mark his return from a month-long visit to rebel-held areas in Cambodia, Sihanouk claimed his arms were delivered prior to the Jan. 27 Paris peace agreement. Rebel forces control about 75 per cent of Cambodian territory.

The onetime neutralist prince said his army mustered 120,000 men and its field commanders recognized him as Cambodia's only legal head of state.

Western military attaches in Phnom Penh believe Sihanouk's figure of 120,000 is greatly exaggerated. They put the number of Cambodian rebel fighting men at about 40,000. In addition, they claim, there are large numbers of North Vietnamese and Viet Cong troops in the country.

In South Vietnam, the peace-keeping International Commission of Control and Supervision has temporarily grounded all helicopter flights.

A spokesman said all four member nations—Canada, Hungary, Indonesia and Poland—agreed to the move following the crash of a commission helicopter in northern Quang Tri Province. All nine people aboard were killed, including four officers of the commission.

A Canadian investigator claimed the helicopter had been shot down by a heat-seeking missile. He rejected a Viet Cong claim that the crash was an accident.

Cambodian Capital-A Slumbering Town

Editor's Note: While the enemy knocks at the gate and river convoys run a blockade, the citizens of Phnom Penh, capital of embattled Cambodia, go about their daily business. Here is a report by an AP correspondent on the scene.

By LEE RUDAKEWYCH

PHNOM PENH (AP)—Anyone expecting to see Cambodia's capital down on its knees finds instead a quiet little town slumbering under the blistering Cambodian sun.

Some Phnom Penh residents still visit the Cafe de Paris and other fine restaurants to sip imported beer or wine and slice into filet mignon.

At the other end of the gastronomic scale, rice supplies are adequate and government control keeps the price in line, despite stories reporting the capital suffering from shortage, with Communist-led forces practically at its gates.

Enemy troops are in fact close to the city. Native Khmer Rouge rebels, aided by the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong, have put on their biggest military campaign against the Phnom Penh government in Cambodia's three-year-old war.

Every night and into the early morning hours, heavens rumble from the force of bombs dropped by U.S. thunderbombers close in or miles from the capital.

American air support, military experts agree, is the only thing keeping the government from total military collapse.

Since the offensive began in late January, the Communists have interdicted traffic along the Mekong River, Cambodia's major supply line, and severely made highway trading into Phnom Penh.

Dissidents Deny Prolonging War

By BOB MONROE

Several antiwar leaders who visited American POWs in North Vietnam say they do not condone torture by anyone but that the reports of coercion must be viewed in the larger context of the Vietnam war.

They reviewed as "hollowing" and "completely illogical" the statements of some of the released prisoners that their activities prolonged the conflict.

These outstanding men actress Jane Fonda, former Atty. Gen. Ramsey Clark, Cora Weiss and Dave Dellinger, co-chairman of the Committee of Liaison with Families of Servicemen Detained in North Vietnam, and the Rev. William Sloane Coffin Jr., Yale University chaplain.

"I'd have to say there must be some basis in fact for the claims of torture," said Dellinger. He said reports peculiar nature of prisoners in South Vietnam "in no way neither is justified."

"I oppose the torture. I opposed torturing of prisoners as criminals," he said. "I was also opposed to the bombing of the Red dikes, which was also a crime.

"I have no reason to doubt the stories of torture, said the former Yale. "I certainly do not condone torture by anyone, whether it's in Hanoi or Saigon.

"But I think it's terribly important that we keep this in perspective," he added. The United States supports a larger government that most back many, many prisoners who wouldn't even walk because they didn't have any legs," he said.

"There might have been very severe treatment for some prisoners," said Ron Fields. "But some forced the Vietnamese to be brutal. They tried to escape. If you try to escape from prison in this country and you're the wrong color, you get shot."

She said an earlier story that quoted her as saying the pilots who told of torture were "hypocrites and liars" was quoted out of context. to make it seem like I said all the POWs were lying.

"The men who are telling these stories comprised a tiny, tiny fraction of the number who came out of the prisons. There are only 5 or so telling the stories of the more than one who were released."

Mrs. Weiss commented, "The prisoners themselves say there were different forms of treatment meted out to different groups of men and that those who complained of the most treatment also were they provided it."

Swiss Air Crash Ends 'Shopping Trip'

ZURICH, SWITZERLAND (AP) — A British housewives' shopping trip to a Swiss spring fair turned into tragedy Tuesday with the crash of their chartered airliner in a blinding-snow hilltop.

Police said 104 of the 108 on board the flight from Bristol, England, perished. Sixty-three of the women were from the village of Ichlingen in southwest England. The village has a population of only about 1,000.

The four crewmen — Sudan's transport authority had a crew of seven based at the airport — died in the crash but all of the passengers survived.

It blazed that dumped it across of snow blocked the route of rescue teams for two hours. Men finally reached on foot and the twins were sent helicopters to fly out survivors.

Rescuers reached survivors' dangerous in the snow to reach the wreckage. One survivor, identified only as Gillian, was found alive and wandering some distance from the crash site.

Most of the passengers were housewives or their kin from a British women's club. Some had brought their children. Are on board were 16 British nurses and several British students and students.

The equivalent of 1ct for the flight to the spring fair to receive fixed for a day of shopping and then a return home to midnight.

The aircraft apparently overshot Zurich's airport and strung over this town in ruins to the south. One survivor said a wing of the plane hit a treetop and the aircraft spun to the ant and crashed.

Lebanon Premier Resigns

By HARRY DUNPHY
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP)—Premier Saeb Salam resigned Tuesday in the aftermath of the Israeli commando raids against Palestinian guerillas in the heart of Lebanon.

Salam submitted the resignation of his government to President Suleiman Franjieh after a Cabinet meeting called to discuss Monday's attacks that killed three top guerrilla leaders.

President Franjieh said he would decide on Wednesday whether to accept Salam's resignation. Salam has been in and out of the premiership since 1966.

Earlier in the day, Palestinian guerrilla leaders vowed revenge for the commando raids by escalating their war on Israel and possibly targeting U.S. firms in the Middle East for terrorist attacks.

The Palestine Liberation Organization charged that the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency helped carry out the attack, and said, "The resolution will continue to pursue the enemy everywhere, inside and outside occupied territory."

A spokesman at the U.S. Embassy denied the charge, and the State Department said in Washington that the charges were "utterly without foundation."

But the fact the guerrillas made the charge raised fears in some quarters that American consulate in the oil-rich Middle East might become targets of the guerrillas. Arab radio stations denounced the Israeli raid and said the United States was implicated.

Security measures around the U.S. Embassy were tightened after some 150 Palestinian students tried to march on the seaside building. Troops in armored cars and personnel carriers turned them back. Other troops guarded key spots in this Mediterranean city. Mass funerals were planned for the three slain Palestinian leaders Thursday.

In Tel Aviv, the chief of staff warned that Israel may hit the Lebanese capital again unless authorities curb the activities of armed Palestinian organizations.

"It is impossible to honor the sovereignty of Lebanon and its capital when there is complete freedom for the terrorists, their bases and commands in Lebanese territory," said Lt. Gen. David Elazar.

President Suleiman Franjieh summoned the Lebanese government into emergency session.

In the past, Lebanon has protested against Israeli raids to the U.N. Security Council and tightened control of its Palestinians.

The Israeli attack, the second in Lebanon since a cease-fire became effective in the north Feb. 21, occurred 12 hours after a Palestinian strike against Israel in Cyprus.

Nixon Requests New Trade Authority

By H. GREGORY NOBLE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Nixon asked Congress Tuesday for broad new trade negotiating authority that he said will significantly strengthen the country's bargaining position the world trade talks this fall.

Specifically, the President requested authority to eliminate, reduce or increase customs duties without congressional authority.

He asked the new authority to negotiate or conclude formals to trade, such as import quotas, and he asked to extend the most favored nation clause so trade to the Soviet Union and other countries without advance approval.

He also sought greater authority to raise barriers against countries which unreasonably or unjustifiably restrict imports of U.S. goods.

The proposals are contained in the administration's Trade Reform Act of 1973 that was sent to Congress Tuesday.

Trade negotiations with major U.S. trading partners open in Tokyo in September, and Nixon said Congress

"The authority I outline in my legislation the leverage and the flexibility they need to reduce or eliminate foreign barriers to American products.

"The President said barriers to trade, both at home and abroad, and the United States several billion dollars a year in higher consumer prices and inefficient use of resources.

The President indicated he shared the belief of economists that all countries benefit from a free flow of trade when he said.

"It is to be hoped that everyone will come to sell to others the goods in greatest supply most efficiently and to purchase the goods which other nations produce more efficiently."

He also said, "Steps toward a more open trading order generally have a favorable effect that are unfavorable impact on domestic jobs."

But he acknowledged that workers are sometimes displaced because of competition from imports and announced he was planning new legislation to help workers who lose their jobs through no fault of their own.

He said he would propose minimum federal standards for state unemployment insurance benefits and a comprehensive pension reform to help protect workers against loss of pension benefits due to loss of employment.

Atty. Gen. Backs Exec. Privilege

By JOHN CHADWICK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Atty. Gen. Richard G. Kleindienst testified Tuesday that under the constitutional separation of powers Congress cannot compel anyone in the executive branch to testify or produce documents against the will of the president.

At a hearing marked by sharply clashing views with Democratic senators, Kleindienst also predicted that any legislation passed by Congress to limit a president's assertion of executive privilege would be struck down by the courts.

Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, D-Maine, chairman of one of three Senate subcommittees conducting the hearings jointly, said no previous administration had asserted in as broad terms the right of the president to refuse information to Congress.

Kleindienst said that under "the [illegible] of the separation of powers," the president was not [illegible] and must have discretion to determine what information in the executive branch can be made available.

With the Watergate bugging affair in mind, the question also was raised of whether a president could refuse to permit an aide to testify if a congressional committee was investigating criminal activities he had knowledge even if he was not involved.

Kleindienst not only said a president has this power but also told the committee that the proper forum for the investigation and prosecution of crimes is the grand jury and the courts.

Kleindienst repeatedly emphasized that President Nixon, while refusing to permit his aides to be called before congressional committees for questioning, has said they will appear if summoned by a grand jury.

Sen. Sam J. Ervin, Jr., D-N.C., chairman of the Senate Special Watergate Investigating Committee, said he doesn't think that "executive privilege under any circumstances exists in this country."

He also said that a grand jury investigation is conducted by officials who hold office at the pleasure of the president and the proceedings are secret.

Anti-U.S. Germans Protest Thieu Visit

By HANS LEWALD

BONN, Germany (AP)—Leftist, anti-U.S. demonstrators, protesting a visit by Nguyen Van Thieu wrecked Bonn's historic City Hall Tuesday shortly before the South Vietnamese president called on President Gustav Heinemann.

Scores of demonstrators and policemen were injured in clashes outside City Hall.

During a 45-minute talk, Heinemann asked Thieu for better treatment of political prisoners. Press then asked political talks in South Korea and Formosa en route back to Saigon.

Thieu arrived in Bonn soon after noon on Saturday on rigging performance Hohdgard with West protesters from the West German capital performance 18th-century City Hall.

Flood Crisis Easing On Midwest Rivers

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Flood waters along the Missouri and upper Mississippi Rivers gradually receded Tuesday, but millions of acres of land were still flooded and likely to remain that way for some time.

The battle on the levees continued on two inhabited islands on the Mississippi and flooding continued along the Mississippi in some Southern states. But elsewhere the crisis appeared to have passed.

Residents of the Toledo, Ohio, area were recovering from Monday's Lake Erie flooding, which forced some 2,800 from their homes.

Wind gusts of up to 40 miles an hour sent waves up to six feet high against levees on Choteau Island, near Granite City, Ill., and Kaskaskia Island, about 50 miles south of St. Louis.

Kaskaskia's 300 residents were evacuated Monday, except for a nine-man volunteer patrol. Barges dumped tons of rocks around the levee to help break the force of the waves.

Further south, about 4,000 tons of concrete blocks were used to back up a dam which protects about 200 homes at Eagle Lake, near Vicksburg, Miss.

Some seven million acres of land in the Mississippi system were under water, according to Maj. Gen. Charles C. Noble, president of the Mississippi River commission. He estimated total damage along the system at $350 million.

Water Bill Veto Upheld

By CARL C. CRAFT
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—The House Tuesday sustained President Nixon's veto of a $120 million rural water and sewer grant bill that would have forced him to spend money appropriated by Congress.

It was the first test in the House this year of Nixon's veto power in the clash over the setting of national spending priorities.

The House mustered a 225-189 vote that fell 51 short of the two-thirds majority needed to override.

Voting to override Nixon's veto were 200 Democrats and 25 Republicans, while 161 Republicans were joined by 28 Democrats backing the President.

Nixon thus registered his wecond veto victory in a week. His veto of a bill authorizing a $2.6 billion program for rehabilitating the handicapped was sustained in the Senate last week and therefore never reached the House.

It takes overriding votes of both chambers of Congress to write a bill into law over the President's objections.

"We are face to face with a confrontation that has been in the making for some time," Speaker Carl Albert, D-Okla., told the House. "We are dealing, in a sense, with the basic constitutional system of this nation. We are dealing with the authority of the Congress of the United States to make the laws of the land."

Albert said there are many poor communities that "cannot possibly pay for the construction and maintenance of water and sewage plants."

But the House Republican Policy Committee, headed by Rep. John J. Rhodes, R-Ariz., said the action by the House would test Nixon's "policy of controlling government spending by eliminating overlapping government services, a policy designed to save all Americans from the twin scourges of inflation and higher taxes."

In January, Nixon killed the rural program as part of what he termed his effort to hold down taxes and combat inflation. The House had voted 297-94 last month to require the President to spend an estimated $120 million in the year ending June 30 and up to $330 million annually in the coming years.

Farmers Fight Meat Boycott

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

The farmer isn't taking the meat boycott lying down. He's waging his own war to convince consumers that food is still a good buy.

"Many farmers are talking to their neighbors, talking to people at the supermarket," said Bill Swank, head of the Ohio Farm Bureau Federation.

Swank said "things look like they're getting back to normal. People are buying again. If the boycott had any affect at all, it was short-lived."

The farm spokesman said that people didn't save any money by not buying meat. "Just look," he said "macaroni and cheese went up."

The Southern California Beef Association announced the start of an ad campaign to show people that cattlemen allegedly have absorbed cost increases for 20 years without corresponding raises in cattle prices.

Several consumer group leaders were invited to visit farms during and after the boycott to get a first-hand look at the problems of raising livestock.

Among them were Marilyn Hedds and Rosalie Whiting of Salt Lake City who visited farmers in Dodge City, Kan., at the invitation and expense of the city Chamber of Commerce.

Mrs. Beddo, one of the leaders of HELP —Housewives Expect Lower Prices, said Tuesday that her two-day trip "woke me up... and I saw the other side of it. I can see that they, the farmers, have had a bad winter. I guess they've really been hurting for years."

She said that HELP feels "the boycott is not the solution, but if there is a shortage of red meat as they tell us, we suggest that people cut down on their buying, ... until the supply builds up and the price comes down."

Mrs. Whiting, who belongs to SOS, an acronym for Save Our Sanity, said, "We've never been boycotting the farmer. We need the farmer and I think the cattlemen, the farmers and the consumers are getting the rotten end of the deal."

The Midcontinent Farmers Organization has passed a resolution calling for an alliance of farmers and consumers to work for laws to stabilize the market.

During the boycott itself, farm wives in some areas picketed stores or bought up meat to demonstrate what a good value it is.

A group of women from Minnesota bought more than $1,000 worth of meat in two Rochester stores.

Missouri farmers and stockmen bought over 1,000 pounds of beef, lamb and pork at a Kansas City supermarket and gave the meat away.

The meat boycott supporters were planning future strategy themselves.

N. Vietnam-A New Hope

HANOI (AP) - Twenty years of hardships, an austere national lifestyle regimented by the state and Communist ideology, the first taste of peace and new hope for a better future are written into the faces of North Vietnam.

There is the old pedicab driver, who has seen it all since the French-Indochina War, the old worker who has known a lifetime of backbreaking manual labor, the young girl with a camouflaged pith helmet who only a few weeks ago shot from trenches at American planes and goes shopping for plastic flowers today.

The people of Hanoi are intense and curious, sometimes smiling and charming, sometimes stonefaced and stubborn. They try to please, but want to be taken seriously. The man in the street is shy in contact with foreigners presumably because most foreigners are accompanied by government representatives.

It is impossible to read from their faces what they really think when a foreign visitor walks through their bustling capital or the ruins of last December's air raids. But faces old and young, men and women, show that North Vietnamese know no idle life in luxury but only hard work and discipline.

New Campus Pubs Appearing

By TERRY RYAN
Associated Press Writer

For generation of college students, a cold beer meant a trip to the local "college" bar or spiriting a bulky brown bag into the dorm. But times are changing.

Spurred by widespread lowering of the legal drinking age, colleges across the country are opening places on campus where students can drink. Almost without exception, they simply are called "the pub."

Most of the campus bars serve only beer and wine. Twenty-five cents for 12 ounces of beer is standard, a price usually slightly lower than off-campus establishments. College officials hold the liquor licenses in most cases, but student organizations own and operate a few.

Princeton University opened a pub last month. It's located in an old library building next to the new library.

"They come pouring out of there and over here like lemmings at 11 o'clock," said Bernard Gavin, the university official who runs the pub.

Like most campus pubs, the Princeton establishment sells pizza and sandwiches. It has pool tables, live music on week-ends, and even a female students' bouncer. On an average Saturday night, students go through 15 kegs of beer.

"The University decided it would rather provide a place here for the kids to drink instead of having them drive someplace else," said Gavin.

Since 1971, when the voting age in federal elections was lowered to 18, the legal age for drinking alcoholic beverage has been lowered in 19 states. Another dozen states are expected to do so by July.

A recent survey of 429 colleges, roughly one-fifth of those in the nation, found that 102 have a place on campus where students can drink. They range from a beer tap in the cafeteria at the University of Northern Iowa to full bar atop the new student union building on the University of Wisconsin's Milwaukee campus. Forty-one per cent of the schools with bars did not have them four years ago.

Westover AFB May Close

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP)- Westover Air Force Base in Chicopee may be closed by the Air Force, according to two Massachusetts congressmen.

"Information we have pieced together in Washington leads us to believe the Air Force is contemplating a major mission shift from B52 aircraft at Westover that might eventually lead to the closing of the base," they said in a statement Tuesday.

The two-Republican Rep. Silvio O. Conte and Democrat Rep. Edward P. Boland said they were told by the Pentagon that some Strategic Air Command SAC bases have been recommended for closing. They were not named.

Westover is a SAC base with the 99th Bombardment Wing as the Major Organization, plus the 90th Military Airlift Group of the Air Force Reserve.

The Pentagon said Tuesday it will announce a series of major military-base closings later this month, under a "major realignment." A spokesman said some bases will be closed while others are reduced.

The spokesman said the proposed military budget includes cuts of $39 million, accomplished by some base closings and reduced military employment.

Conte and Boland said the economic impact of Westover on the surrounding area is "enormous", with a total military and civilian payroll of $3 million a month.

Hemophiliacs Treat Selves

BOSTON (AP)-Boston researchers have developed a unique program to train hemophiliacs as paramedics, so they can treat themselves and cut their enormous medical bills almost in half.

Doctors at the Tufts University-New England Medical Center say patients suffering from hemophilia, a disease with which the blood will not clot, can be formally trained to make almost all their own therapeutic decisions without consulting their doctors.

The costs of treating hemophilia with special blood concentrates which contain clotting material runs between $10,000 and $22,000 a year on a national average.

The yearly management program at the New England Medical Center, already the lowest in the country at $6,000, was cut by more than 45 per cent with the new program.

Dr. Peter H. Levine, director of the center's Blood Coagulation Laboratory, told the American Academy of Pediatrics Tuesday at its spring meeting in Boston that the 45 patients in the year-old program lost an average of only seven days per year from school or work, compared with some 26 days a year before self-therapy.

Hemophilia is a hereditary blood disease which affects only males and for which there is no cure. About 25 of every 100,000 males suffer from a severe form of the disease. The blood either lacks or has inactive clotting factors which stop bleeding in a normal persons.

Dr. Levine said most hemophiliacs suffered not so much from cuts, bruises or complications in surgery, but from internal hemorrhaging caused by everyday activities.

In just walking, he said, tiny blood vessels break and fill bone joints with blood, which causes severe pain and can eventually cripple the patient.

With the new program, the patient and his family get intensive instruction on how to recognize signs of oncoming bleeding.

The patient is given a supply of the blood concentrate and taught how to inject himself at the first sign of trouble. This saves the cost of much hospitalization, a substantial portion of the hemophiliac's yearly treatment costs.

Local Woman Nominee For Book Award

By MARY SCHEIER
Associated Press Writer

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. (AP)- Literature is one field where few obstacles exist for qualified women, says novelist Eleanor Flexner, a nominee today for a National Book Award.

But other jobs the 64-year-old spinster held before an inheritance allowed her to write full-time made her "aware that certain things were just not going to be available to me."

Miss Flexner, nominated for her biography of Mary Wollstonecraft, an 18th century English women's rights leader, said she was reared in the early 1900s to be literated and stand on her own.

"I've always been aware of the enormous amount of effort and excellence it takes for a woman to succeed," she said. "She has to be better than a man, kind of like Jackie Robinson, the first black baseball player in the major leagues."

Miss Flexner's mother, Ann Crawford Flexner, was a playwright who did the original dramatization of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," a novelette about a woman fighting poverty and bad breaks.

Her father, Abraham, an educator, "always believed women should have a chance to do their thing," Miss Flexner said. "My sister and I were brought up to think in terms of career and work."

Miss Flexner, a history graduate of Swarthmore, says "not all the men I've met have necessarily been male chauvinist pigs."

But she adds, "There are many things about our culture where women are slighted. This is obvious in jokes, wisecracks and language."

"Obviously things are happening" in the woman's rights movement today, she continued, "but a great deal remains to be done. Women are still not getting equal pay or equal opportunity."

She said one "paradox" about women's lib that irks her is that "while men and women should be recognized as being equal they're also different. I feel the notion that both sexes should be drafted for military duty is just ridiculous. How are the women going to carry the children?"

Horsemeat Sales Up

WESTBROOK, Conn. (AP)- "Sales have been phenomenal," said Connecticut's first horsemeat salesman, Kent Carlson, as he summed up his first day's sales Tuesday afternoon.

Carlson made the switch from selling beef to horsemeat at his meat market because, "the cost of meat products has gone up just as much for retailers as the customers and I got tired of taking grief about the high prices from the customer."

On the advice of his wife who was brought up in Germany and ate horsemeat all her life, Carlson said that he decided to try it for himself.

"I went over to the Plainfield Packing Co. and picked up some samples," he said. "You couldn't tell the difference between it and beef, except that it didn't have as much fat as beef does."

Committee Claims Oil Discrimination

HARTFORD (AP)-Members of a special legislative committee investigating gasoline supplies in Connecticut said Tuesday they were convinced that major oil corporations were discriminating against independent dealers in the distribution of petroleum products.

The committee met behind closed doors for nearly three hours with representatives of the Connecticut Petroleum Association, which represents approximately 1,200 independent dealers throughout the state.

The committee has invited top management officials from five major oil companies-Shell, Mobile, Texaco, Amoco and Exxon-to meet with it Tuesday for further discussions.

Rep. David G. Sullivan, R-Bridgeport, said the committee was concerned over the effect supply quotas might have on competitive prices.

Thresher Officer Remembers Disaster

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press Writer

PORTSMOUTH, N.H. (AP) - Ten years after the submarine Thresher sank to the bottom of the Atlantic with 129 men, an officer who should have been aboard still shakes his head and says he can't believe it happened.

His boat, first of a new breed of fast, sophisticated nuclear submarines, developed trouble on a test dive 10 years ago today and never returned. It was the worst submarine disaster in the Navy's peacetime history, and led to development of a new system of submarine safety equipment.

For the Portsmouth Naval Shipyard men who stayed on shore while the vessel they built disappeared, the accident is still a nagging source of guilt and doubt.

"I think about it almost incessantly," said Raymond McCool. "The memories are staying awfully close."

Ten years ago, McCool was a 33-year-old lieutenant assigned to the newly built sub as a reactor control officer for its shakedown run 220 miles off Cape Cod. The night before, McCool's wife spilled rubbing liniment and burned her eyes. He was excused from what became the Thresher's last voyage.

"The biggest thing I've had to get over was that she really went down," McCool said. "That has been awfully hard to believe."

For McCool, who retired two years ago, the guilt comes from wondering what he could have done to keep the submarine from sinking.

"I can't help thinking that had I been there, I might have called the right shots so it wouldn't have happened," McCool said.

The submarine sank, according to a military board of inquiry, after a pipe burst in the engine room. Salt water sprayed around the room, hit some electrical wires and caused a short circuit.

The sub's electrical system failed, its nuclear reactor stopped and the vessel slowed and then sank 8,400 feet to the ocean floor. It probably collapsed from the intense water pressure, but the submarine and its victims could not be recovered.

If instantaneous action had been taken, McCool said, the submarine could have surfaced before it was too late. He could have given such an order.

"What happened was a small leak," said McCool. "Had action been taken immediately and its reserve steam used to get it going,she might have come back up."

McCool said some engineers and other shipyard employes who worked on the Thresher still wonder what they could have done to avert the tragedy.

"Everyone connected with it has some guilt feelings," he said. "You can't have something like this fall and not feel a little bit guilty about it."

As a result of the Thresher sinking, the Navy took apart a similar submarine piece by piece and looked for things that could go wrong.

It developed a "sub safe" package that helped submarines surface quicker when they are in trouble, as well as improve their construction and internal communications.

Circus At UMass

There will be a circus coming to UMass a week from today. We are giving advance notice to all faculty and students with little ones so you are able to make plans to attend.

The Emmett Kelly Jr. Circus featuring Gentle Ben the Bear, Tony the Wonderhorse, Clarence Jr. the Crosseyed Lion, and others will be presented at 3 p.m. and 7 p.m. on April 18, with an admission fee of $1.00 for all those under 14 years of age, and $2.00 for everyone else.

All proceeds from the circus will go to the support of those programs at the Belchertown State School which were dropped as a result of President Nixon's HEW cutbacks.

The circus is being sponsored by the Belchertown-Boltwood Project and tickets for the event are on sale at the R.S.O office in the Campus Center.

We urge as many people as possible to attend this event because we think it is supporting a worthwhile cause.

It should also be alot of fun.

About Religion

When I set out to write an editorial about religion, I found myself fumbling and grasping for words that would be the least insulting to everyone. Consequently, my third draft amounted to barely two paragraphs, so I decided to scrap that idea and insult them anyway. Having decided upon this course of action, I then set about the task of trying to define religion. After turning to my Random House Dictionary and, needless to say, finding nothing, I decided on the most all-inclusive definition that I could put together. I concluded that religion was that set of beliefs that make up the basis of that person's ideology.

Then I thought to myself, "That's ridiculous. That's like defining nothing as something that's not there." So I decided to forgo the explanation and allow the reader to create his or her own definition. After all the definition is part of the religion itself.

What I'm trying to say is that there are, in alphabetical order, Buddhism, Christianity, Confucianism, Hinduism, Islam, Judaism, Shinto, and Taoism - and those are just the big ones. Then there are the millions of smaller religious groups that range from Brother Julius to Sat Guru Maharah Ji, and even some that place total belief in one's self. Now I'm not saying that any one religion is wrong or that there's anything wrong with having a variety of religions. To the contrary, my criticism of religion lies within the basic notion that most people and religious groups seem to have - that theirs is the only way. The insistence that one set of beliefs is more "right" than any others is nonsense, but is accepted by almost the entire human race, whatever their religion might be. This wouldn't be so important if human nature wasn't so adamant and inflexible towards its beliefs.

This inflexibility towards religion has brought about more death and destruction than any other cause in history. From the Crusades to the current crisis in Northern Ireland, and from the crucifixion of Christ to the slaughter of the American Indians, no cause has aroused more violence and emotion or has influence more decisions than that of religion.

In short, what I've tried to say is "Get it together, world! You're not completely right and neither am I."

So next time somebody comes up to you and tells you what they really believe, don't shut them out. Listen to what they have to say and point out to them where you disagree. If you digest only a part of someone else's religion, then you've added your own. . .

"I am the Lord thy God, who brought thee out of the land of Egypt. Thou shalt have no other gods before me."

Sometimes It's A Drag

As I was going about my nightly business in the Collegian office two nights ago, I was interrupted by a telephone call from the National Collegiate Press Service in Denver. The NCPS is an organization that does a lot of polling of college newspaper editors around the country, the results of which are released periodically for the general interest of the college press. What they were up to two nights ago was a survey of the issues on campus that are currently "hot", or centers of controversy on campus.

I went down the list of things that were being talked about here, such as the unionization of faculty, the various demonstrations on the Wounded Knee and Cambodia issues, and the Governor's reorganization of higher education, but as I was listing them, I began to realize that they really weren't of concern to the average student here by any means. The unionization and reorganization issues were the concern of faculty, administration, and student government. The national political issues were being pursued by such dying monument to the ultra-left assininity of the late 60's as the Young Socialist Alliance and the Young Workers Liberation League. In any event, students as a whole, the people who we all pass by on our way to classes every day, really don't give a damn.

I let the whole issue slip my mind for a day. It had spent a hell of a lot of time occupying my mind in the last three semesters, and this was nothing different. Until last night. Again I was going about my regular duties at the newspaper. I sat down for a few minutes to discuss today's editorial pages with the people laying them out, then picked up a big bound copy of Collegians, containing all the editions from the Spring of 1970. I opened it up to the middle of February, to a front page containing an almost full length picture of former Vice-President Hubert Humphrey being escorted from the podium at the Cage after a couple of hundred Umies had shouted him down. I noticed a large picture in the paper of a bunch of those UMies. My brother was in the middle.

The picture set off kind of a wave of reaction in me, and suddenly the sum total of all the thought I'd given to the issue (or non-issue, depending on your perspectives) of what students at UMass in 1973 are about seemed to come clear.

It's really kind of a shame. People here don't do anything anymore. Tuition is threatening to go up here next year and put the costs of a UMass education out of sight for most of us. The faculty is about to unionize and wipe out student (and a lot of administration) input into the determination of our own lives here at UMass, which leads me to the theoretical end of the issue.

I run this newspaper, but I can't get the personnel to cover the news, and many of those who do cover it don't do a good job. Of course, they're not professional, but the fact remains that it's impossible for me to do my job right under the present circumstances. It's frustrating as hell.

The Student Senate, potentially the strongest and most productive arm of Student Government here, is a shambles of ego and status oriented people. In order to get a budget so that there will be a newspaper next year, I have to go to them. We clash, and are alienated by each other. So two out of a very small handful of active groups on campus are in conflict.

Larry Ladd, President of the Student Government Association, is as frustrated at the prospects of getting his house in order as I am with mine. We can't understand why students don't get off their collective asses, but at times we can't see reasons why we should either.

It's amazing how the place has changed in the last three years. If the Vice-President of the United States came here today, people would probably stay home and smoke dope, play whist, or watch All in The Family. Fraternities are coming back strong, and the race for the old time things that they're associated with is coming with them. Should we all retreat and just look out for ourselves? Are things so bad that we'll allow people to step on us, as long as they don't push down too hard and as long as they don't stand between us and our Corvette? I doubt it, but I'm in a minority. The student in Denver who was interviewing me found it hard to believe that a college campus in the middle of the only state to go for McGovern is like that. I was sorry to burst his balloon.

Maybe I'm pursuing the wrong path. Maybe Larry Ladd is an anachronism. It's hard to say, but I can say one thing. The thoughts and trends proliferating through this campus lately sicken me.

Meat Junkies

By JOYCE KOSOFSKY

Last weekend, before the boycott, Tom sent me to pick up 40 pounds of sausage meat for Sunday brunch. It cost 88¢ a pound.

The week before that, sausage meat was 88¢ a pound. This week sausage meat was 88¢ a pound, and from the information given, I think that next week sausage meat will probably cost 88¢ a pound.

Was the boycott worth it?

Damn right it was. The question of whether meat prices will actually change is not the point any longer. America has had her first meatless week, with some very interesting results. Maybe the boycott will lower meat prices, which would be very nice, but the importance of the boycott showed the American public that we needn't be dependent upon meat as part of the daily diet. Maybe the boycott has released the habits of a few meat junkies.

We all survived the meat boycott quite sufficiently, I think. We also learned that a meatless diet can be beneficial in many ways. Without relying constantly on meat for the main part of the meal, we can now realize that other foods will suffice quite nicely in its place. Our appreciation for meat substitutes, such as fish, chicken, cheeses, etc., becomes greater. Suddenly, foods such as fresh vegetables, and nuts, and fruits taste good. Our taste buds have now been awakened to bigger and better worlds of new things to eat. And everybody loves to eat.

O.K., now that we're not meat junkies any longer we can well afford to be choosy in what we buy. If the price of meat seems too high, then we simply won't pay it and we'll buy something else. This will surely keep the meat industry on its toes. They'll have to please the what we buy will help to support the other farmers, the poultry industry and the fisherman. The price of meat should not really be the relevant issue, the fact is that the boycott showed that you really don't need meat to exist.

Canada proved to the world that you can feed the masses without meat for very little. As part of the boycott, she produced a feast for fifteen people consisting of vegetables, cheese, pastas, salads, soups, breads, etc, etc., in many combinations. Not only was this meal nutritious, filling and inexpensive, it happened to be quite delicious as well. With all we could eat, and a little bit left over, the meal cost just about $1 per person and it wouldn't have even cost that much if paper plates weren't used.

Barbara and I did something very similar a while back, but we cheated a bit. We served forty-pounds of chicken with vegetables, fruit salad and wine for just $40. And we even made a quarter's profit on the meal.

So you really don't need meat to exist. This past week proved it. In fact, if America weren't meat junkies in the first place, restaurants such as McDonald's would never have been allowed to occur. And if McDonald's never existed, then they couldn't have given half a million dollars for the Nixon re-election campaign. And if they couldn't have given half a million dollars for the re-election then....Well, think about it the next time you want a quarter-pounder, it really isn't such a bargain.

All letters are subject to editing, for either content or space, according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed.

Letters To The Editor

Gymnastic Clarifications

To The Editors:

This letter is specifically to Tom Hamel in response to his letter concerning the women's gymnastics team in the April 9th issue of the Daily Collegian.

To identify myself, I am the Mrs. Kasavana that you took the liberty to refer to in your letter. I don't recall giving you permission to use that name, it wasn't used in the article to which you referred, and you have no right to use it in your letter. As a gymnast, and student, I have chosen to use my maiden name, which is both my legal right and none of your business.

To answer your first question, "Then why has women's gymnastics coach Mike Kasavana written all the articles about the women's team?" First I will clarify, since you obviously don't know, that Mike Kasavana is the voluntary assistant coach, and Virginia Evans is the official head coach. Next, I will inform you that the only way our team has ever gotten coverage in the Collegian was because people close to the team have submitted the articles and pictures. Another item I'm sure you are unaware of is that women's athletics has never been designated specific reporters or photographers. If the articles are not written by someone interested in the team, we don't get coverage. The person who wrote the articles last year was closely affiliated with the team, but he graduated. Mike Kasavana took the job because no one else volunteered.

To dispute another of your points, "Those officials did not think our girls were that great," I'd like to know how you got that information considering one of our members tied for first place in the all-around, I received the highest score of the entire meet, we had the most individuals in the finals competition, and our team placed second by only .15 points. Your comment "I'd be willing to bet that our girls will get the same kind of scores from the country's top officials at nationals," also deserves some attention. Until you know specifics about judging gymnastics, or about women's gymnastics, or until you've worked with this team in preparation for competition, you have no authority to predict our scores. I'd like to remind you that the team score of the defending national champions, Springfield College, was 100.95 at the Easterns, and that UMass totalled 100.80. Both of these scores fall into that "100 point range . . . where our girls belong." Of course we belong there. In women's gymnastics 100 is a superior score, and our team is one of the few in the country that have received it.

We don't pretend to be or consider ourselves "little darlings," Tom Hamel. We are a team of women athletes working our hardest and performing our best, not only hoping to reward ourselves, but to positively represent this university. At every meet this year we put out everything we had, whether the results lived up to your expectations or not. I'm sorry that we must score a specific number in order to deserve your support.

As for myself, I resent the fact that you take the authority to deduce my individual feelings from a newspaper article. My name was not signed to that article, therefore, you have no right to state that I, personally, was insulted by the scores. You also have no right to refer to the relationship I have with Mike Kasavana either as coach and/or husband. My marital status is none of your business and should not be of concern to you.

The fact that Mike Kasavana took care to specify in his article that the opinions were his, and that his name appeared on the article, should prove to you that he was exercising his legal right to express his own opinion.

In the future I suggest you direct your criticism of newspaper articles to the writer and stop degrading the efforts and hard work of an entire team.

Margaret Combs Kasavana

I Hate John Wayne

To The Editor:

You are Wright, Alan K. I guess I spent a little bit too much time trying to make my lead as entertaining as possible. It is too bad that there are still people in this country when we have to worry about misconstruing sarcasm for specific intent. (Mr. Wright not included). Sometimes, it is sarcasm such as mine that is the best type of medicine to cure whatever ails the bigots in our society.

P.S. I hate John Wayne.

Be Prepared

To The Editor:

Once again, Spring has arrived and thoughts turn to one thing—SPRING DAY. Rest assured that I have returned from my prolonged hibernation to chair that group which must now rank in importance with the University's Board of Trustees in the hearts of all UMies, the Spring Day Committee. On one spring day not far in the future, I will drop from the sky over the stadium amidst the ringing of the Chapel bells and with liquor license in hand to inaugurate that most festive of holidays.

So be prepared to drop your books and forget your classes to celebrate that happy day.

Financial Equality

To The Editor:

The members of the Environmental Standards Committee/Central Area are concerned about the proposal by the Rents & Fees Committee of the Student Senate designed to equalize rent fees on all parts of campus within the next few years. The ESC/CA is composed of representatives of residence halls such as Baker, Brett, Brooks, Butterfield, German, Hills, etc. It is the feeling of this committee that any measures to standardize rents would do a great injustice to many of the residents of Central Area, and to other parts of the campus as well.

For the most part, the dorms in the Central Area do not compare physically to dorms in Sylvan, Orchard Hill and Southwest, nor can they be expected to. Central Area is obviously much older than these other areas. Years of use and abuse of the older dorms has caused them to depreciate. It is understood that renovation projects such as paint jobs and replacement of furniture has made many of them quite livable and in some cases comfortable, but maintenance of a dorm does not bring it back to its original condition.

Therefore, we cannot agree with the Rents & Fees proposal. There is no way to justify the idea that living conditions in older residential areas are financially equal to those conditions in the newer areas. Also, we feel somewhat that this is a scheme to fill the vacancies in Sylvan. If so, we cannot justify it because it is not straightforward.

Finally, we continue to support efforts to maintain differential rents from residence hall to residence hall, depending on the environmental conditions of the hall.

Boycott Shell

To The Editor:

Occupational health and safety has been a major concern of oil refinery workers this year. Refining oil is hazardous work—workers come in daily contact with 1600 chemicals, most of which have never been researched. Workers have neither warnings as to the health effects of the chemicals they work with nor guaranteed compensation for any ill effects suffered because of exposure to chemicals.

To improve workplace safety and health conditions, the Oil Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union (OCAW), in their contracts negotiated with American Oil Companies this year, has demanded periodic surveys of refineries to uncover potentially dangerous materials and situations. Workers would have access to these surveys. The union has asked for periodic company-paid physical exams for all workers, which might save them from serious illness.

Shell Oil Company is the only major oil company which has refused to accept the OCAW's demands. In response to this refusal, 5000 OCAW members went on strike at Shell refineries in the last week in January. Because Shell can operate its refineries at 90 percent capacity during the strike, by itself a worker walkout cannot significantly affect the company.

To heighten the pressure on Shell, the union has called for a boycott of Shell products. Consumers can effectively boycott Shell gasoline, motor oil, pesticides such as aldrin and dieldrin, and the Shell No-Pest Strip. The OCAW has also urged Shell credit card holders to return their cards to Shell, and to request that the company return the card only after the strike has been settled. Credit cards can be returned to Shell at P.O. Box 88, Tulsa, Oklahoma. This strike is the beginning of a new awareness of environmental issues by both organized labor and environmental activists, and it could be the realization of a long dreamed-of alliance between workers and environmentalists.

Coalition for Environmental Quality

Get Along Without Shell

To The Editor:

Together with numerous other UMass students, I received a letter recently from the Shell Oil Company asking if I would accept a credit card from them. I returned their letter with a note saying that until Shell settled a strike by some 4,000 of its workers over the issue of whether or not employees can participate in the decision making process on such issues as a safe and healthful workplace environment, I could go along without their products.

Shell is only one of two companies which have refused to bargain collectively with their employees on this issue. Standard Oil of California is the other.

Students interested in more information may write to the Oil, Chemical, and Atomic Workers, Box 2812, Denver, Colorado 80201, for a free brochure.

Stop Complaining

To The Editor:

This is in response to Jerald Howard's letter in which he complained of "being rudely awakened by a bunch of peckerheads from the Physical Plant sawing down a dead tree at eight o'clock in the morning."

Things are certainly tough all over. I see no reason why the Physical Plant workers shouldn't be cutting trees at such an hour for this is the time that their workday begins. If such a job was assigned and they sat around waiting for all the students to wake up, they would not only be waiting all day but also be criticized for not doing their job! I believe that this is a case where socalled students "rights" are not in order. I suggest, Mr. Howard, that you stop complaining and making absurd threats. If all else fails, wear ear plugs to bed.

Meat Junkies

By JOYCE KOSOFSKY

Last weekend, before the boycott, Tom sent me to pick up 40 pounds of sausage meat for Sunday brunch. It cost 88¢ a pound.

The week before that, sausage meat was 88¢ a pound. This week sausage meat was 88¢ a pound, and from the information given, I think that next week sausage meat will probably cost 88¢ a pound.

Was the boycott worth it?

Damn right it was. The question of whether meat prices will actually change is not the point any longer. America has had her first meatless week, with some very interesting results. Maybe the boycott will lower meat prices, which would be very nice, but the importance of the boycott showed the American public that we needn't be dependent upon meat as part of the daily diet. Maybe the boycott has released the habits of a few meat junkies.

We all survived the meat boycott quite sufficiently, I think. We also learned that a meatless diet can be beneficial in many ways. Without relying constantly on meat for the main part of the meal, we can now realize that other foods will suffice quite nicely in its place. Our appreciation for meat substitutes, such as fish, chicken, cheeses, etc., becomes greater. Suddenly, foods such as fresh vegetables, and nuts, and fruits taste good. Our taste buds have now been awakened to bigger and better worlds of new things to eat. And everybody loves to eat.

O.K., now that we're not meat junkies any longer we can well afford to be choosy in what we buy. If the price of meat seems too high, then we simply won't pay it and we'll buy something else. This will surely keep the meat industry on its toes. They'll hav to please the its toes. They'll have to please the what we buy will help to support the other farmers, the poultry industry and the fisherman. The price of meat should not really be the relevant issue, the fact is that the boycott showed that you really don't need meat to exist.

Claudia proved to the world that you can feed the masses without meat for very little. As part of the boycott, she produced a feast for fifteen people consisting of vegetables, cheese, pastas, salads, soups, breads, etc, etc., in many combinations. Not only was this meal nutritious, filling and inexpensive, it happened to be quite delicious as well. With all we could eat, and a little bit left over, the meal cost just about $1 per person and it wouldn't have even cost that much if paper plates weren't used.

Barbara and I did something very similar a while back, but we cheated a bit. We served forty-pounds of chicken with vegetables, fruit salad and wine for just $40. And we even made a quarter's profit on the meal.

So you really don't need meat to exist. This past week proved it. In fact, if America weren't meat junkies in the first place, restaurants such as McDonald's would never have been allowed to occur. And if McDonald's never existed, then they couldn't have given half a million dollars for the Nixon re-election campaign. And if they couldn't have given half a million dollars for the re-election then....Well, think about it the next time you want a quarter-pounder, it really isn't such a bargain.

About Religion

When I set out to write an editorial about religion, I found myself fumbling and grasping for words that would be the least insulting to everyone. Consequently, my third draft amounted to barely two paragraphs, so I decided to scrap that idea and insult them anyway. Having decided upon this course of action, I then set about the task of trying to define religion. After turning to my Random House Dictionary and, needless to say, finding nothing, I decided on the most all-inclusive definition that I could put together. I concluded that religion was that set of beliefs that make up the basis of that person's ideology.

Then I thought to myself, "That's ridiculous. That's like defining nothing as something that's not there." So I decided to forgo the explanation and allow the reader to create his or her own definition. After all the definition is part of the religion itself.

What I'm trying to say is that there are, in alphabetical order, Buddhism, Christianity, Confucianism, Hinduism, Islam, Judaism, Shinto, and Taoism - and those are just the big ones. Then there are the millions of smaller religious groups that range from Brother Julius to Sat Guru Maharah Ji, and even some that place total belief in one's self. Now I'm not saying that any one religion is wrong or that there's anything wrong with having a variety of religions. To the contrary, my criticism of religion lies within the basic notion that most people and religious groups seem to have - that theirs is the only way. The insistence that one set of beliefs is more "right" than any others is nonsense, but is accepted by almost the entire human race, whatever their religion might be. This wouldn't be so important if human nature wasn't so adament and inflexible towards its beliefs.

This inflexibility towards religion has brought about more death and destruction than any other cause in history. From the Crusades to the current crisis in Northern Ireland, and from the crucifiction of Christ to the slaughter of the American Indians, no cause has aroused more violence and emotion or has influence more decisions than that of religion.

In short, what I've tried to say is "Get it together, world! You're not completely right and neither am I."

So next time somebody comes up to you and tells you what they really believe, don't shut them out. Listen to what they have to say and point out to them where you disagree. If you digest only a part of someone else's religion, then you've aided your own. .

"I am the Lord thy God, who brought thee out of the land of Egypt. Thou shalt have no other gods before me."

Letters To The Editor

Gymnastic Clarifications

To The Editors:

This letter is specifically to Tom Hamel in response to his letter concerning the women's gymnastics team in the April 9th issue of the Daily Collegian.

To identify myself, I am the Mrs. Kasavana that you took the liberty to refer to in your letter. I don't recall giving you permission to use that name, it wasn't used in the article to which you referred, and you have no right to use it in your letter. As a gymnast, and student, I have chosen to use my maiden name, which is both my legal right and none of your business.

To answer your first question, "Then why has women's gymnastics coach Mike Kasavana written all the articles about the women's team?" First I will clarify, since you obviously don't know, that Mike Kasavana is the voluntary assistant coach, and Virginia Evans is the official head coach. Next, I will inform you that the only way our team has ever gotten coverage in the Collegian was because people close to the team have submitted the articles and pictures. Another item I'm sure you are unaware of is that women's athletics has never been designated specific reporters or photographers. If the articles are not written by someone interested in the team, we don't get coverage. The person who wrote the articles last year was closely affiliated with the team, but he graduated. Mike Kasavana took the job because no one else volunteered.

To dispute another of your points, "Those officials did not think our girls were that great," I'd like to know how you got that information considering one of our members tied for first place in the all-around, I received the highest score of the entire meet, we had the most individuals in the finals competition, and our team placed second by only .15 points. Your comment "I'd be willing to bet that our girls will get the same kind of scores from the country's top officials at nationals," also deserves some attention. Until you know specifics about judging gymnastics, or about women's gymnastics, or until you've worked with this team in preparation for competition, you have no authority to predict our scores. I'd like to remind you that the team score of the defending national champions, Springfield College, was 100.95 at the Easterns, and that UMass totalled 100.80. Both of these scores fall into that "100 point range . . . where our girls belong." Of course we belong there. In women's gymnastics 100 is a superior score, and our team is one of the few in the country that have received it.

We don't pretend to be or consider ourselves "little darlings," Tom Hamel. We are a team of women athletes working our hardest and performing our best, not only hoping to reward ourselves, but to positively represent this university. At every meet this year we put out everything we had, whether the results lived up to your expectations or not. I'm sorry that we must score a specific number in order to deserve your support.

As for myself, I resent the fact that you take the authority to deduce my individual feelings from a newspaper article. My name was not signed to that article, therefore, you have no right to state that I, personally, was insulted by the scores. You also have no right to refer to the relationship I have with Mike Kasavana either as coach and/or husband. My marital status is none of your business and should not be of concern to you.

The fact that Mike Kasavana took care to specify in his article that the opinions were his, and that his name appeared on the article, should prove to you that he was exercising his legal right to express his own opinion.

In the future I suggest you direct your criticism of newspaper articles to the writer and stop degrading the efforts and hard work of an entire team.

Margaret Combs Kasavana

Be Prepared

To The Editor:

Once again, Spring has arrived and thoughts turn to one thing—SPRING DAY. Rest assured that I have returned from my prolonged hibernation to chair that group which must now rank in importance with the University's Board of Trustees in the hearts of all UMies, the Spring Day Committee. On one spring day not far in the future, I will drop from the sky over the stadium amidst the ringing of the Chapel bells and with liquor license in hand to inaugurate that most festive of holidays.

So be prepared to drop your books and forget your classes to celebrate that happy day.

Financial Equality

To The Editor:

The members of the Environmental Standards Committee/Central Area are concerned about the proposal by the Rents & Fees Committee of the Student Senate designed to equalize rent fees on all parts of campus within the next few years. The ESC/CA is composed of representatives of residence halls such as Baker, Brett, Brooks, Butterfield, Gorman, Hills, etc. It is the feeling of this committee that any measures to standardize rents would do a great injustice to many of the residents of Central Area, and to other parts of the campus as well.

For the most part, the dorms in the Central Area do not compare physically to dorms in Sylvan, Orchard Hill and Southwest, nor can they be expected to. Central Area is obviously much older than these other areas. Years of use and abuse of the older dorms has caused them to depreciate. It is understood that renovation projects such as paint jobs and replacement of furniture has made many of them quite livable and in some cases comfortable, but maintenance of a dorm does not bring it back to its original condition.

Therefore, we cannot agree with the Rents & Fees proposal. There is no way to justify the idea that living conditions in older residential areas are financially equal to those conditions in the newer areas. Also, we feel somewhat that this is a scheme to fill the vacancies in Sylvan. If so, we cannot justify it because it is not straightforward.

Finally, we continue to support efforts to maintain differential rents from residence hall to residence hall, depending on the environmental conditions of the hall.

The Central Area Environmental Standards Committee

I Hate John Wayne

To The Editor.

You are Wright, Alan K. I guess I spent a little bit too much time trying to make my lead as entertaining as possible. It is too bad that there are still people in this country whom we have to worry about misconstruing sarcasm for specific intent (Mr. Wright not included). Sometimes, it is sarcasm such as mine that is the best type of medicine to cure whatever ails the bigots in our society.

P.S. I hate John Wayne.

Boycott Shell

To The Editor:

Occupational health and safety has been a major concern of oil refinery workers this year. Refining oil is hazardous work—workers come in daily contact with 1600 chemicals, most of which have never been researched. Workers have neither warnings as to the health effects of the chemicals they work with nor guaranteed compensation for any ill effects suffered because of exposure to chemicals.

To improve workplace safety and health conditions, the Oil Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union (OCAW), in their contracts negotiated with American Oil Companies this year, has demanded periodic surveys of refineries to uncover potentially dangerous materials and situations. Workers would have access to these surveys. The union has asked for periodic company- paid physical exams for all workers, which might save them from serious illness.

Shell Oil Company is the only major oil company which has refused to accept the OCAW's demands. In response to this refusal, 5000 OCAW members went on strike at Shell refineries in the last week in January. Because Shell can operate its refineries at 90 percent capacity during the strike, by itself a worker walkout cannot significantly affect the company.

To heighten the pressure on Shell, the union has called for a boycott of Shell products. Consumers can effectively boycott Shell gasoline, motor oil, pesticides such as aldrin and dieldrin, and the Shell No-Pest Strip. The OCAW has also urged Shell credit card holders to return their cards to Shell, and to request that the company return the card only after the strike has been settled. Credit cards can be returned to Shell at P.O. Box 80, Tulsa, Oklahoma. This strike is the beginning of a new awareness of environmental issues by both organized labor and environmental activists, and it could be the realization of a long dreamed-of alliance between workers and environmentalists.

Get Along Without Shell

To The Editor:

Together with numerous other UMass students, I received a letter recently from the Shell Oil Company asking if I would accept a credit card from them. I returned their letter with a note saying that until Shell settled a strike by some 4,000 of its workers over the issue of whether or not employees can participate in the decision making process on such issues as a safe and healthful workplace environment, I could go along without their products.

Shell is only one of two companies which have refused to bargain collectively with their employees on this issue. Standard Oil of California is the other.

Students interested in more information may write to the Oil, Chemical, and Atomic Workers, Box 2812, Denver, Colorado 80201, for a free brochure.

Stop Complaining

To The Editor:

This is in response to Jerald Howard's letter in which he complained of "being rudely awakened by a bunch of peckerheads from the Physical Plant sawing down a dead tree at eight o'clock in the morning."

Things are certainly tough all over. I see no reason why the Physical Plant workers shouldn't be cutting trees at such an hour for this is the time that their workday begins. If such a job was assigned and they sat around waiting for all the students to wake up, they would not only be waiting all day but also be criticized for not doing their job! I believe that this is a case where socalled students "rights" are not in order. I suggest, Mr. Howard, that you stop complaining and making absurd threats. If all else fails, wear ear plugs to bed.

A Parable

By BRIAN FITZGERALD

The following is a satire on those who claim to be knowledgable in the field of Religion but who cannot explain their beliefs logically to anyone who asks. These people usually fall back on a "Do as I say, not as I do" type attitude (which they can't explain) and actually try to make their kids believe them. There wouldn't be anything wrong with this philosophy except for the fact that the rules which govern the people who follow this kind of a life come out of a huge, inaccessible building. "A building" (we are told) "which symbolizes that which cannot be questioned." Shit, I'd question the hell out of it if I could get near it.

I am not speaking of a specific religion. Every religion has it's own dogma, it's own "building" so to speak. I am referring to those at the top of each religious hierarchy who can't explain why they believe something to be so—simply because they probably learned it from somebody who couldn't either.

With that in mind, consider the following parable a satire on those mentioned above.

He was lying on the pavement, blood trickling from his mouth. He was losing consciousness. Above him, the truck driver stared in disbelief at what he had done. The man on the ground realized this, forgave him, and lost consciousness.

He found himself in a black void where nothing existed. He knew that he was in a place where there was nothing, but he didn't know what to do. So he began to think, and as he thought, he realized that the only things that did exist were his thoughts. He thought of light and so it was, it was all in his mind of course, but if it wasn't in his mind—it didn't exist. He began to realize the possibilities. He remembered what the earth looked like, and what it sounded like and all of the other senses that told him what reality was. He knew that he would need them to give them to that hopelessly pathetic creature he would fashion after himself when he finally got around to it. Once he realized this, he decided to get around to it.

And so man merely had to be thought up to be created. And with his infinite wisdom and sense of humor, he called each of his creations not people, but 'actors' making the entire world he had thought up a 'stage'. And the 'play' began.

At first, each of the actors thought that it was he who had written the play, and many of them died trying to prove it. Some actors were clever and hid from their fellow actors behind huge 'causes' which were self-invented and should have been seen as an attempt to establish himself as The Writer, but as their act was so good, when questioned about what they were, they acted right out of it.

With everyone acting like this, it isn't hard to see how chaos set it. A world in turmoil.

Here is where he decided to think up the actor that would change for the better those who would listen to him. It wounded fair enough.

He created this actor with the ability to communicate what he had to say so well that the deaf heard him and the blind saw what he meant and he talked to the dumb, and the dumb seeing all of this, knew they could talk back.

And he went to those actors who hid behing their 'laws' and he asked them exactly what this 'cause' is that they shout so loud about and hide behind. But they could not act their way out of it since he was a better actor and convinced them of it so that they understood. He corrected those who listened to him by showing two actors (who were alone at the time) that if they both spoke (although alone) as if a third were actually present, any other actor could come across their scene and instantly understand the plot. As he said this, one of the actors, a pregnant woman, realized that she was about to give birth, and she realized why he had said this to her at that time.

Before long he established his reputation. Other actors who would not listen to him or see him or feel him became jealous of him, and some banded together to form a union against him. But it was no use, as he was as great an actor as them all. Eventually, everyone came to the conclusion that it was useless to play opposite him, and most laid down their masks at his feet in humility and embarrassment. But as they did so, they became aware of the logic that had been used on them, and the logic involved in transmitting that knowledge to someone else.

And those who laid their masks down realized afterwards that beneath the mask of an actor had been the mask of a Writer all along.

True Peace

By MARK L. MAWRENCE

What is the fundamental purpose of our lives? To be at peace. There are many avenues we may follow for this objective, but how do we know when we have found it? By our happiness and ease with life, and finding the rhythm and tranquility within ourselves that is constantly being reflected in this wonderful creation.

There is much hope in this world, but little clarification of how to systematically approach it. People are so terribly fragmented today, and a collective means to approach peace and harmony seems so far away. Men for centuries have been coming down with logical, intellectual and rational interpretations of God, truth, and the ideal society. What was their essential purpose? Peace for man. The reason it seems that none of them have apparently worked, is because they have been formed by very complex minds, usually with large egos thirsting for posterity. Many people have worked very hard in many ways for peace but we have been dealing for so long with a society and institutions that exist to perpetuate themselves and care of little else. These things are all of an exterior nature, societies, ideologies, nationalities, and the like. They originate within-yes-but they filter through our minds which are tremendous tools but poor masters.

There have been many wonderful movements in the past, and present, but they all tend to be subjective, it is so hard not to be. When man attempts to interpret with his mind, something that is actually very simple and fundamental, the reflection of a complex, confused society inevitably results. Look at children when they are playing, pure bliss. They have no need to rationalize their existence, they are happy and content. Then we "educate" them.

Truth is really a very simple thing, there is one pure and absolute force that is keeping every brother and sister on this planet alive, regardless of race or ideology. This force is holding the universe together in a perfection that is absolute and constant, not variating, not subject to interpretation, but pure and absolute. This force has always been here and it always will be, regardless of men's minds, and what they construe it to be. This force is energy, and pure love, as a constant that never changes is a total thing, that encompasses all understanding.

Guru Maharaj Ji has come to reveal this to everyone, not to give you anything but to reveal to you what is already there. This knowledge that He imparts is very simple and subtle but very powerful. We predicate our lives on so many things for happiness, and understanding, but so many of them are finite, they go away, or we grow tired of them. We need something that brings us peace and bliss. Happiness is such an easy thing to have when you don't have to surround yourself with material objects or rationalize a frame of mind for. This knowledge is so beautiful, and you don't have to change a thing to receive it. Your lives can remain exactly the same. but you realize that no matter what you do or where you go it is with you, twenty-four hours a day.

Guru Maharaj Ji is a fully enlightened master. He has fully realized this truth, and has been imparting it since the age of eight. The knowledge doesn't cost a dime; air is free, how can you charge for truth? Over ten million people have received this knowledge, and the numbers increase greatly every day. We all want this peace; we see glimpses of it often in music, nature, wonderful people, and many things.

But it is so hard to grasp it, and retain it, and apply it to everything you know and do. Our crazy minds complicate so much of what is a simple, fundamental, and beautiful thing, love.

Until men can associate with a universal element that really does bind them together, and helps explain this world of ours, they will be confused. This confusion has and will manifest itself in war, evil, and social injustice, until this truth can be found.

If you can find this peace, retain it and live in happiness, that's beautiful. Guru Maharaj Ji wants this for everyone. He says "search for the four corners of the earth for this peace, but keep me in reserve, as I can reveal it to you".

Please come to our meetings that are held every week; signs are always posted. Come and listen to people who have received this knowledge; our purpose is to spread it the world over to everyone. Be skeptical as you may, but please come and ask questions. We will try to answer them all. Love is the only way.

It is springtime. A wonderful season of rebirth and awakening. It's time for men to awaken to the binding truth that will indeed enable us all to realize freshness, and unity, in true brotherhood.

The United Black Artists of Cornell University are shown practicing for the theatrical production "Blackness is a Rainbow," to be presented at UMass in the Campus Center Auditorium on Saturday, April 14.

"Blackness Is A Rainbow"

The UMass Program Council will present the United Black Artists (UBA) of the Cornell University Africana Studies and Research Center in concert in the original theatrical production "BLACKNESS IS A RAINBOW" in the Campus Center Auditorium on Saturday, April 14th at 8:15 p.m.

The production was conceived by Chestyn Everett, Langston Hughes Professor of Black Theater Arts at Cornell, and will be under his direction. C. Bethany Jenkins, instructor in Black theater arts, is associate director.

The production is a chromatic interpretation of the Black experience according to the colors of the rainbow: "red: the struggle, the passion and the freedom; orange: the earth, the work and the harvest; yellow: the sunshine, the high-life and the laughter; purple: the dignity, the grief and the faith; blue: the strength, the love and the survival; white: the dream/reality, the dualism and the retribution; and green: the life, the hope and the vision."

Everett and Jenkins stressed the fact that this will be a "total theater" production wherein "all the arts exist in complement." They added that "Black theater is about the business of entertainment and also the aims of humanizing, liberation and informing the judgment of men."

Twenty members of Ithaca, New York's Calvary Baptist Church choir will sing with the UBA's. Other added attractions will be guest artists of the New Africa House, UMass, and participating dancers and actors from New York City and New Ark, N.J.

This will be UBA's second performance on the UMass campus, following the successful production, "TO ALL THINGS BLACK AND BEAUTIFUL", presented last year.

Tickets will be on sale for $1.00 at the door an hour before performance time.

Law Study Workshops Continue Today

A workshop on law studies in the schools will continue today at the School of Education. Workshops for today are "Teaching Law in the U.S.: Techniques and Rationale," 8-10 a.m., Auditorium; "Law in the U.S.—Students as Teachers," 2-4 p.m., Auditorium.

Interest in law studies, kindergarten through college, has grown enormously in the past few years. Unlike the old civics and American government courses, which are largely expository and concentrate on the delivery of superficial and over-simplified information about federal, state, and local government, law studies stimulates students and teachers to think, to analyze, and to evaluate complex legal and social issues. Since every legal case involves a conflict between opposing points of view, law serves as an excellent educational tool for examining the hard questions concerning the relationships between individuals and between the individual and the state.

The workshop will acquaint students and educators with the objectives, content, and strategies of law studies as well as current activities and available curricula in the field. In addition, the correlation between classroom learning and student involvement in school governance and the utilization of community resources and resource personnel will be discussed. Subsequent sessions will involve participants in a variety of instructional activities designed to personalize the learning experience. Activities will include mock trials, simulations, inquiry techniques and case studies. Discussion and evaluation of these techniques will follow participation in each activity.

Leaders of the workshop will include Joel Henning, Staff Director, and Norman Gross, Assistant Staff Director, of the American Bar Association Youth Education Program, Todd Clark, Educational Director of the Constitutional Rights Foundation in Los Angeles, Harriet Bickelman, Elementary Coordinator for the Law in the Social Studies Project at the Tufts Lincoln Filene Center for Citizenship and Public Affairs in Boston, Barry Lefkowitz, Director of the Multi-District Institute for Political Education in New Jersey, and other representatives from ongoing law-related projects throughout the country.

South Africa Topic For Talks

Planning is underway for a series of workshops, to be held Wednesday, May 9th, on the topic of the white regimes in Southern Africa and the overall political situation in that area. The sessions will be taking place from 1:00 P.M.-5:00 P.M. at a location on campus, and from 7:30 P.M.-9:30 P.M. at the First Congregational Church in Amherst, and will include speakers from the countries involved, discussion, and possibly films. A major objective of the campus session will be to begin to build a network connecting all persons on campus and in the area who are interested in this most important political situation.

Among the groups sponsoring the workshops are the Southern Africa Task Force of the United Church of Christ, Western Mass. Community Change, Inc., and the United Christian Foundation on campus. All those interested in helping to plan, or desiring more information, should contact Tom Lindemann at 5-2661 or Ronnie Goldman at 5-2892.

UMass Scholar Wins Grant

UMass English Professor Arthur F. Kinney has been awarded a grant by the American Philosophical Society for work on a volume on "Tudor and Stuart England" to be published by Houghton Mifflin.

Professor Kinney is one of five scholars invited to contribute to the book; he will write an essay on "Tudor and Stuart Literature." Other contributors are Margaret E. Aston (Essex) on culture of the period; G. R. Elton (Cambridge) on government and politics; Arthur J. Slavin (University of California at Los Angeles) on religion; and Lawrence Stone (Princeton) on society and economics.

Room To Move

Drug Symposium Here

The Hard Drug Team of Room to Move and the Area Drug Committee, Inc. will be sponsoring a 2-day symposium on "Implications of Drug Use and Treatment Modalities" on Friday, April 13, and Saturday, April 14. On Friday from 9:00 a.m.-12:00 noon, Room to Move and The Institute of Pan-African Culture is jointly sponsoring a group of Black musicians speaking on drug use from a musician's perspective. The afternoon portion of Friday's program will be focused on implications of drug use by a film presentation entitled "Straight No Chaser", and a speaker from Genesis House in Boston. Also at this time, Room to Move's Hard Drug Team will address itself to drug use and treatment and prevention approaches.

On Saturday, the program will address itself to the various treatment modalities of drug use. Representatives of various therapeutic communities such as Marathon House of Springfield, Alpha House in New Haven, and Daytop from New York will describe their treatment programs. Also on Saturday will be the keynote speaker of the symposium, Jim Bowles, a psychologist and the Director of Minority Training Program's at Eastern Pennsylvania Psychiatric Institute in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. His background involves membership in the National Association of African-American Educators. He is a member of the National Association of Black Psychologists. His topic is "Sociocultural Factors of Drug Abuse and the Humanistic Model for Treating and Preventing Drug Abuse."

The program will be held in the Student Union Ballroom, the University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Campus. The public is invited and there will be no charge for admission. The programs' hours will be Friday, 9:00 a.m.-4:30 p.m. and Saturday, 10:00 - 4:30.

Film Display Coming

Bruce Breland, artist, designer and film maker, will show a group of his films today at UMass. Sponsored jointly by the Department of Art and ARSTECNICA: Interdisciplinary Center for Art and Technology, the showing will conclude with an informal discussion of the films led by Mr. Breland.

The highlight of the evening will be a 25 minute film called "Fluids" documenting the famous happening staged by artist Alan Kaprow at The Pasadena Museum of Art in July 1968. A massive sculptural environment, consisting of stacked-up cubes of ice, was "processed" over a four-day period by the near tropical sun of Pasadena, California undergoing a gradual transformation sequence otherwise known as melting. Kaprow, famous as one of the inventors of the "Happening" as a unique art form, is shown planning, directing, participating in, and finally enjoying a creation which he considers one of the most successful of his career.

Mr. Breland, who likes to make his films in both black-and-white and in color, and who approaches film making in the same blunt, nonsense manner that he might wield a paint brush or a chisel (or, in his words, "make a home movie"), teaches painting and design at the Carnegie-Mellon University in Pittsburgh, Pa. He will define and compare happenings, environments and events as outgrowths of the plastic arts and the use of the film medium in realizing and documenting them.

The showing will be at 8:15 p.m. in Bartlett Hall #61 and is free of charge.

French Teachers To Meet

On Wednesday, April 11 at 7:30 P.M. there will be a meeting of all prospective French teachers who plan to take the "methods" course in the Fall semester. The meeting will take place in the 6th floor lounge of Herter Hall and will focus on the following topics:

1. prerequisites for the methods course
2. the present foreign language job market
3. suggested related courses
4. student teaching

Preliminary arrangements can be made that evening for registering for French 362 Methods for Teaching French.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

"Can you tell me under which sign Albert Einstein was born?"—Mark French, Chicago, Ill. Answer: Einstein was born under the zodiacal sign of Pisces. He displayed many qualities of his sign, being basically shy, mystical, highly intuitive, applying mathematics to music, learning to play the violin through his knowledge of numbers. Typifying Pisces philosophy, the great scientist once declared, "God does not play dice with the universe."

ARIES (March 21-April 19): What may have been settled is now in a state of disarray. This is not necessarily negative. Good shaking up is perhaps overdue. Realign priorities. What was important in recent past may be outmoded. Act accordingly.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Seek new ways of achieving. Strive to overcome obstacles through creative effort. Means there are ways to turn apparent adversities to your advantage. Aries person could play important role. Stick to the facts.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Don't press issues with friends. It may be hard not to argue—you gain, however, if receptive. Means go with the tide. Now is not the time to present major proposals. Family member has valid complaint. Listen and learn.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Insist on quality. Some may try to take your money in exchange for shabby product. You must speak up, communicate and even experiment. Sagittarian could figure prominently. Conditions are the opposite of settled.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Tear down in order to rebuild. Means don't be awed by tradition. Instead, have faith in your own creative judgment. Select what appeals to you. Cycle is such that, despite confusion, you can come up with a winner.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Funds may temporarily be tied up, taken from you, withdrawn. Key is to know that the situation is not dire. Special communication will help resolve what appears to be a hopeless dilemma. Gemini is in picture.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Surprises are featured. Excitement replaces what was becoming a boring routine. Placid situation at home can be transformed into creative challenge. Taurus is in picture. Friends seem intent on engaging in emotional fireworks.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Conflict may exist between what is practical and necessary—and what you wish could be. Key is to live up to obligations. Emphasis is on security, not only for yourself but for those who mean most to you.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Hold off on travel, if possible. This is a time for reflection rather than direct action. Reservations and directions are up in the air. Save yourself time, money emotional wear and tear. Stay put—for time being.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Be aware of potential. Also, know when to close deal or sale. Lingering, excessive bargaining could result in no deal. One who pulls financial strings is concerned with your performance. Check prices.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Overcome tendency to act on impulse. Check rules, regulations. Legal aspects of any proposed action should be reviewed. Philosophy of "counting 10" before acting is an excellent one for now. Act accordingly.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Low-key approach is best, especially where costs and special services are involved. Hunch is apt to be accurate. Let caution be better part of valor. Cancer, Aquarius persons play key roles. Get sufficient rest.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are a natural teacher; you also are intuitive, capable of piecing together bits of information and coming up with complete story. Many born under Aquarius are drawn to you. September should be an outstanding month for you in 1973.

Bruins KO'd

By PHIL CANNADAY
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP)-Steve Vickers scored three goals to lead the New York attack as the Rangers eliminated the Boston Bruins in the National Hockey League's Stanley Cup quarterfinals 6-3 Tuesday night at Boston Garden.

The Rangers will meet the winner of the Chicago-St. Louis series in the Western Division.

New York goalie Ed Giacomin, who played every game in the five-game series, was superb in goal, knocking away 33 Boston shots.

Vickers opened the scoring with 38 seconds gone in the opening period, when he deflected a pass from Bill Fairbairn. It was Fairbairn's third assist of the night, giving him the series scoring title with eight points.

Boston bounced back in the firstperiod at 1:54 on a shot by Bobby Orr, who took a pass from Derek Sanderson, speeded through three defenders and shot between Giacomin's legs. Boston's Ken Hodge put Boston ahead 2-1 at 12:45 of the first period when he deflected an Orr shot.

Vickers tied the score at 14:34 on a 30-foot shot past starting goalie Ross Brooks, and Bruce MacGregor put New York ahead near the end of the first when he flipped in a rebound.

Veteran Ed Johnston was in goal at the start of the second period for Boston because Brook pulled a groin muscle. After stopping a number of hard New York shots, Johnston was beaten at 18:59 by New York's Walt Tkaczuk, who took a pass from Fairbairn, skated across the goal mouth and flipped the puck past Johnston.

New York's Rod Gilbert slapped in his second goal of the series at 4:10 of the third period. Don Marcotte scored Boston's final tally of the game at 7:10 of the third when he took a pass from Mike Walton and flipped it home. Vickers scored his final goal at 17:51 past Johnston.

Boston rookie center Gregg Sheppard did not play the third period because of a bruised left knee suffered earlier in the game.

Bowlers Finish 3rd

By DAVE DIMMICK

On Sunday of this past weekend the UMass Intercollegiate Bowling Team competed in the Bryant Invitational Tournament at Lang's Bowlerama in Cranston, R.I. This was the final league appearance for the team this year. The team entered the tournament in fourth place in the league. By beating Worcester Polytechnic Institute in three out of four the bowlers pulled into third place for the year (out of seven teams).

At the time of this writing the results of the tournament have not been finalized but here are some of the highlights of this past tournament:

—A score of 2757 in the team event, which may place second or third. In this event the team was led by strong performances by Bill Fisher (628), Brian Elsden (622), and Dave Dimmick (562). Fisher's series included a phenomenal 276 game which earned him the high single trophy for the year in the league. Other members of the team for this tournament were: Dick Oliver, Dennis Racine, and Barry Witt.

Also competing in this tournament from UMass were two girls: Nancy Heglin and Pat Vautrain. Again, the finalized resuls are not available but it seems certain that Ms. Heglin captured the singles event with a fine 585 series.

This coming Sunday, Wayne Kowalski, a member of the UMass team will compete in the national championship in Syracuse, N.Y.

Anyone interested in trying out for next year's team should contact Dave Dimmick at 6-7002. (Also see ad in "Notices" column). Anyone interested in competing in the National March Game Singles tournament may pick up an application in the Boyden Gym lanes.

Women's Track Club Forming

A UMass woman's Track Club has finally been started on the Amherst Campus. It has been a long time in coming at this school where two outstanding women track Athletes, Kathy Lawson and Charlotte Lettis attend and have joined the men's teams. But until now there was no track team that less experienced women could join.

Charlotte Lettis is president of the club and welcomes any inquiries from interested women. The club is open to any undergraduates and is loosely affiliated with the Surgarloaf Mt. Athletic Club, which is an area A.A.U. club open to all women.

The UMass Women's Track Club (UMTC) will compete in open track meets in Belmont Mass on April 21 and 28 as well as in Waltham on May 5 and 12. In June, members of UMWTC will compete in the women's Regional Championships in Albany and New England Women's Championships which will be held in Amherst on June 10.

Members are needed for all events especially long jump, and high jump. Any University women who would like to learn how to throw a javelin, shot put or discus are invited to call Charlotte Lettis at 256-6650.

Minutemen Action Today

hit ball, the ball will, in all probability, have to fly out over the heads of the outfielders and then some.

If the pitching of both clubs holds up, however, then the spectator could be in for a one or two hitter this afternoon as both aces are lefties and have very good control in the clutch. UMass hitters have been rapping the ball quite consistently and Coach Bergquist is "very pleased with the way the men have been meeting the ball." He noted also that he is looking for the pitching to improve and is counting on a good game from White today if the Minutemen are to beat the Jeffs.

O'Brien was all praise for the performances of freshman long- and triple-jumper Bob Adamson and discus thrower Dennis Boisvert. Adamson not only broke a 30-year old freshman long jump record (22' 4 1/2"), but he also set a new UMass record, period, in the triple jump (48' 3 1/2").

The line for the past year on Boisvert is that if he ever realized his potential he might have to be a national contender in his event. Against the usually ominous forces of Northeastern's muscle brigade Dennis not only shattered them but in so doing set a new school record (161' 2") and came within four feet of the track record held by then nationally ranked Doug Price of Brown.

"He's a just a great athlete," lauded O'Brien. "At Leominster High he did everything in track except the discus. This is only his second year at it and by the end of this season he could be fighting for the national title."

very important matchup in this game will be the battle between UMass' top two defensemen, Bill Blaustein and Rich Lally and Adelphi's outstanding attackmen, Joe Hogan and Charlie Arnone.

"It should be a standoff between our defense and their attack," hopes Garber. "This game, like most games, will be won or lost on the midfield." There is a bit of irony in the coach's statement since John Martin and Dwight Blomquist, two of UMass' top midfielders will only be able to go at half-speed due to muscle pulls and "that's something you can't do against Adelphi."

Check These Stats

Why was the UMass basketball team 20-7 and invited to the N.I.T. this past season? Some of the reasons are found in the final NCAA major college individual and team statistics.

Although the Minutemen did not place a single individual in any of the respective solo categories, as they didn't in the final New England states, they did, as a team, make their way into four national ratings:

(1) Team defense -- 14th with 64.9 points allowed per game. (2) Average scoring margin -- 21st, outscoring the opposition by 9.8 points per game. (3) Free throw percentage -- 12th with .739 from the charity stripe. (4) Rebound margin -- 13th outrebounding their opponents by ten per game.

WHA Vetoes Merger

NEW YORK (AP) - The World Hockey Association voted Tuesday against any merger or agreement with the National Hockey League and said it will continue its anti-trust suit against the NHL and its reserve clause.

Gary Davidson, president of the WHA, which just completed its first regular-season schedule, said the decision by the WHA's trustees "does not leave out any future merger or agreement with the NHL, which we recognize could be beneficial.

"But at the present, we intend to continue our program as an independent league," Davidson said. The main issue blocking any merger or agreement, he said, is the NHL's reserve clause.

Havlicek-He's Got Lots Of Guts

BOSTON (AP)-By ordinary standards, John Havlicek should not have even been playing for Boston's Celtics in some of the National Basketball Association playoffs against Atlanta. But Havlicek doesn't follow ordinary standards.

"How many guys would play while they were sick," said coach Tom Heinsohn. "There are a lot of athletes who would duck playing if they were in John's situation because they don't want to look bad...

"Havlicek has the most guts of any player I've ever seen."

An intestinal virus for nearly a week has cost Havlicek 10 pounds and has drained him physically. At age 33 he has been plagued this season by apparent arthritis in wrists and knees, plus an ankle injury. And his shoulder is still sore where Walt Bellamy landed on him in last Sunday's action.

But with the fifth game of the Celtics' best-of-seven series with Atlanta's Hawks coming up Wednesday at the Garden, Havlicek is still hard at work.

After frittering away their 2-0 playoff lead to see the Hawks tie it up, 2-2, the Celtics took the practice floor Tuesday for a hard workout. Havlicek said what the team needs is a few baskets.

"We're getting our shots but the ball just won't go through for us," he said.

The rangy former Ohio Stater starred in the Celtics' first two playoff games, sinking 38 of 58 shots from the floor.

In the two losses, playing while ill, he connected on only 17 of 45 tries.

Havlicek, the Celtics' team captain, said he thinks his recent illness is behind him. "I felt much better Sunday," he said.

The Celtics Wednesday may also get more help from Don Chaney, who has been hampered by a groin muscle pull.

The sixth game of the quarterfinals is scheduled in Atlanta Friday. If a seventh is needed, it will be in Boston next Sunday.

Aronstein All-American

By JOHN BOCK

Remember the name Jay Aronstein because he will someday greet you as you enter the main lobby in Boyden Gymnasium as his caricature stares out of the trophy case. On April 7, 1973 he achieved the distinction of becoming the University of Massachusetts' first NCAA University All-American as he took the third place trophy in the still rings event at the NCAA National Gymnastic Championship held at the University of Oregon's McArthur Court in Eugene, Oregon.

This was Jay's second trip to the nationals and unlike last year he walked away with a little more than some fond memories. He was an unknown, though, even this year when he finished second in the Eastern's to Penn State University's Olympian Marshall Avener who led his Nittany Lion teammates to a second place finish by tying for first in the All-Around with Stanford's defending Champ, Steve Hug.

The competition was divided into three days, with the first day being the compulsory routines, and the last two days reserved for optional routines and finals. On the first day the Eastern team in the rings, which included Aronstein and Avener, was the last to compete, and they finished behind the MidWest teams of Iowa State and Indiana State. Jay finished fourth with a 9.25 and he was tied with Avener at this point.

"I don't think I could have done much better with my routine in the compulsories. I was, very happy with it after it was over," reflected Aronstein.

Friday was the second day and the day that would decide what six men would appear in the finals on Saturday afternoon. The optional routines were those designed by the individuals to emphasize their best points and allowed room for and even rewarded imagination. In this second day Jay scored a 9.4 on his routine and that made his compulsory-optional average at 9.325 and put him third going into the finals, but second on the day's scoring.

The finals had six men in each event and their order of competition was decided by drawing from a hat and Aronstein drew the fourth appearance on the evening.

When asked about the pressure that he felt Jay replied, "I was really relaxed and not nervous at all because I was pretty burned out after two days of trying to achieve the highest scores possible. I was just burnt out and couldn't get that nervous energy going and I think it really helped me because I knew that there was no way I'd win it unless Mahorney broke."

"I really enjoyed being in the finals and had a good time when I was waiting to compete. We marched out together and carried the name of our school with us and the crowd went wild."

It was tough for Jay to be the only one from UMass competing and he wished the team had qualified, but he was greatly aided in his between-competition-time by Coach Tom Dunn. Coach Dunn received an honor, too, at the nationals as he was elected to the National Gymnastics Coaching Association's Executive Council as the Eastern Representative. This is quite a distinction for the Rookie of the Year (so voted by the team).

"He really helped me by having been there three times himself (and his last time quite successfully as he won the parallel bars championship for PSU) and knowning all the people and many of the judges. I can't really put my finger on what Tom did, but just look at the results."

It also helped Jay to hang around with the Penn State team and they all rallied around him when they weren't busy. He received another lift from an old and famous Umie, Ron Wayne former New England Track Champion who is doing grad work at Oregon and running with Steve Profontaine. (Wayne said to say that he will be in the area for the Boston Marathon.)

As far as plans for next year, Jay will be back in school to finish up (his eligibility is up this year, though) and looks forward to maybe being a coach-manager for UMass. He will still stay in shape as he hopes to compete in the Mid-West Open and some other AAU meets.

For those that missed Jay during the season you can still catch him these days in Boyden Auxiliary Gym hard at work, proving that you can keep an All-American up.

Gorillas & Adelphi Cross Sticks Today

By MIKE ELLIOTT

Garber's Gorillas will face-off against 12th ranked Adelphi University today at 2:00 at Boyden Field. The Gorillas have a record of 2-1 with wins over Dartmouth and UConn. Their sole loss came at the hands of Cortland State. Their accomplishments thus far, however, will have to be forgotten for a few hours, anyway.

Today's game is sure to be a tough, hard-fought contest. Adelphi earned its No. 12 ranking by beating Morgan State and trouncing Harvard, 16-0. Last year, Adelphi beat the UMass lacrossers 8-4 at the end of their spring trip. This year, the Gorillas have had a few extra games to prepare for them. They have improved since the second half of the Cortland game.

Adelphi is a powerful squad. Coach Garver is impressed by their play. This Long Island team beat No. 9 ranked Army in a preseason scrimmage. They have an all-around tough team. On offense they have averaged 17 goals per game while their stingy defense has only allowed an average of four. Two standouts for them have been high-scoring midfielder, Kirk Jergolewicz and attackman, Charlie Arnone. Both are returning lettermen and last year Jergolewicz scored six goals against the Minutemen.

"I am most impressed by their stick-handling and midfield speed," said Coach Garber. "They have basically the same team as they had last year. They are a little better than Cortland."

Garber is equally impressed with his own team's performance. Our riding (similar to forechecking in hockey) has improved," commented the coach. "We have also improved on picking up loose balls and ground balls-something we did not do well in the Cortland game."

UMass must play a tough defensive game if they hope to beat this powerful Adelphi squad. A

He kind of sounds like Jack Leeman, which really isn't too foreign to this writer. "We don't have any super individuals," he insists. "But we do have enough depth in every event to have a good shot at every team we come up against all the way to the New Englands."

"He" is Ken O'Brien and this afternoon at 2 p.m. his track team hosts Holy Cross at the (Llewelyn Derby Track) in a meet that will pit the esprit de corps of O'Brien against the individual excellence of three, maybe four, Crusaders with a little help from their friends.

O'Brien's crew is coming off a good loss to Northeastern, the defending New England champs, if you can handle that. The final was 90 1/2-79 1/2. "But after such a dismal indoor season," explained O'Brien, "the athletes felt they performed real well against such a great team.

"Much better," he quipped, "than if they had done the same against the likes of a New Hampshire."

Holy Cross was fifth in this winter's New England indoor championship. As for the Minutemen; well, they could muster only a single point. But championship meets are championship meets and dual meets are dual meets and the twain usually doesn't meet unless you're a UCLA. And yes, the Bruins also have a strangle hold on track going for the third straight NCAA title this spring.

If you haven't seen a seven-foot high jumper lately, Holy Cross has one in freshman Fred Rom. If you're interests are in national calibre the Corps also has a couple of those in Dave Morrison (shot, discus and hammer) and Rich Comeau (440 and 880).

"We should have enough depth though to offset these individuals," said O'Brien. "We'll have four real good varsity performers in each event." When these two met last year at the Llewelyn Derby track there were exactly the same set of circumstances that confronted both teams and numbers UMass won out, 98-62.

Diamond 9 Cross Town To Meet Amherst

By MIKE BROPHY

Cross town rivals for many years, Amherst and UMass, have put on some thrilling baseball performances in the recent years. Amherst relies greatly on their pitching this year as they have lost many of their power hitters of years past through graduation. The likes of Bob Jones, drafted by Pittsburgh, and John Beacco are no longer with the Lord Jeffs but Don Douglas and Bill Severni are. The two pitchers have led Amherst to a 3-0 record to date.

Today's game, weather permitting, will be played at 3:00 on Memorial Field at Amherst and will

Today's game, weather permitting, will be played at 3:00 on Memorial Field at Amherst and will feature Tom White versus Don Douglas on the mound for their respective clubs in what should turn out to be a pitchers' dual in the classic sense of the phrase. Coach Bill Thurston of Amherst College commented, "We are heavily dependent on our pitching to pull us through this year. I have great hope that our hitting will come around very soon but until that time the pitching must carry us. It did down South and it has so far up here in New England."

Amherst College has no fence around the ball park and so there is no automatic Home Run, unlike at other schools UMass plays. This could hinder the UMass hitting attack as the Jeff outfielders are noted for their speed in tracking down balls in the green vastness that is Memorial Field.

And when the ball hits the turf in the outfield it is not going to roll all that far in the soggy outfield. In order to get extra bases out of a

Greatest Of The Greats

Believe it or not hockey fans, the greatest of the great are not on TV 38. Sure, that's where you catch your NHL hockey, but the best of the best are those chosen few who have toiled in the obscurity of the minor leagues for countless seasons. What follows is a partial list of that roll of honor. Remember, though, that before you read of their heroics, you should pronounce their names out loud.

JOE KISS—Joe's one of the International Hockey League's best, who has, on occasion, scored as many as nine (9) goals in a season. He's been in the IHL since 1960 when, as a rookie, he helped lead the Muskegon Zephyrs to a third place finish. Since that fateful year Joe has played for the Zephyrs, the Des Moines Oak Leafs, the Toledo Blades, and the Muskegon Mohawks (they changed their name.)

WAYNE ZUK—a youngster, Wayne won the IHL's rookie of the year award with Toledo in 1969-1970. He's still going strong, averaging about 40 goals a year. Wayne's the type of guy legends are made out of.

MOE BARTOLI—an all-time IHL scoring leader, Moe made his mark with such powerhouses as the Louisville Rebels, Minneapolis Millers, and Columbus Checkers. Moe's main claim to fame however is that when he was fired as coach of Columbus, he formed a syndicate and bought the team. He was rehired as coach. The Checkers folded at the end of the year.

CLIFF PENNINGTON—Cliff has one claim to fame; he's played for the following teams: Winnipeg Warriors, Kitchener-Waterloo Dutchmen, Montreal Canadiens, Boston Bruins, Hull-Ottawa Canadiens, Kingston Frontenacs, San Francisco Seals, Quebec Aces, Los Angeles Blades, Jacksonville Rockets, Nashville Dixie Flyers, Des Moines Oak Leafs, Flint Generals, St. Petersburg Suns, and Long Island Ducks.

JACK "TEX" EVANS—Jack retired this year to go into full-time coaching. He was 44. The crafty veteran first played pro hockey in 1948-49 for the New York Rovers of the Eastern League. He played in the NHL with the Rangers and Black Hawks up until 1962-63 when he became a career minor leaguer. Ended up his career by scoring three (3) goals in five years with the San Diego Gulls.

JULES "CHOO—CHOO" BOUCHARD—Came to the Providence Reds in 1966-67 as an unheralded rookie and won the hearts of the Reds fans (both of them) with his courageous play. Had an affinity for crashing head first into goal pipes while trying to block shots. Bent quite a few pipes. He eventually grew too expensive for the Reds and they shipped him to the IHL (Columbus). While there he became the first IHL player to collect a "hat trick", knocking out a defenseman, goalie, and referee, all in one fight.

HERMAN KARP—Herm's seen about every city in the continental United States. He's played in the Eastern League, International League and American League. Started out this season by leading Rochester of the AHL in scoring through December. By New Year's found himself back in the IHL. He has vowed he would return, as the city of Rochester holds its breath.

NORMAN "ROCKY" FARR—Nickname befits this goalie's great career. Has been loaned out more times in more leagues than a locker-room Playboy. Rocky's best season was in 1970-71 when he appeared in four games with the Springfield Kings, racking up a 6.50 goal against average and 1/4 of a game with the Fort Worth Wings. He played shutout goal in that one. He's now in the Buffalo organization and seems destined to become a career back-up.

"BATTLESHIP" BOB KELLY—the greatest fighter in all of pro hockey, he lists these among his conquests: Ferguson (exhibition season knockdown), Terry O'Reilly (exhibition season KO), Phil Roberto (regular season decision), Dave Schultz, (he skated off the ice when Kelly came after him), Mike Boland (KO with Boland having his nose broken in nine(9) places), and the entire Baltimore Clipper team (Kelly offered to take them on one at a time—they all said no). Kelly accomplished all this with the Providence Reds while scoring three goals in two years. He also had five assists. Is now with Rochester and was their leading scorer this season.

Thus ends this look at hockey's true immortals. Next time you watch the Bruins, Canadiens or Rangers remember—there but for the grace of Clarence Campbell goes Joe Kiss.

No Credit For ROTC

By STEPHEN FINE

The Student Senate voted last night not to recommend to the University Board of Trustees to restore credit for Reserve Officers Training Corp (ROTC) courses.

This was the second time this semester the Senate had grappled with giving ROTC credit. On February they voted not to endorse the Board of Trustees decision of May, 1972 in which they denied credit to participants of the program.

In another business, it was decided to fund the Student Workshop On Activities Problems, (S.W.A.P.) and voted to elect Paul Hamel, Chairperson of the Senate's Financial Affairs Committee, Treasurer, and Speaker David Booker to his present position.

The motion not to recommend credit for ROTC came after a vote to recommend credit. It was decided to reverse the first decision after it was discovered some senators had been caucasing, and had not been present for the first vote.

The first vote to recommend credit came after long debate about the status of the ROTC program on campus. Wayne Gallant, a student presently enrolled in ROTC, spoke before the Senate about why credit should be granted.

Gallant said that if students can get credit for colloquia such as silversmithing, or any other course, he saw no reason why students should not receive credit.

ROTC students used to receive 1 credit for courses they take as a freshman, 1 credit for each course as a sophomore, 2 credits as a junior, and 3 as a senior.

They now receive no credit, but when they reach their junior year they may sign a contract that provides $100 a month stipend to continue in the ROTC program.

Gallant said that the university has control over the program by the review powers over the officers who teach. "I know of one officer that was denied the right because of a low cum," he said.

"I believe that the University atmosphere has a liberalizing effect on ROTC curriculum. The army is made up of predominantly white southern males, and if you want to include people from the New England area like myself, you must provide the incentive for me to be in ROTC by providing credit," he stated.

Senator John Stevens said he was against giving credit because of the obligation students were under after signing a contract in their junior year. "If a student shows bad behavior he can be put on active duty. I hate to see what happens to a junior who changes his mind," he said.

Gallant later agreed with this saying that the term used by the military for this behavior was "willful evasion". He said however that he knew of one senior who changed his mind, and got out of the program, after review by a board.

Senator Peter Malone from Cance House stated in a speech that if credit was denied, "the only people you would be hurting by voting this down would be in your constituency."

Black Music, White Society

By GARY GOMES

The problems of black music and musicians encounter from the music industry were viewed yesterday morning in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union. The obstacles involved in "how to make an album, how to make a living" were discussed by Ted Daniels, keynote speaker.

The main topics of interest were how to make the music available to the public, how to escape domination by the recording industry, and how to produce an album independently.

Daniels explained to the participants how he had made an album entirely independent of a large record company, the financial cost for the musician in undertaking such a product, and various ways of promoting the album when it is finished. Distribution of the record could be achieved through telling friends, mail order, advertisement in selected music periodicals, and "taking it where you play." This becomes necessary because the music "is not in the stores. People hear it, they dig it, but it's not there."

Further on in the discussion, the participants delved into why the music isn't getting heard. Out of 8,000 radio stations in the United States, only twenty are owned by blacks. In addition to this, almost all of the disc jockeys in the United States are white, and as such the white element of the United States controls broadcasting.

Several points were brought out by Reggie Workman, who teaches a course on black music here at the University. Workman claimed that the record industry in this country had "spoonfed" the people". Also, there is no way for the musicians to check on their sales, since the company is so large.

A man from a radio station in Buffalo, N.Y., also cited the existence of "play lists", which instruct the disc jockeys as to what they can play on the air, as a major obstacle to the determination of public taste, because audience

Sex-Stereotypes And Decision-Making

A Lot Of Sexist Information Is Being Given On TV...

By CHRISTINA ROSSOMANDO

More than 100 persons crowded into a small room at the School of Education Marathon yesterday to partake in a discussion of "Sex Stereotypes on Television." The session, presented by instructors Jane Clark and Marjorie Harrison, was repeated to accommodate all those who wanted to participate.

Originally, the instructors had planned to examine sex roles presented on televlision and to role-play them in a non-sexist way. The size of the group at the first session, however, caused the format of the session to change from the active role-playing to discussion.

"A lot of sexist information is being given to kids and adults on TV and very few people take the time to sort out the misrepresentations from the truth," explained Ms. Harrison. "Part of the whole consciousness of TV is realizing what a potential educational force it is."

The instructors presented plot synopsises of four TV shows as a basis for discussion. These included a segment of All in the Family in which Gloria is attacked and decides whether or not to press charges; a Marcus Welby episode on the subject of VD; a segment of the Mary Tyler Moore Show concerning equal pay for women; and an episode of Maude dealing with the questions of abortion and vasectomy.

These four shows, commented Ms. Clark, attempted to deal with the sexist question honestly, "but there is a question of whether or not they were successful."

Ms. Clark suggested that perhaps the scripts of these shows could be rewritten without abandoning the basic premises behind them. They could then begin to "deal with these (sexist) issues."

Discussion also centered on the stereotype of women presented in television commercials. Ms. Harrison suggested that one way to "move" people to stop presenting these stereotypes is to write letters to sponsors, refusing to use their products because of their sexist ads or because of the sexist shows they sponsor.

"One letter can mean a lot," she explained, "because the sponsor is very sensitive to public pressures. He is aware that each letter actually represents a whole segment of the population."

The effect of TV presentation of sexual stereotypes on children "should not be overlooked," according to Ms. Harrison and Clark. Ms. Harrison, who works with children making television shows, expressed the belief that each teacher should "be aware of what the kids are watching because it is as much a part of his life as anything else."

The Problem Arises When The People Changing Environments Do Not Change Themselves

By BRIAN COYNE

"The Student's Role in the Decision-Making Process" was the topic of a presentation by Tom Wolf, a UMass School of Education faculty member and National Alternative Schools Programs staff member, yesterday at the Marathon.

Wolf, a former faculty member of Murray Road School in Newton, said some alternative schools focus on the dynamics of decision-making rather than traditional academic pursuits, the reason being that enough expertise exists in the community but no one knows how to make it available. Institutional decisions, such as what courses a student takes and whether or not he is going to get credit, are left up to the student.

The types of people at alternative schools can be readily recognized, according to Wolf. There are members of the black and white youth cultures, blacks and whites who are school-oriented, and blacks and whites who are school-alienated. Most of the teachers, he said, were white, middle-class "liberals" when alternative schools were first instituted.

The reasons people come to alternative schools generally disappoint Wolf. He said, "I have yet to see an alternative school started for positive reasons." The originators are usually frustrated with attempts to reform the regular school system and in desperation turn to the alternative schools, he said. The problem arises when the people changing environments do not change themselves.

Objectives of alternative schools often come into competition, Wolf said, when it encourages educational independence while at the same time striving for a community decision-making atmosphere.

Power conflicts are also inevitable in Wolf's opinion. Students usually have a difficult time adjusting to rules imposed on them by the teachers they have been in close contact with at the school. With the "hang loose" ethic prevalent at the schools, nobody wants to be bound by the decisions made, he said.

Another problem alternative schools encounter is what Wolf termed "white noise". Under this category falls harassment from the outside community, decision-making rhetoric employed by some individuals at the schools and time limitations for decisions.

Wolf said that at a UNESCO sponsored conference last year on decision-making at alternative schools, several stages in the evolution of the schools were identified as universal.

The first stage is characterized by a desire to build a community, based on individuals' past experiences. Power struggles develop which often result in disillusionment.

The institution of a system of government marks the second stage. Wolf said this can be successful if there is an agreement on goals and a high level of trust in the community. The eventual success or failure of the school depends on the adjustment of the people to this system.

Wolf ended his speech by posing some questions to his listeners, the answers of which he deemed essential for anyone involved in alternative schools. The organizers must be able to judge if there is effective communication in the model and if it allows for the diversity and psychological stages of growth of the students.

Quad Plans Spring Day

By STEVE RUGGLES

Susan Howard, chairperson of the "Spring Day in the Quad committee" reported the progress of the committee to the Northeast Area Government last Tuesday evening.

The Spring Day committee has chosen "The Harry Sandler Show" and "Pendrift" to play for the concerts. Spring Day activities begin on May 5 at 2:00 p.m. in the middle of the Quad. The activities are being run by the various dorms. Each resident of the Quad will be served free supper while the first half of the concert featuring Pendrift goes on. From 7:00 to 11:00, Harry Sandler will play to close out the day's activities.

The Spring Day committee meets every Wednesday evening at 6:30 in the Lewis music room, and invites all interested Quad residents to attend.

The area Government also defeated a bill calling for the payment of $325 per semester for the Area Government President.

Assignments were made to government representatives to evaluate the thirteen colloquia funded by area monies. Evaluation forms are being sent to each instructor, and the assigned representative will talk to students enrolled in each colloquia. Evaluations will be taking place until the end of next week. At the next meeting, a formal proposal to establish a colloquia evaluation policy will be discussed.

The Student Senate approved a $7,209 Northeast Area budget for next year. This figure was based on a population count on November 1, 1972 of 1068 residents, and a new per capita allotment of $6.75 per resident. Area Government officials are contesting this figure, saying that the official occupancy of the Quad including Hamlin House was very close to 1200 on November 1.

Dana Marchant, president of the government, proposed a Candidates' Night to be held Tuesday evening, April 17, in one of the Quad dorms. All candidates nominated for the Office of Student Government Association President will be invited to attend.

Two proposals to sponsor Quad trips to the Red Sox game on April 16, and the Boston Pops on April 26 were tabled until the sponsor could investigate alternate means of funding.

After very lengthy discussion, in response to last week's Area Staff meeting, the government set up a seven member committee to investigate a communication problem expressed by Student Staff. The members of this committee will come from the Area Government, the Area Staff, and the Student Staff.

In recent elections, the officers of the Area Government for next year was selected. President David Hirsh, Vice President Ernie Rotman, Secretary Sue Adley, and Treasurer Phylis Clark assumed the duties of their respective offices after Tuesday's meeting.

Grinnan Resignation 'Own Decision'

By DON BISHOP

Both the Vice-Chancellor for Administrative Services and two of the officers of the Campus Center Governing Board have agreed that the resignation of Warren Grinnan as Manager of the Campus Center came as Grinnan's own decision, based on his feelings about the future role of the office he has held for five years.

Vice-Chancellor Thomas Campion and C. C. Governing Board Chairperson Richard Nelson and Vice-Chairperson Frank Cotter upheld the statement made by Grinnan in an interview last Friday that the soon to be filled office of the Campus Center Director will administer most of the hitherto functions of the Manager.

According to Nelson, the C. C. Manager has up to the present been responsible for the business and financial functions of the building. These will now become the responsibility of the permanent Director, in addition to his overseeing all other functions (social, educational, etc., of the complex).

Grinnan maintained that his decision to resign after five years in office came from his not being able to justify the employment of both positions when there will be a substantial overlap in functions. His resignation will become effective on November 4, 1973 when his current one-year contract expires.

Campion denied that there was any correlation at all between the resignation of Grinnan and the previous one of C. C. Food Services Director Mike Egan. According to him both Grinnan and Egan had made the decision for their own personal reasons.

Campion, Nelson and Cotter are in agreement that it is very unlikely that Grinnan's position will be filled. Nelson stated that those functions of Grinnan's office not taken over by the permanent C. C. Director will be assigned to other staff members in the building.

Campion expressed his opinion that it is neither necessary nor wise to have both positions where you would have "two people with essentially overlapping responsibilities."

Campion and Nelson responded to Grinnan's contention that the primary problem with the C.C. is the lack of concensus among those groups involved in the building over what should be the building's goal or purpose.

Campion stated that "The role of the Campus Center is emerging. Hopefully it will become clearer in the future and the major revenue-producing enterprises will improve." He added, "I do think we're all in agreement that the building should primarily be a place for students, but also one for the whole community."

Nelson "completely agreed" but the lack of a working goal was a problem for the Campus Center. Nelson also felt that any goal made for the building at its inception, has long since been abolished.

Nelson and Cotter both believe that the present Board of Governors is working to solve this problem and that the recently completed A. D. Little survey of the Campus Center should help in defining a goal.

As far as the present business operations of the C.C. were concerned, Campion felt that progress was being made in improving the revenue-producing areas of the building and this fact will be reflected in the budget for next year.

Nelson and Cotter noted that there has never been a "rule book" for the operation of buildings of the nature of the Campus Center, but that as time goes along, those managing the building can move from doing it on a day to day basis to one of long range planning.

Student Senate

"I think if the senate is trying to strike out at the military, the only people you're hurting is the students on campus," he added.

The first vote on the issue was 32 pro credit, and 29 against, but after reconsideration, the vote was 31 yes, 31 no, 5 abstentions and the tie breaking vote being cast by Speaker David Booker with a no vote.

In another reconsideration move from Monday's budget hearing meetings, the budget of S.W.A.P. was finally passed after much debate throughout this semester on its merits.

The history of S.W.A.P. group in the Senate is of long debates, passed rationales and budgets, and then votes to reconsider them. The rationale (the reason for the Senate funding the group) was first passed by the Senate's Budget's Committee and passed by the Senate itself. In an economy move however the same night it was Zizis, station Manager of WMUA, said "unless we are assured that the procedure for budgeting will be changed . . . there simply will be no magazines or newspapers to read, and no radio station for them to decided to bring it back before the Budgets Committee for reconsideration with numerous other groups. After it was passed by the Budgets without any change in its rationale, it also passed the Senate.

The groups budget was then brought before the committee and passed. When the Senate voted to pass it last Monday, it was decided to recall it again later in the meeting. It was finally passed last night without any major change made in its categories of expenses.

In an apparent protest to this type of budgeting procedure, personnel from the Collegian, WMUA, and Spectrum threatened the Senate with stopping operations, if it did not change the way in which it budgets groups, in a letter that was read to the body.

The letter which was signed by various officers from the groups including Stephen Tripoli, Editor-In-Chief of the Collegian, Ed Meek, Editor of Spectrum, and John listen to commencing at the end of fiscal 1974 (the end of next year)."

The letter complained about the atmosphere in the Senate being hostile, and about senators not having enough expertise in the areas they deal with budgets.

Temple University

Six Injured In Political Scrap

PHILADELPHIA (AP) - Six persons were injured Wednesday when two campus political groups fought at Temple University after a noontime rally, school officials said.

The six injured persons, five of them Temple students, suffered minor injuries and were treated and released at Temple University Hospital, authorities reported.

The disturbance erupted in the Student Center offices of the socialist Young Workers Liberation League after the political rally was held on campus, officials said.

A police investigation was continuing into the disorder. According to students in the center, shortly after the rally ended an argument developed between members of the Marxist National Caucus of Labor Committees and YWLL on the ground floor of the center.

The YWLL members said after the ground-floor altercation, some 20-25 persons armed with sticks, pipes and chains attacked students inside a second-floor office of the league and two adjoining rooms.

The attack lasted several minutes, school officials said. Safety officers were summoned, but the attackers had fled by the time they arrived, officials said.

Thinning For Handicapped

By KRIS FLETCHER

Today at 4:00 p.m. in the Campus Center, there will be a group of about 40 people who will be "weighing in". And, no, it's not the UMass Co-ed Wrestling Team. The people will be contestants for the month long scheduled Diet Marathon. The Diet Marathon was devised to raise money for the fund to make UMass architecturally barrier free. This means that UMass should be adapted for the handicapped.

The senior class has decided to give as their class gift approximately $4,000 for the purpose of a much-needed communicating system for the handicapped. This system would consist of three things. The first would be a handbook for all the mobility disadvantaged, including the most forgotten of all, the temporarily disabled. Nothing is more frustrating than to have an accident, and after spending one week in the infirmary, to be let loose on the UMass campus, not knowing which buildings are accessible or how long it will take to go from one class to another. This handbook will eliminate the guess work. The second thing the senior money will go to will be tactile signs on the elevators for the blind. And the third thing it will do will establish an indicating system of standard "wheelchair" signs identifying accessible buildings and routes. Because this will take more than the allotted $4,000, there is hope that the Diet Marathon will raise at least $2,000 to finish the job.

The rules of the contest are simple: contestants "weigh in" today, then they have one month to lose weight and to get sponsors to give a certain amount of money per pound lost during the alloted time. The winner, who also wins $100, is determined by the amount of money turned in after the diet is over.

Any person who is in good health is welcome to enter the contest. Information can be obtained by calling 6-5444. Or if you would like to enter, you may show up at the Campus Center Auditorium at 4:00 p.m. response was not accurate enough. "We people who died trying to play black music," he stated.

Archie Shepp, an Associate Professor in the Dept. of Afro-American Studies, related the time that he and fellow black musicians stormed the major television studios in protestation of discriminatory programming practices against black music.

Shepp also stated that blacks are not dealing with mass media. According to Shepp, "You don't have to be famous to be on television." Citing the technological explosion, he said, "You can't chase airplanes with horses and buggies . . . we have to study mass media."

Acklyn Lynch, Associate Prof. in the Dept. of Afro-American Studies, spoke next, and said that blacks should learn to "optomize resources". He suggested setting up a program in which "five or ten students from each of the universities to collect data on the problems of the musicians and to break down and analyze these problems" and to connect the data gathered with five or ten other groups around the country.

There seemed to be a general consensus that the entire week should not be forgotten, and Mr. Lynch suggested that the data and concern gathered from these sessions "moves beyond this conference. We must not let this thing die."

Assistant Professor Roland Wiggin of the Senior-Education then took over the proceedings, and reminded the participants of the concepts of the Conference. Ideas, concepts and clarification of these, mechanics of the institution and altercations were viewed as the three prime motivating factors of the conference.

The concept of black artists controlling their own work reached into the afternoon workshop, which was coordinated by Louise West, who spoke on the legal aspects of music and copyright; Phil Pettrie, a member of Harvard International Press, who spoke to the need of having black musicians write their own books and control their own music; Intume, who runs a small independent record lable, Strata-East, which is dedicated to the cause of black music controlled by the musicians, and Bill Quinn, who is here representing Howard University, who referred himself to the need of "committees with functional tasks ahead of them".

The Black Musicians Conference will run through to Friday night, with a panel discussion today on "New Compositions and Techniques" hosted by Sam Rivers, bassist.

Viet Troops To Cambodia?

South Viet Attack Being Considered...

By KENNETH J. FREED
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-An attack on Communist-led areas of Cambodia by South Vietnamese forces is one of the alternatives Gen. Alexander Haig is expected to offer for presidential consideration when he returns from Indochina Thursday.

Administration sources say such use of South Vietnamese units is not necessarily what Haig, Army chief of staff, will recommend. But they say it is certainly a live possibility if President Nixon decides some strong, dramatic action is necessary.

In Saigon, Cambodia's president, Lon Nol, was reported by South Vietnamese sources to have asked Haig for the help of South Vietnamese troops and wrplanes in defending the capital of Phnom Penh.

Haig, the former chief deputy to national security adviser Henry A. Kissinger, has been on a fact-finding trip to Indochina to assess the status of the cease-fire and the situation in Cambodia.

The White House Wednesday said no time has been set for a Haig-Nixon meeting, but officials sais it would be soon. However, the White House said the session would not necessarily be during a National Security Council meeting set for tomorrow morning at the presidential mountain retreat at Camp David, Md.

There have been reports that President Nixon is considering some strong action to back up his previous warnings that he will not tolerate continued North Vietnamese violations of the Vietnam cease-fire and understandings reached with Hanoi concerning Cambodia.

Other possible options for Nixon in Cambodia range from continuing the present level of B52 bombing attacks in Cambodia to extending the air raids to cover North Vietnamese supply lines such as the Ho Chi Minh trail through Laos, Cambodia and South Vietnam.

PHNOM PENH, CAMBODIA—UNLOAD BADLY NEEDED SUPPLIES—Food supplies are unloaded Tuesday by dock workers at Phnom Penh. The shortage of fuel, food, and ammunition in the besieged Cambodian capital has been eased somewhat by the arrival during the past two days of supply convoys that managed to make their way up the Mekong River past Communist ambushes. ...Cambodia Said To Request Troops

By DENNIS NEELD
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP)-Cambodia's president was reported yesterday to have requested to help of South Vietnamese troops and warplanes to fight Communist forces which have taken over much of his country and threaten the capital of Phnom Penh.

President Nixon's special emissary, Gen. Alexander M. Haig Jr., flew back to Phnom Penh for a second visit Wednesday night after a meeting in Saigon ith Premier Tran Thien Khiem. It is speculated they discussed the request.

Haig's four-nation tour also has taken him to Thailand and Laos for what is described as an assessment of the military, political and economic situation in Indochina following the Jan. 27 Peace agreement.

Haig was due back in Washington Thursday. The White House said no major announcement of a policy change on Cambodia was expected.

A final decision on any plea for help in Cambodia was not likely before the return to Saigon of President Nguyen Van Thieu from his visit to the United States and five European and Asian nations. He is due back Saturday.

But Thieu already has given ample indication that he will not stand idly by while Cambodia falls to the Khmer Rouge insurgents and their North Vietnamese and Viet Cong allies.

"If Cambodia falls, it will be a threat to Vietnam," said Thieu during his U.S. visit. Theiu noted that by the terms of the Paris peace agreement North Vietnamese and Viet Cong forces should have withdrawn unconditionally from Cambodia. But they still hav an estimated 23,000 troops in the country, both assisting the home-grown Khmer Rouge insurgents and protecting their own base areas and supply routes.

Communist Strength Increases In South

By MIKE SHANAHAN
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—Communist fighting strength in South Vietnam now has matched levels of a year ago when the North Vietnamese began their last big offensive, the Pentagon said Wednesday.

In the weeks since the signing of the Jan. 27 cease-fire, Pentagon spokesman Jerry W. Friedheim said, the northern provinces of South Vietnam have become a military, if not a political, extension of the Hanoi government.

Freidheim declined to speculate on whether the North Vietnamese plan to use their newly infiltrated forces in actual attack or for bargaining power in a political contest with the Saigon government.

President Nixon has accused the North Vietnamese of numerous cease-fire violations and reminded them he has used American air power in responding to past infiltration of men and supplies.

In a fresh appraisal of North Vietnamese capabilities, Friedheim said that since the ceasefire, the North Vietnamese have sent about 30,000 troops into South Vietnam or Cambodia. That raises their strength in South Vietnam to between 140,000 and 170,000 men, he said.

In the northern part of South Vietnam, the Pentagon spokesman said the North Vietnamese have set up about 1,000 anti-aircraft guns.

Around Khe Sanh, once a big U.S. Marine base, the North Vietnamese have installed eight to ten surface-to-air missile sites to protect the big airstrip there, Friedheim said.

Just north of the demilitarized zone, the North Vietnamese are improving airstrips and making them capable of landing Soviet MIG jets, Friedheim said at a news conference.

American intelligence sources report about 700 North Vietnamese trucks have been spotted coming down the Ho Chi Minh trail over the past week. They were estimated to carry about 1,000 tons of artillery shells and other ammunition.

Friedheim said about half the approximately 500 tanks and other armored vehicles now in South Vietnam have rumbled down the trail since the ceasefirel

Most of the troops and new weaponry are in the crucial Quang Tri and Thua Thien Provinces near the demilitarized zone and areas northwest of Saigon near the Cambodian border, Friedheim said.

Those are the areas from which previous big attacks by the North Vietnamese have come in previous years.

Detroit Given Another Year

Pollution Deadline Extended

By JAMES PHILLIPS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The government Wednesday granted the auto industry an additional year to meet the tough 1975 exhaust pollution standards.

However, it said it will impose interim restrictions on the amounts of pollutants permitted to spew out of tailpipes of 1975 model year cars and apply separate tougher standards for cars sold in California.

General Motors and Ford Motor Co. said the interim restrictions will be difficult to attain. Consumer and environmental groups denounced the year's delay as action shirking a responsibility to the public.

William D. Ruckelshaus, administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, announced the decision.

"Compare with today's cars," Ruckelshaus said, "the reductions required in 1975 by this decision move us for the non-California market half the distance, and for the California market two-thirds of the way to the 1975 standards.

All domestic and most foreign car makers cited technical and production difficulties with the catalytic converter in asking for the delay. The catalytic converter is a cannister-like device attached to the auto to insure cleaner burning.

Ruckelshaus noted the reliance of most automakers on the catalytic converter as the best means of meeting the 1975 standards.

The interim standards will require the installation of catalysts on all domestic cars sold in California and on some models nationwide in 1975, Ruckelshaus said.

California was selected for tougher restriction, he said, because it has the most critical air pollution problem.

He estimated the catalyst requirement would not result in a sticker price rise greater than $45 per vehicle.

"We're hoping that cost is simply not imposed on the California consumer," he said. It's my hope the auto companies spread the costs . . .across the line."

Henry Ford II, chairman of the board of Ford Motor Company, said the interim standards are so tough it is doubtful Ford can meet them with the use of expensive, untried catalysts.

"We remain convinced that the statutory standards and timetable for 1976 are completely unattainable," Ford said in a statement.

Richard Gernstenberg, General Motors board chairman, said the interim standards will be most difficult to attain and may well require the use of catalytic converters nationally.

The major auto manufacturers had asked for the one-year extension. They were joined in the plea this week by the United Auto Workers union, which said it feared for the health of the auto industry.

Labor May Oppose Nixon's Pension Plan

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Nixon Wednesday revived administration proposals for improving federal pension laws to assure American workers "a secure and comfortable income in their retirement years."

Organized labor said Nixon's plan, outlined in a message to Congress, offered nothing new and vowed to oppose it as in the past.

The President's recommendations included safeguarding or vesting of pension rights of workers who leave their jobs before retirement, a tax incentive for workers not covered by employer plans to set aside funds for retirement, and liberalized tax benefits for the self-employed who establish their own pension plans.

The proposals were virtually identical to those he last submitted to Congress in December 1971 and are less sweeping than measures now before the House and Senate.

Not included were two ideas advocated by labor to provide federal insurance to protect thepensions of

Not included were two ideas advocated by labor to provide federal insurance to protect the pensions of workers who now suffer when theie employers go out of business, and to allow workers to carry their pension benefits with them when they change jobs.

"The rhetoric is good," declared AFL-CIO President George Meany, "but the proposals do nothing for those already retired, nothing to protect the integrity of pension funds when the corporate entity is terminated, nothing for workers who have devoted a lifetime to their jobs and are now nearing their retirement age."

In his legislative message, Nixon said he would offer within a few days two bills, the Retirement Benefits Tax Act and the Employe Benefits Protection Act.

On vesting, he proposed a "rule of 50" formula whereby all pension benefits earned would be considered half vested when a worker's age plus his number of years of participation in a plan equals 50. An additional 10 per cent of benefits would be vested each year thereafter, with a pension fully vested five years later.

Vesting refers to the preservation of the pension rights of employes when they are discharged, resign or move to another job after having made payments into a retirement fund.

At present, Nixon noted, more than two-thirds of all full-time workers participating in private pensions plans have no such protection.

For workers not covered by employer plans, Nixon recommended they be permitted to set up their own retirement income program. This way an individual could set aside $1,500 a year or 20 per cent of income, whichever is less, and claim a tax deduction for the amount. Earnings from such investments also would be tax-exempt until received as retirement income.

Nazi Phantom Unearthed

FRANKFURT, Germany (AP)—Martin Bormann, a Nazi phantom pursued around the globe, was officially declared dead Wednesday and taken off West Germany's most-wanted list.

Atty. Gen. Horst Gauf said a skeleton unearthed in West Berlin last December was with "absolute certainty" that of Hitler's long-sought deputy.

If, despite the closing of the Bormann mystery case book, someone identified as Martin Bormann is arrested anywhere in the world, "we will know we are dealing with an innocent man," Gauf told a news conference.

"Martin Bormann died on May 2, 1945, between 1 and 3 a.m. on the Invalidenstrasse railroad bridge in Berlin a short time after his accomplice Adolf Hitler," Gauf declared. Hitler committed suicide in his Russian-encircled Berlin bunker on April 30.

Glass splinters found in the skull identified as Bormann's indicated that Bormann also committed suicide, biting into a glass cyanide capsule to avoid capture by the Russians.

The attorney general's report was accepted with satisfaction by Bormann's family, including his eight children, newsmen were told.

Even Nazi war crimes expert Simon Wiesenthal said he was 99 per cent convinced that Bormann was dead, but he expressed 1 per cent of continuing doubt.

"There are still hairs in the soup," Wiesenthal, who attended the news conference, said. Wiesenthal, who had long maintained that Bormann probably had escaped from Berlin in 1945, raised questions about the capsule Bormann is believed to have taken.

He said it was larger than the one smuggled into the Nuernberg cell of Reichmarschall Hermann Goering. Goering committed suicide shortly before he was to be hanged for war crimes in October 1946.

Joachim Richter, Gauf's deputy and the man who has been in personal charge of the Bormann case since 1965, said survivors from Hitler's bunker have told him the larger capsules, measuring about 3/8 of an inch in diameter, were available to Hitler's staff.

Even Hitler's bride, Eva Braun, was said to have carried such a capsule in her purse. She died with Hitler.

Wiesenthal also expressed doubts about the accuracy of identifying Bormann's teeth on the basis of sketches his dentist made from memory.

Except for the misplacement of a bridge in the sketch, it jibed with the dentures found in the skull, Richter said.

The attorney general identified a second skeleton, unearthed beside Bormann's, as that of Hitler's physician, Dr. Ludwig Stumpfegger. He was known to have tried to break through Russian lines with Bormann.

Discovery of the skeletons by workmen digging pipeline trenches along a West Berlin commuter rail line last Dec. 7-8, came when author Ladislas Farago was still making headlines with his contention that Bormann recently had been seen and photographed as he crossed into Argentina from Chile.

Watergate Case Continues

Nixon Aides Testify

By BROOKS JACKSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Watergate grand jury Wednesday heard former White House aides Dwight Chapin and Gordon Strachan, both linked in various accounts to alleged political spying and sabotage.

The federal grand jury also questioned California lawyer Donald Segretti, who allegedly tried to recruit at least three lawyers to disrupt Democratic presidential campaigns last year.

As the grand jury widened its investigation of the Watergate affair, Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., said the way President Nixon handled it threatens to allow his aides to testify publicly and under oath about what they knew of last year's burglary, wiretapping and alleged spying and sabotage against Democrats.

Another Republican, Sen. Edward Gurney of Florida, predicted political pressure will force Nixon to allow his aides to testify publicly and under oath about what they knew of last year's burglary, wiretapping and alleged spying and sabotage against Democrats.

Gurney is a member of the Senate committee investigating the affair.

Wednesday's grand jury appearances seem to indicate the panel is investigating the allegations of Republican spying and undercover disruptions that went beyond the break-in and bugging of Democratic offices at the Watergate building.

Three lawyers have said Segretti tried to recruit them for political espionage against Democrats. Segretti also received more than $30,000 in Nixon campaign funds from Herbert Kalmbach, President Nixon's personal lawyer, according to an FBI report made public in Senate hearings.

Kalmbach told FBI investigators he didn't know what the money was used for.

Kalmbach said he acted at Chapin's request. Chapin, as he left the grand jury Wednesday, told newsmen, "You can ask all the questions you want. I'm not going to answer."

Goldwater Says:

Nation Must Be Told

WASHINGTON (AP)—Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., said Wednesday that unless President Nixon tells the nation "just what in hell is wrapped up in this Watergate mess," Republicans face election losses.

If this isn't done, Goldwater said, the GOP will lose in the 1974 elections and face the loss of the White House in 1976.

He said the Watergate affair, involving bugging of the Democratic party headquarters last June, is causing deep unrest among Republicans. Potential "fat cat" contributors are saying their purses will be closed to the GOP until the case is closed up.

Goldwater, the Republican presidential candidate in 1964, said President Nixon should waive executive privilege, order his aides to appear before the Senate Watergate Investigating Committee, and then tell the American people what he himself knows.

"People are beginning to think he had something to hide and is hiding it," Goldwater told newsmen.

Goldwater said that he believes the President and his aides will be able truthfully to tell the Senate and the public they had no involvement in political crimes.

"Now if it turns out that their testimony was to the effect that the Republican party was involved," he said, "then I think you're going to hear some loud screams from Republicans such as myself. "

Goldwater voiced his views first in an interview with the Christian Science Monitor and later with newsmen in the Capitol. Nixon, he said, simply has to speak out.

"I'd hate to see this man go through his last four years in office doing everything that's good for the country and leave office with a black cloud still hovering over him," Goldwater said.

Asked about Goldwater's statements, Senate GOP Leader Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania declined direct comment but said, "I have great respect for Sen. Goldwater. He would make no statement that he hadn't given great thought to."

Scott reiterated that he always favored complete disclosure of the Watergate matter." Asked if he felt the White House had practiced that policy, he said "I'd rather not comment."

Asked if Pennsylvania Republicans were expressing concern over the Watergate case, he replied "Yes." Asked about Goldwater's statement that GOP "fat cats" are concerned, he replied, "Even some of the thin cats."

IT'S FLITTIN' DAY—First weeks of April in the Pennsylvania Dutch and Amish sections of Lancaster county are known as "flittin' days" and that means the time when Amish families move. While the Amish are a normally stable people, they do more from one farm to another occasionally. And thwn they do, it's by horse-drawn vehibles, piled high with their possessions, some modern and some antique. And the traditional reluctance to be photographed finds one of the youths hiding his face with his black hat. (AP Wirephoto)

Tunney: Congress 'Fossilizing'

By DAN HALL
Associated Press Writer

WEST HAVEN, Conn (AP)—U.S. Sen. John V. Tunney, D-Calif., predicted Wednesday that Congress will become a "fossil" if it does not fight for equal footing with the executive branch.

Congress should be thwarting attempts of the administration, President Nixon's and those of presidents before him, to cut approved spending, to enter war without congressional support and to shield its members from criminal investigations, he said.

"The Congress has waited for too long," he told an audience at the University of New Haven.

If the current trend continued, "I'm afraid that some time the Congress will become a fossil or a rubber stamp for presidential initiatives," he added.

The young senator, who has been close to the Watergate investigation as a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, criticized Atty. Gen. Richard G. Kleindienst for his defense Tuesday of Nixon's use of executive privilege to free aide John W. Dean III from testifying before the committee.

"I think it was an absolute outrage and an insult to the American people, and if it's followed it could lead to totalitarianism quicker than anything I could think of," he said.

Tunney said he wasn't accusing the Nixon administration of "evil motive.

"It's a process, but it's a process that must stop now," he said.

Tunney proposed that the Judiciary Committee subpoena Dean and, if he does not appear, cite him for contempt and try him in the Senate.

He said the authority of the Senate to try someone was upheld by the Supreme Court as the result of such an action during the administrtion of President Warren G. Harding.

In the area of funding, Tunney said Congress should set specific spending and take Nixon to court if he disregards them.

The senator said he supported a proposal for a 30-day limit on the amount of time U.S. troops could serve in combat under the President's direction but without congressional approval.

If Congress is unable to regain the control it has lost, Tunney said, "punitive politics"—Congress withholding action to gain concessions from the President—"is the only answer."

Almost Everyone Lost A Relative...

AXBRIDGE, England (AP)—In the peaceful and picturesque Somerset villages of Axbridge, Cheddar, Congresbury and Wrington, almost everyone lost a relative in the airliner disaster in Switzerland.

In these close-knit pastoral communities—famous for their cheese, strawberries and cream—everyone knows everyone else and most families seem to be related. One mourner said: "This has become a village without mothers. It will be like a morgue here. This town has died."

Between 100 and 200 children have been left motherless.

About 109 mothers and children left the Mendip Hills villages on a day trip to Switzerland. Many of them perished when their Invicta Airlines charter plane crashed into a mountainside near Basel, Switzerland during a blizzard Tuesday.

Among those passengers not from the Somerset villages were some innkeepers and airport employes from the Bristol area.

Invicta said 39 passengers and crew survived, 96 died and 10 are still missing in the wreckage. All but three of the surviving passengers have been identified. The others are lying unconscious in Swiss hospitals, villagers were told by telephone.

Invicta flew 205 relatives of the dead and a number of welfare workers to Basel Wednesday afternoon.

"We are going to identify the victims and help to comfort our injured friends," said one man, red-eyed and near tears.

One of the charter planes which carried them was expected to bring back those survivors who could travel, an Invicta spokesman said in London.

While fathers and husbands flew to Basel, neighbors and relatives took children of the victims into their own homes. Village schools were reopened Wednesday so that the children—already on holiday for Easter—could be cared for while their families waited for crash news.

Not all the youngsters have been told their mothers are dead.

"Some know," an Axbridge villager said, "but we are waiting to break this news gently to the more sensitive ones."

Telegrams and phone calls of sympathy have been flooding into the villages, which lie within 10 miles of each other.

Co-ed Murder Suspect Indicted in Third Case

BOSTON (AP)—A man being held on murder charges in the deaths of two Boston-area women Wednesday was indicted for murder in connection with the slaying of a third woman.

Anthony Jackson, 33, of Boston's Dorchester section, was indicted by a Suffolk County grand jury in connection with the death of Ellen Ann Reich, 19, an Emerson College student from Paramus, N.J.

Jackson was earlier indicted by a Middlesex County grand jury in the deaths of Ruth Ann Hamilton, 23, a Winthrop art teacher, and Demaris Synge Gillispie, 22, a Boston University coed. He pleaded innocent to both charges.

The victims were among eight young women found slain since last summer.

Seven witnesses testified before the grand jury in the Reich case Tuesday and Asst. Dist. Atty. Lawrence Cameron presented evidence.

The hearing was scheduled after a second autopsy on Miss Reich's exhumed body disclosed a bullet in her head that police said was fired from a gun in their possession.

The body was exhumed last week in Paramus after an FBI examination of the woman's clothing detected traces of gunpowder. The first autopsy failed to uncover the bullet and the cause of death was listed as strangulation.

Jackson has been in custody since last December, initially on charges of assault in connection with an alleged shootout with Cambridge police.

State Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn has said there is enough evidence to warrant an attempt to tie all eight murders to one killer, but prosecutors have declined to make such a link.

All the victims ranged in age from 18 to 29, and four of them were college students. Four also were last seen hitchhiking and most were strangled. Some were sexually assaulted.

Dairy Judging Team Places Third In Regionals

Competing against nine other teams in a northeast regional dairy judging competition in Alfred, N.Y., the Dairy Cattle Judging Team of the Stockbridge School at UMass has placed third in overall team scores.

In addition, team member Keith Lilly of Ashfield placed first in individual scoring in the Holstein and Ayrshire classes and second individually in the Jersey class. Other team members placing individually were Joanne Wheeler of Ashfield, second in the Guernsey class and Craig Cook of North Adams, fifth in the Jersey class.

The fourth team member is Charles Jasinski of Northampton. All are Stockbridge School seniors. The team's coach, veterinary and animal sciences Professor Robert Duby, said that practice sessions at Hampshire County farms contributed to the team's good showing at Alfred. Dairy farmers cooperating were James Wentworth and Charles Jacque of Amherst, Elwyn Fowles of Southampton and Allard's Farms of Hadley.

Meat Boycott

Women Form Consumer's Congress

By JANET STAIHAR
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - About 150 women meat boycott leaders formed a National Consumers Congress Wednesday and voted to urge the American consumer not to buy or eat meat on Tuesday and Thursday.

The boycott leaders also set up a "national day of protest" against high food prices for Saturday, May 5. The exact form of the protest is still up in the air but the congress said there would be demonstrations by local housewives.

The Tuesday-Thursday boycott, beginning this Thursday, would continue indefinitely. The group plans to meet May 12 in Chicago to discuss what further action to take on the boycott.

The congress also passed a resolution asking the federal government to roll back food prices, reduce exports of scarce foods and encourage domestic production and food imports.

As the women acted, Virginia Knauer, special assistant to President Nixon on consumer affairs, cautioned that boycotts can have little lasting effect on meat prices.

Mrs. Knauer told a news conference: "I prefer selective shopping." And she presented a sheaf of Agriculture Department nutrition and shopping circulars to help with the food budget.

As for the boycott, Mrs. Knauer said, "unfortunately, a boycott, no matter what temporary effect it has on local prices, does not produce a single cow-or a sheep or a pig, for that matter."

The women's gathering heard consumer advocate Ralph Nader praise last week's boycott. He said it was the first time a consumer issue had direct impact on both the White House and Congress.

Nader told the women that "to rely on Safeway, the A & P or the Agriculture Department is to rely on a consistent practice of deception. Consumers have to rely on themselves." He urged the boycott leaders to continue their fight to lower prices.

"Consumer efforts are not 100 yard dashes. They are marathons," said Nader.

Leon Schachter, vice president of the AFL-CIO Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen, said his organization is sympathetic with what boycott leaders are doing.

But he said, "Lady, please don't blame your butcher." He said that 75,000 union jobs were lost by butchers due to the meat boycott. Schachter said the farmers must produce more in order to bring the prices down.

A cattleman, Lin Heiller of Melvin, Iowa, warned that meat producers might turn to the black market to sell their supplies if the boycott is carried on for a long time.

Westover Among Bases In Area Rumored Closing

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

New England government officials and labor leader expressed dismay and concern Wednesday over the rumored closing of many major military installations in the area—a move which could cost 20,000 jobs and millions of dollars in payrolls.

A meeting between Defense Secretary Elliot Richardson and members of the Massachusetts and Rhode Island congressional delegations Tuesday underscored the rumors.

"I think almost everything in military complexes in New England is going," said Rep. Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass.

Those installations threatened with closure are Westover and Otis Air Force Bases in Massachusetts, The Boston Naval Shipyard, Chelsea Naval Hospital, and in Rhode Island, the Quonset Point Naval Air Station and the Seabees base in Davisville.

O'Neill said bases which appear safe include Hanscom Field and Fort Devens in Massachusetts and the Naval Shipyard in Portsmouth, N.H. The status of other New England military installations was not mentioned.

Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., introduced legislation in Washington Wednesday to block closing of any military installation pending a review by a special 17-member commission.

Pell's measure would delay any closings for six months while the Pentagon decision is reviewed by eight members of the House and Senate, the secretary of defense and the three service secretaries, the secretary of labor, comptroller general and three presidential appointees.

Sens. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., Edward W. Brooke, R-Mass., and John O. Pastore, D-R.I., joined Pell in submitting the bill.

A total of 54 installations across the country would be closed, according to some sources. A Pentagon spokesman did not say how many installations would be affected, but said the names of the bases to be closed or reduced would be announced this month, possibly within two weeks.

The spokesman said the changes would be part of a "major realignment" of U.S. forces to reduce the fiscal 1974 defense budget. The Pentagon has declined to give any hint on what bases are to be shut down.

"All in all 20,000 people will lose their jobs in Massachusetts and Rhode Island if the plan goes through," O'Neill said, with a loss in payrolls and direct military spending to the region of $350 million a year.

Kenneth T. Lyons, president of the National Association of Government Employes, said Wednesday that closing the major New England bases would represent a $1 billion annual economic loss to Massachusetts and Rhode Island—"the greatest ever for the two states."

Lyons said the Senate Armed Services Committee should review the decision, apparently made by the Defense Department, to move the Navy's North Atlantic fleet from Newport, R.I. to Norfolk, Va. He said loss of this big fleet installation endangers all supporting Navy facilities in the region.

The Massachusetts Senate on a 32 to 2 vote Wednesday adopted resolutions urging the President and Congress "to take any available affirmative action necessary to avoid the closing of these military installations."

A spokesman for Massachusetts Gov. Francis W. Sargent said the governor would not comment on base closings until the rumors were confirmed. He added that the state was working on plans to aid those who may lose their jobs if the bases are closed.

Senator Edward Kennedy said the situation "appears enormously distressing." And Boston Mayor Kevin H. White said the closing of the Boston Naval Shipyard would be a "total, unmitigated and ruthless disaster."

Rhode Island Gov. Philip Noel said he was withholding any comment until details of the cutbacks are released by the Pentagon. His office said there have been no contingence plans drawn up for any possible base shutdown or cutback.

Aides to Maine Gov. Kenneth Curtis and Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, D-Maine, said Wednesday that there was no confirmation on whether their state would be affected by the anticipated cutbacks.

A Muskie aide said, "Rumors have been building, and they've been reaching a crescendo."

Summer Program In Bologna Still Open

Summer Program in Bologna, still has openings. Applications for the seven-week session will be accepted until April 20, according to Asst. Prof. Anthony Terrizzi, program director.

Courses to be offered: Baroque Art and Architecture in Italy; Urban Life in Medieval and Renaissance Italy; People of Europe, The Western Mediterranean, Italy; Italian Literature in Translation; Elementary Italian. Italian majors and other qualified students may arrange to take independent study in Italian literature. Students will take two courses for a total of six credits.

Classes will be in the Bologna Center of John Hopkins School of Advanced International Studies.

The group will arrive in Bologna June 17 for orientation. Field trips to nearby cultural centers will be included in the seven weeks, and a after August 8 students will be free to travel on their own, in Italy and nearby countries. Departure for the United States will be August 24.

Estimated cost is $875, for round-trip air transportation, tuition, health and library fees, travel and lodging in Italy, and most meals in Bologna. Expenses for the free travel time at the conclusion of the seven-week session are in addition to $875.

More information may be obtained from Asst. Prof. Anthony Terrizzi, Herter Hall 429, UMass--Amherst 01002. Telephone 545-0495.

China Videotape Shown In Project 10 Tonight

Frances Crowe, long-time peace activist and feminist, will address the Political Campaigns Seminar in Project 10 tonight at 7:30 P.M.

Ms. Crowe, for many years an outspoken critic of "American racism, sexism, and war and their implications in our free enterprise system," will begin her presentation by showing a videotape on medical care in the People's Republic of China. The videotape was produced by Dr. Joshua Horn, author of Away With All Pests, an examination of medical achievements in the communist Chinese nation.

A discussion will follow the viewing of the hour-long videotape.

For more than a decade, Ms. Crowe has worked as a leader in the peace movement in Massachusetts. She has organized countless lobbying expeditions and protest marches in efforts to end American involvement in Indochina, repeal the draft, and reduce excessive military appropriations in the Federal budget. She is founder and director of the Northampton Draft Information Center, which has provided counseling on Selective Service problems for many hundreds of draft-age registrants in western Massachusetts. At present she is actively affiliated with the American Friends Service Committee, Western Massachusetts Clergy and Laity Concerned, the National Council to Repeal the Draft, the Friends Committee on National Legislation, the War Resisters League, the Valley Women's Center, and the New England Committee for Non-Violent Action.

Ms. Crowe's appearance tonight is one in a series of appearances by local political figures scheduled for the Political Campaigns Seminar this semester. Previous speakers have included peace activist Henry Bubar, Selectman candidate George Scheurer, and State Representative James Collins.

Massachusetts Man Involved In Conn. Extortion Plot

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) - State police said Wednesday a Massachusetts man has been arrested in an alleged extortion and kidnapping plot involving a Hartford businessman and his family.

The plot reportedly involved a plan to tape a radio-controlled bomb to the chest of the businessman's daughter.

Held on $50,000 bond at Seyms Street Jail on charges of conspiracy to commit larceny by extortion and conspiracy to commit kidnaping was a man identified by police as John H. Moan, 34, of East Otis, Mass. He was taken into custody last Friday after an investigation involving state police and police officers from Waterbury and Bloomfield, authorities said.

The object of the alleged plot, detectives said, was Harvey L. Lipman of Bloomfield, a vice president and the son of the owner of Lipman Motors of Hartford, a large automobile sales agency.

Waterbury authorities said the alleged plot came to light last week when an official of a local motorcycle club told police he had been contacted by a man using the code name "Argus" who offered the club a large sum of money to participate in the alleged kidnapping.

The plot, police said, involved Lipman, his wife, daughter and two elderly persons who reside with him.

The motorcycle club official said he was instructed by a woman telephone caller to go to a service station telephone booth in Waterbury and there received a second call telling him he would find further instructions taped beneath a toilet tank in a local restaurant rest room.

Police said the club officer found the letter and after reading its contents, turned it over to authorities. The letter reportedly outlined a plot to hold the Bloomfield family hostage with a radio-controlled bomb taped to the chest of the man's daughter.

Waterbury authoritites said state police and Bloomfield police posed as members of the motorcycle club and accepted the offer to participate in the plot.

Opportunities Offered in Foreign Policy Field

Three job openings and ten work-study projects will be available for students interested in the field of American foreign policy. The Student Advisory Committee on International Affairs located in Washington, D.C. is looking for undergraduate and graduate students who have demonstrated a strong commitment to public affairs, especially at the community level and who have a solid background in foreign policy issues.

Regional staff positions will be available offering $2,250 in living stipend, up to $1,000 for half-time tuition costs, and $1,750 for program expenses. A representative will be recruiting on campus in the next two weeks. Watch for notice of date, time and place.

Direct applications should also be made to the Student Advisory Committee on International Affairs, Suite 503, 1717 Massachusetts Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036. Further information available in the Career Planning and Placement Service office, 239 Whitmore.

Collective Bargaining Conference To Be Held

A conference on the "Implications of Collective Bargaining for Undergraduate Education" will be held in the Campus Center Monday, April 16 to examine the relationship between collective bargaining and undergraduate education.

The conference, which will include comments by Student Government Association (SGA) president Larry Ladd and MSP (Massachusetts Society of Professors) president Dr. Howard Brogan, is sponsored by the "Undergraduate Education Conference," a group of faculty and staff members "concerned with undergraduate education."

Events in the conference include comments by Dr. John R. Haines, director of higher education management services for the New York State Education department, and Dr. Stanley J. Young, a professor of management and a member of the AAUP (American Association of University Professors) Executive Committee.

The converence will start at 9 a.m. Monday, with registration in the Campus Center auditorium, to be followed at 9:30 with a speech by Dr. Daniel Van Eyck, co-author of the forthcoming "Collective Bargaining Comes to the Campus."

A panel discussion will be held from 11 until 12:30, after which workshops will be held in the afternoon on issues "unique to the UMass/Amherst campus."

The conference is open to all members of the UMass community interested, and a $2 fee is charged to help defray costs.

Sex Poll Raises Eyebrows

MILAN, Italy (AP) - A sex poll which showed many girls approve of abortion, masturbation, and homosexuality has become an issue between pupils and teachers in a Milan high school.

The poll was conducted by an underground publication "Bread and Roses" among the pupils aged 14-18 of the all-female St. Catherine School.

Only 128 girls answered the questionnaire. Of these, 46 favored abortion: 54 approved of masturbation: 20 allow homosexuality and eight admitted to having been attracted by other girls.

When the issue of "Bread and Roses" carrying the answers was put on sale in the school, the dean seized it. Teachers argue that the poll was a threat to the good name of the school. Students smeared the school walls with protest slogans.

"Let The Buyer Beware"

Consumer protection is really a very modern legal concept with the significant precedents written by Judge Cardozo of the New York Court of Appeals at the turn of the century (before his appointment to the Supreme Court). Caveat emptor ("Let the buyer beware") has become "caveat vendor" or "the customer is always right?"

The modern wrinkle is the introduction of the government and, to a considerable extent, the courts on the side of the consumer. Ever since an early Buick's brakes failed and Judge Cardozo realized that it couldn't have been the buyer's fault, the principle seems to be that any but the most obvious defect is the responsibility of the merchant to correct, replace or refund. Behind the merchant is the manufacturer on essentially the same basis.

If either the merchant or the manufacturer does not provide a product that substantially meets the performance and quality standards promised, (or required by the government) or if the buyer is improperly ("fair play" standards) induced to make a purchase, then recourse may be made to the appropriate agency or court for relief.

The Small Claims Court

In Massachusetts the Small Claims Court is a special subdivision of the District or Municipal Court. Its procedures are simple and lawyers are not required. A simple claim (complaint) is made; a filing fee of about $4.00 is paid; damages of up to $400. (which may be doubled) plus the filing fee can be recovered. When both sides are summoned to court each presents their side of the case and usually the following day the judge's decision is received in the mail. Payment should be made by the losing party shortly thereafter. In most cases there is no appeal. Once this court was very much the tool of the loan shark and the installment merchant and embraced most of the vices that a system in the hands of a few can command. Today the court is very much a people's court with a judiciary that is alert to the problems of the poor, the consumer and the tenant. If you need it and your cause is right, try it - you'll like it!

Attorney General - Consumer Protection Division

Attorney General Robert Quinn has initiated and developed a comprehensive consumer protection service which extends to substantially every transaction in which a citizen pays for a good or a service. If this office can't help directly (617-727-8400 or 413-785-1951) it can refer you to an appropriate agency for governmental intevention. The most effective way to get help is to write your complaint in detail including copies (keep the originals) of all contracts, documents and correspondance. Give all the information you have. You will get a reply and help wherever possible.

The following is a partial list of agencies where appropriate complaints can also be filed. In most cases making a complaint will result in action. Perhaps it is just as important to file your complaint, even if no effective does or can follow. Your complaint becomes a statistic which is helpful in drafting future legislation.

1. Using procedures, threats, or other actions to collect debts that are unusual (not in the usual course of business) or otherwise unlawful.

2. Offering merchandise for sale at a remarkably low price as a "come on" and "switching" illegally to a higher priced item (e.g. claiming the cheaper item is sold out);

3. Selling a used car that will not pass state inspection within seven days of purchase and which costs more than 10% of the price to repair.

4. Charging exorbitant (over 18%) interest rates on installment sales or any interest without full "Truth in Lending" Disclosure;

5. Offering "sales": that aren't sales prices at all;

6. Guaranteeing or warranting goods or repairs and failing to live up to them; and

7. Many other practices which in general result in the consumer relying upon information or representation that misleads the consumer and particularly where they result in increased costs to the consumer.

In any such cases the consumer should act promptly and firmly to notify the seller of the intention to rescind the contract and, if appropriate, to contact the suitable administrative agency for help or action. Some of the agencies that may be helpful are listed here:

WHAT TO DO BESIDES COMPLAIN

If you feel that you have been the subject of an improper act by a sales or service or repair person the first course of action is not the formal agency complaint, but some action calculated to rectify the problem. In the great majority of cases the organization (certainly the management) does not intend to defraud the consumer. It does intend to make a profit, but the two desires are not synonomous. The following general course of conduct is suggested although in any given case some steps may not apply. The steps are designed to both achieve satisfaction for you as consumer and protect your legal opportunities if all else fails.

1. Keep a copy of all paperwork connected with your order, purchase, or repair including checks; do not return anything but duplicates or papers that have been zeroxed or similarly copied to the merchant.

2. Do not sign releases or cash checks for refunds or settlements unless and until you are satisfied.

3. Many merchants (particularly auto repairmen) require cash payment. This is lawful, but be sure to get a receipt. If a check is accepted, do not stop payment as, in some cases, this may be a crime. Make the payment necessary to get the item or merchandise returned to you; your recourse may be limited to Small Claims Court, but that is not a difficult procedure.

4. If you discover a problem, confront senior management people with your complaint. Describe carefully what you ordered and what was not properly done. Show the papers, but retain them. Permit the merchant at least one chance to explain and correct the defect. Be sure that if you sign anything if specifically states the work or change to be done and the estimated cost to you, if any. Do not ever sign open-ended repair orders. Require that you be notified before the estimate is exceeded.

5. If the merchant is a franchise, and the correction is not reasonably made, notify his or her superiors in the larger organization (cars particularly).

6. Keep written records of all your transactions and do not sign releases or checks until you are completely satisfied, but when you are you should sign such releases. Require, however, that guarantees be in writing and specific.

7. If all else fails, complain and/or see a lawyer and/or the Small Claims Court.

In Cambodia

The United States government has been airlifting supplies at a rate of at least 10 cargo planes a day, to the Cambodian capital of Phnom Penh.

On Tuesday the U.S. began airlifting urgently needed fuel to Phnom Penh, whose supply routes have been cut by Khmer Rouge, Viet Cong, and North Vietnamese forces, for three weeks.

The U.S. Air Force sends daily B-52 raids against the opponents of Premier Lon Nol that greatly resemble the raids on North Vietnam late last year. American air support appears to be a major factor keeping the Lon Nol government from collapse.

While not claiming to be experts in international relations we would think a policy of restraint in our support of the Phnom Penh government a wise one. American involvement at this point is already at a stage of development far beyond our initial involvement in Vietnam.

To perpetuate the moral crisis and social division fostered on us by the Vietnam War, by continuing that same war in Cambodia, would be a ludicrous and bankrupt policy for the U.S.

Let's not continue in Cambodia, what we have worked so hard to end in Vietnam.

We would urge those concerned to use the greatest restraint in our relations with the government of Lon Nol.

A New Dance Craze

By MARSHALL T. SPRIGGS

(Amherst, Mass.)—The University of Massachusetts at Amherst has been experiencing a new dance craze this year—and it's all because of the Administration. Any time during the regular business day one can go to the administration building and see scenes of people doing what is called the "Whitmore Shuffle".

The dance is a rather elaborate one but, this being an educational institution, the rules are rather easy to learn—in fact, many people have participated in the dance for as long as four years without really understanding that that's what they're doing. The usual way that the dance starts is when a person, usually a student, walks into the fort-like building.

The student is usually in search of an IBM card or a signature that is required by one of the more regionalized dance studios located at different locations on the campus. He or she then goes to the office in the administration building to which he/she has been sent and the first phase of the dance begins.

The person that the student first approaches, usually a female, tells the student that that particular office is not the right office to get that IBM card or signature and sends Joe or Mary UMie to another office—usually all the way across the building. The secretary there says the same thing and sends the student to yet another office. And so the pattern continues, in this delightful random pattern, sometimes for hours, sometimes for days. One of the great things about this dance is that the people who do it never know exactly when the dance will end. In fact, they don't know if the person whose signature they are after even exists or if there is an IBM card for the purpose that they desire.

The craze has hit so hard in this small New England town that virtually everyone who goes to the University here does it at one time or another. It's a huge fad.

When asked about the craze, a spokesman for the University said, "It's a fit preparation for the real world". "Let's shuffle forward—together."

Vietnam Hangover

At last, disengagement appears to be more than mere rhetoric. Many people are happy. President Nixon is happy, having been spared the pain of being the first American President to preside over a military rout. American servicemen are even happier, since the prospects of an early-death have been reduced substantially. Obviously, the former Prisoners of War are happy, despite being labelled as "war criminals" and "liars" by the likes of Jane Fonda and Phillip Berrigan, xince almost anything is preferable to the type of torture which they were subjected to during their stay in Communist prisons. Most of the American people are happy, now that there aren't any more gorey reports on the evening news. And one can be certain that the Communists in Indochina are happier than they were when the Americans were omnipresent.

But the conflict over there is far from over. President Thieu, despite that big Swiss Bank Account which every schoolboy knows he possesses, is holding firm in Saigon and has far more followers than is critics are willing to acknowledge. The Government of North Vietnam, despite the damage sustained by the U.S. response to their Easter Offensive, have not shelved their ambitions to extend the Communist rule over all of Indo-China. Their current military drive into Cambodia has succeeded in isolating the capitol city of Phnom Penh, currently beleaguered near starvation, save for an occasional supply drop by the United States. The Viet Cong are on the move, too. They seem to be aiming their surface-to-airs with deadly accuracy, downing several helicopters belonging to the International Control Commission, which were coming dangerously close to gaining a birds-eye view of V.C. cease-fire violations. And, as we are repeatedly informed, with horror and indigation, the United States is using its planes to break up Communist positions surrounding the Cambodian capitol.

And what about the state of affairs on the College Campuses, now that the troops have been withdrawn from the battlefield? The leaders of the so-called "anti-war" movement, who attempted to "bring the war home" for all those years, claim that they are ready to go into action again should Nixon make things hard on the Reds in Indo-China. Why, only last week a big demonstration was held in front of the Student Union, to protest President Thieu, who was visiting the President at San Clemente. Reliable sources report that as many as thirty-five angry students showed up to denounce the meeting in California. Also, there seems to be trouble brewing over the possible return of academic credit for the Reserve Officers Training Corps (ROTC). Should the trustees dare to defy the will of Larry Ladd, Maggie Houghton, and the Young Socialist Alliance, we should brace ourselves for the worst: a military assault on Dickinson Hall by the lost legions from the Center for Social Change, the Mayday Tribe, the Free University, and the People's Market. Think Pink, Fink!

Two Things

I. The First Thing (in order of Appearance)

In order not to keep up appearance for appearance's sake, I would like you to consider one thing-why is it that people always dislike different ways of doing things? Now, I could say that's human nature, but then again, we're viewing things that are supposedly true, right? Well, then, let's say that it upsets comfortable patterns of thought, or that this "new thing" is a threat to those material possessions a person owns. Now, that, my friends, is Lesson #1 in how to be a relevant writer...you look not to morals, not to heart, but to greed, and when that happens things get pretty grim.

Now, why would you feel a need to put down somebody like the followers of the Maharaj Ji, who have actually done nothing to you? Ah, yes, for laughs...why, if you are so secure in yourselves, do you need to look at something else and chuckle in contempt.

I do not preach; I am simply trying to tell you something, and you can do with the facts what you wish.

But...

I went to one of the meetings of the followers of the Maharaj Ji last week, and these people are trying to do something about the circumstances they find themselves (and the world) in, rather than just sitting in their rooms either meditating or smoking dope (and bitching). Now, not being presumptuous (or looney, or anything else you'd want me to be), the most difficult part of this thing for me is the idea of a "Perfect Master". Then it was explained that a Perfect Master is much the same as a math master, or a teacher of some subject. So the Guru Maharaj Ji teaches perfection. Having been brought up in a "rational" Western society, which says you gain knowledge through books instead of through action, to the source of knowledge, makes you wonder just how rational the entire thing is, doesn't it? I must admit, in addition, however, that I have yet to see the solution to the entire world's problems through just one person. However, if this one person may act as a simple focus for energies, then theoretically there is not too much wrong with it. And if a possibility exists, then it should be investigated rather thoroughly (according to previous laws of investigative science, I might add), before it can be discarded as nonsense. A puffing of breath and a shrug of the shoulders on your part tells me nothing that I don't already know. I already know that you're bored, or I wouldn't want to talk to you. And I already know that most of these movements are given without much prior thought. At least know why the hell you're dumping on something before you dump on it. "I don't like it," is not an answer from my frame of reference. Rather, it's just an easy way out of a difficult question.

According to the Guru Maharaj Ji's followers, 1973 is the year, and Amecoa seems to be missing the message. It's behind all the other countries contacted as far as "receiving knowledge" goes. Even if they're wrong (about receiving knowledge from the Maharaj Ji), they seem to have guessed correctly, since the United States is dense -especially if its' in regard to its own basic art form.

II. The Black Musicians Conference

Okay, suppose you're this important person, but there is another person who isn't nearly half (even that) important and/or rich as you, but he's doing something that's more important than whatever you could ever do. What to do, what to do?...I know, you take this thing and mass-produce this person's commodity without his consent. And, of course, no one will condemn you because, well, this guy's only a slave and you're rich through your own cleverness, so it is right' it is the American way. Bing. No questioning involved. And we criticize dogmatists?

Black music was the music of slaves, kind folk. And the Black Musicians Conference is and will be bringing dominant questions in the United States' continuum to the fold, as well as bringing to campus a lot of the people you just never hear on the radio ("They won't play the real thing on the radio"–Art Davis).

Stop and consider the amount and type of thing you hear on the radio or see in the record shops. Now, of course, you know what you like (the first sign of closedmindedness), and it just so happens that the record industry also knows what you like, because, to use Max Roach's idea "Black Music became a prize commodity which could be easily exploited." Okay, you guitarists out there, how many of you can play the blues? Virtually unanimous I see. Well, that's fine and dandy, but you can go directly into the system you see, while this poor old guy down South is starving because you are playing the music he created. Aha, gotcha that time...

In all seriousness, though, this type of thing happens all the time, and not just in the blues. It happens in seemingly the best circumstances, so that some of the finest musicians in the United States are forced to go over to Europe in order to have any sort of a decent living. And the problem that develops with this is that even when a Black Musician's records sell in the United States, one is, in Sunny Murray's words "Feeding the monster," because this type of system has a nasty attribute of multiplying with astounding speed. On the panel discussion Monday, it was stated that music should not be looked upon as just another entertainment source, but rather as something which had multiple usage, including that of chronicling the times we're living in. Now do you see why Black Music doesn't get any airplay? And why should you glorify a culture that you're trying to keep down? Not too good for the Public Relations Department...

The format for this week of the Black Musicians Conference features topics which should be of interest to people who view Music as more than something your speakers put out when you put a record on a turntable at home.

Haven't you out there ever asked yourself why you do not hear different things on radio, or on the "vast wasteland? Oh, I could give you an answer, but you probably wouldn't believe me, so why not check out some of the things that are happening this week in the Black Music Conference? What have you got to lose kid? Not much. I wish you realization.

Letters To The Editor

The Clubbing Creature

To The Editor:

It's rumored that some huge, ugly creature with a club hangs out behind the bushes and cracks people over the head when they alter their facial expression from the basic ground staring position, straight lipped, zombiness. Once in a while, someone will use variation #2 on the expression - a stare straight ahead into space (as though they are trying to read a billboard off in the distance). If they are asked a question, the basic step - one, two, one . . . mustn't slow down an instant and the tape recorded answer of "Fine." or "O.K." comes out from slightly moving lips even if the question or comment was, "Nice day, isn't it?" We have to keep up our guard against that horrible creature with the club.

Why are people afraid to smile? to say "Hi!" or "How are you?" and seriously mean it? I really don't know much about psychology other that what I feel and when I see other people around here I just have a sense that they feel the same way. Everyone wants to smile, wants to be friendly, wants to stop and talk- especially on a sunny, spring day. (Must be that the beast doesn't like sunshine because a few people actually are affected by the fantastic sun - which, I suppose, could be attributed to over-exposure.)

As you read this sentence - look at the people around you. (But watch out for the creature with the club) Doesn't our zombie system need a little modification? It only takes a step at a time - if you follow the prescribed method below to escape the club on the head, one person might start a chain reaction. The truth of the matter is, if everyone started being friendly and dropped the zombie expression - that creature would go out of business. That'd be fantastic since part-time work is so hard to get these days. You know, it's like the silver bullet and the werewolf.

The procedure, very basic so even an adult can understand, will not guarantee immediate, fantastic results, but it may, and a lot of people around here are willing to gamble.

The best day to conduct the experiment is in sunshine, the beast is least likely to strike on a nice, warm day. He tends to come out at night so don't be too disappointed if the only reaction you get to the procedure above is a quickening of the pass-by phase.

If we all were to work at it, perhaps the fairy tale would have a happy ending and the "Clubbing Creature" wouldn't be able to gloat over all the people who feel lost, sad, and really lonely because they are afraid of the club. I wish I were a wizard and knew a spell of rid us of our zombie inhibitions. There isn't magic to do that. Magic is in the smile.

BASIC STEPS ON DESTROYING THE DREADED
CLUBBING CREATURE

As you walk towards someone, preferably a total stranger --

#1.) Attempt to maintain eye contact (even if they take the usual ground staring position, they usually glance up once or twice - catch it)

#2.) Allow the corners of your mouth to turn slightly upwards (And if you're not to paranoid about the brace job you had as a kid, give them a little teeth)

#3.) Maintain both #1 and #2, give a slight nod (you should now be within the 5 foot and zeroing in on the pass-by phase)

#4.) With sincere interest make use of any of the following comments, questions or combinations here ot (you can substitute your own lines if desired - though the creature tends to knock you one if you try too hard on the first shot):

a.) How are you?
b.) What a day!
c.) Good - - -- (morning, afternoon, evening or whatever)

Why Not ROTC?

To The Editor:

I would like to comment on those people who are vehemently opposed to R.O.T.C. What is wrong with you people? In reference to an article Tuesday, April 3, I feel this person is very naive and wish she would look into the picture more deeply. There is no way in this world that the U.S. will ever lose its armed forces and I hope no one is counting on it. I believe to have a good and capable military you have to have intelligent and clear-minded officers. R.O.T.C. produces these officers through universities like U-Mass. Even if the military does teach them in some areas it is because they are more qualified to teach the R.O.T.C. student in accordance with his military career. The military teaches a candidate in areas where they feel the University is inadequate. Why are some people so down on a R.O.T.C.? He's just like everyone else. All he wants is to get an education that will serve him in his lively-hood. Who are you to deprive him of this because of war, or Nixon, or some other reason that so many people drum up. If people would spend as much time studying as they do arguing on issues such as R.O.T.C. this school couldn't put all the students on the Dean's List. I think this University needs this kind of concern in a lot more areas and not R.O.T.C.

Spruce, You Fools

To The Editor:

This is in response to the gross injustice done by the COLLEGIAN staff (April 11) to one of our most majestic trees; the Norway Spruce (Picea abies). Several centuries of unheralded toil by such distinguished naturalists as Carolus Linnaeus and Charles Darwin were uncaringly tossed aside by the thoughless misnomer which referred this Spruce as belonging to the Pinaceae (Pine) family. We are deeply disheartened by the treatment commonly received by our defenseless monuments of life, and would greatly appreciate a little respect for our vast array of plant metabolisms.

Spare Change?

To The Editor:

For those of you who have been in the Bluewall since the age has changed, perhaps you've noticed that it is very much harder to reach the bar for your drink. But I ask you to forget about your own hassles now, and to think about the poor bartenders who are frantically trying to accommodate the thirsty crowds.

For the benefit of anyone unfamiliar with bar-room etiquette, it is a common practice to tip the bartender. However, this does not seem to be happening much at the Bluewall. I sympathize with the general poverty of the college student, but it does not seem unreasonable to give a nickel or dime tip while buying your drink. You might even notice your service getting better as a direct result of your generosity. So, the next time you go drinking at the Bluewall, be kind to your friendly bartender.

NOTE: The bouncers would appreciate your dropping any loose change on the floor, too.

Your Opinion May Help

To The Editor:

As a confused questioner, I would like to ask if there are any women who have gone through the agonizing ordeal of abortion and would be willing to write to this column. Their views, pro and con and possibly their nightmares could be very helpful to someone who may have to make this very controversial decision.

Abortion is a major concern for a lot of people these days. This knowledge which only these women have could really clarify some of the confusion that a great many males and females are experiencing. The idea of abortion is frightening, if you are the one who has to make this decision. Moral decisions are the most difficult to make in this world. I'm not calling it murder, and I'm not calling it grace, but it is a decision that has to be made sometimes.

Making a joke out of something is sometimes cool, if it is the only way that you can get a response, but let's get serious too. Now that people are talking, let's try and get something good out of all this. Playing the "Dear Amie" fun battles of who can make the best joke isn't accomplishing much, but they did get responses. If we are all going to use our imaginations I'm sure we can get a laugh. It doesn't seem to be doing anything but making people sick of the whole thing.

My opinion on the subject as it is now, (subject to change without notice), is that when there is a moral decision to be made like this, it is a decision between two people. Especially for the woman, she is the one who goes through everything. It is she who is in the operating room, not the waiting room; if there is someone in the waiting room.

I would also like to point out that a great many who are pro-abortion are taking this stand because they would like to see a LAW drawn so that the courts won't be making the decision for them. I believe that the courts shouldn't have a say in personal moral decisions. It would be easy to sit back and say it's immoral or illegal. You're going to have the child for better or for worse, for richer or for poorer. I now pronounce you parent. Good Luck! That just doesn't seem to make it in my eyes. It would be an easy way to avoid making the decision, but I think there must be a better way. I would like to ask again, please send in some letters, and make it easier to decide. At least your opinion may help someone.

Only Bigots

To The Editor:

This letter is in response to an article written by Alan K. Wright labeled Racist Sports Story, which appeared in the April 10th, issue.

I believe Howie Bloom's article concerning the lacrosse team was not only well written, but well thought out as well. However, it seems you do not agree with this. Perhaps this little quote will shed some light on the subject: "Only bigots and racists could find bigotry and racism in an un-bigotted un-racist article."

Think about it Mr. Wright. Perhaps you should spend your time writing articles to the John Birch Society or the Klan. Maybe then your ideas on racism and bigotry will hold true.

You Deserve To Pay

To The Editor:
Dear Mr. Romano:

I have not heard anything as ridiculous as your attack on the dining commons. It is not founded in fact as these kind of hostile, irrational and immature attacks can rarely be.

Granted they would not allow you to eat without your meal ticket after your temporary pass ran out. This seems to be a reasonable policy to anyone who can think rationally but it seems to elude your mind. They give you the two-day pass to give you time to find your ticket or buy a replacement which is only $3.00. You say that you have to buy the rest of your meals, well if you are not smart enough to pay $3.00 for a replacement then you deserve to pay. Also it seems that if you have heard of the U.S. Postal Service your meal ticket could easily be returned and alleviate your crying about a 140 mile retrieval trip. By the way the meal ticket could be mailed for 16¢ and with the mail service could arrive within a couple of days. Pretty good system, thought you might like to know about it.

Therefore I hope you continue to pay for your meals until you grow up and realize your own stupidity. After all did the hostile dining commons lady leave your meal ticket in Connecticut? May the Salisbury steak be forever plastered to your wall.

A Respectable Dealer

By BRIAN FITZGERALD

There is a certain breed of animal that inhabits this campus. His type can usually be seen tooling through the 'Hatch' looking just as freaky as the next freak with his army jacket and sun glasses but behind those Foster Grants and sew on 'DR. PEPPER' patches lies a man whose only apparent purpose here on Earth is to observe who passes what to whom under the table at the hatch. This man will sit next to the jukebox for hours noticing only those who notice him first for he knows that if you look into another's eyes, those eyes will soon look away giving the observer free reign. Sometimes he sits on the benches in the Campus Center noticing how many times the same person might walk by looking for a connection. He remembers everyone by their own individual 'shtick': a fancy hat, a cape, a manner of walking or perhaps the way a cigarette is held - and he files all this information away for whenever he'll need it. He probably has a phone number in the back of his mind someplace, and he probably gets cash in the mail every once in a while, but the funniest thing about this man is that he thinks he is not being watched himself and henceforth considers himself unable to be satirized by a newspaper.

I received a phone call at nine-thirty one evening from a man who identified himself to be a member of the Speech Department. He asked me if I would mind answering a few questions concerning how I spend my leisure time. I consented. His first question was, "Do you listen to AM radio?" The answer was no. He then continued to probe the inside of my room by finding out how much time I spent listening to what kind of music and generally goading me to start bragging about electric possessions.

"Do you own a tape deck?" This was a prize question. If the answer was yes, the caller would cover up why he had asked by immediately asking, "What kind?" This might make you think you were about to be sold something. Which is what he wants you to think if you didn't believe him when he said he was from the Speech Department.

All I know is that if I were a narc and I had you under surveillance, I'd call you up on the phone at a time when you'd probably be blowing dope listening to music, tell you that I had a just cause to ask you some questions and then see what you'd say. If you still played along with me, I'd then ask you as much as I could about how much cash you had tied up in expensive stereo equipment and then I'd find out how much time you spent listening to it. Also, if I were a narc, I wouldn't be able to look myself in the mirror afterwards.

Is this what the Game is turning into? Why I can remember when I was a young man how selling cocaine used to be a profession that called for wits and courage because the enemy was a dedicated group of professionals whom you respected and admired for their intelligence. The respect of others is what holds this whole world together.

Lennon's Case

By MICHAEL UGOLINI

John Lennon is currently appealing a court order to leave the United States by May 21st. John was ruled deportable by a U.S. Immigration Service judge March 23rd because of a 1968 British conviction on a charge of possession of hashish. John and Yoko were given special visas so that they could be present at a case involving the custody of Kyoko, Yoko's daughter by a previous marriage. However, they have not been able to locate Kyoko and it is believed that she is with her father. A close examination of this case reveals yet another mockery of justice displayed by the Government.

First of all, it is the outcome of the case involving Kyoko which is the foremost reason that the Lennons should be allowed to remain in the U.S. The court ruled that the girl is in Yoko's custody on condition that she be raised in the United States (she is an American citizen). Since John is Yoko's husband it seems only fair that they both be allowed to stay regardless of some petty hashish conviction.

Another reason is that John's case can be reopened due to several technicalities. The arresting officer is now being tried for perjury and conspiracy to pervert the course of justice. (The officer gained quite a reputation for rock celebrity arrests, i.e. Brian Jones, George Harrison, Eric Clapton.) Also, when John was arrested, British law did not state whether the accused had to have knowledge that he possessed the drug. British law has since changed. Now it must be established that the accused was aware of possession. John claims that he wasn't using drugs at the time because he and Yoko were on a macrobiotic diet. He claims that the hashish was planted.

The third reason is that the law under which John was ruled deportable specified "illicit possession of narcotic drugs or marijuana." It neither mentions hashish or cannabis resin by name nor defines marijuana.

These are the facts of the case. It seems strange indeed that the Government is attempting to deport someone on a technicality like marijuana conviction when in fact it was a cannabis resin conviction. Conviction for cannibis resin as a reason for deportment is not even on the books. The Government's case is very weak when you add to that the fact that John was convicted on a law that has since been changed (expost facto yes, but unjust nevertheless).

"I LOOK AT YOU ALL THE WHOLE WEEKEND BEFORE I FALL ASLEEP BUT ON MONDAY MORNING YOU'RE GONE AND ALL THAT I'VE LEFT IS THE SMELL OF YOUR ALL BEYOND."

It is obvious that in John Lennon's case the Government is interpreting the laws to suppress viewpoints that are Anti-War, Anti-American, or present a means of reinforcing an already existing credibility gap between people and Government. They wouldn't want that pinko rat to infect our children with his radical ideology or his pot smoking advocacy (our children smoke much pot already without his help). What they do want, it seems, is a nice, orderly society where there is no dissent and resistance so that their political and economic machines can function smoothly without screw-ups.

UYA: Helping At Home

By CHARLES BERKOW

Last Thursday, there was an anti-war rally on the steps of the Student Union. There was a pretty poor turnout; only about a dozen people came. The rabble-rouser who was speaking didn't need the bull horn he was using. It was nothing, really, compared with anti-war rallies in the past at UMass.

Last Thursday, there was also recruitment meeting for the University Year for ACTION program. About 50 people showed up, a good turnout. The people who get into the University Year for ACTION program (UYA) will work for a year at an anti-poverty project, program, or agency in Western Massachusetts and will get a year's credit from the University, plus about $50 a week to live on.

Maybe the war in Indochina is over for us. Nobody that any of us knows is still there. None of us are going to be sent there. None of us or our friends are going to get shot up there. The war isn't close to home to many of us anymore.

The people who get in UYA will work at trying to help the disenfranchised people in their own country, the poor, learn their rights and how to get them. They will work at schools, giving retarted kids in Belchertown and drop-outs in Worcester a chance they have never had. They will work in prisons, trying to help the prisons really rehabilitate inmates, not just punish them.

People are still being killed in Vietnam and in Cambodia. But that is far away. And people are being killed at home in America, too, although less perceptibly, and less dramatically.

UYA is run by the federal government's ACTION agency, which also operated VISTA and the Peace Corps.

It is beginning its third year at UMass with a recruitment drive this month for the group starting work this summer.

The next recruitment meeting will be on April 18 at 8:00 in room 165 of the Campus Center. UYA's office is at 513 East Pleasant Street.

So far, about 200 students have joined the UMass/Amherst/UYA, making it the largest program in the country.

UYA Volunteers work outside the "ivory towers," in the urban communities, in the rural communities, in the institutions where people are "up against it" as a way of life.

But they are also students, and they bring practical new insights to their courses when they return to the University.

There is not the fun, the hip-pageantry, or the carnival atmosphere of the big anti-war protests of the past. The work is hard, it is sustained over a long time, and it is not as pretty. People have to put more into UYA, but they seem to get more out of it.

Nobody spends most of their time trying to strike a simplistic death-blow to a die-hard problem ("Bring the troops home!") UYA Volunteers spend most of their time trying to deal person-to-person with individual problems, the little problems (that add up).

But at the end of a day, or the end of a year, the UYA Volunteer can look back and see the concrete gains or changes in people's lives that he or she helped to make.

UYA will never draw the numbers of people that the old demonstrations did. It takes more commitment, more realism, more action, more time . . . more work.

But it is also more effective in changing conditions that cloud people's lives.

Charles Berkow is in the University Year for Action Program.

Jury Indicts Tax Evader

Krock Gets Knocked

By ROBERT B. ROBINSON
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) - International financer Edward Krock was indicted by a federal grand jury Wednesday in what Internal Revenue Service officials say is the "largest individual tax case in the history of the United States."

Krock, 61, was accused by the grand jury of evading almost $1.5 million in personal income taxes.

The indictment, returned in U. S. District Court here, totaled seven counts, accusing Krock of failing to report more than $2 million of income in 1966, 1967 and 1968.

It also charged him with willfully filing fraudulent returns from 1966 through 1969.

Krock also was accused of omitting income of over $3 million in sales of securities in 1966, 1967 and 1968 and omitting interest of almost $10,000.

In all, Krock was charged with failing to report more than $6.2 million in income.

In 1971 Krock pleaded guilty in New York federal court to charges of filing false reports with the Securities and Exchange Commission and making illegal solicitations of proxies while he was treasurer of the Fifth Avenue Coach Co. He was fined $22,500 and placed on five years probation.

Fifth Avenue sold its bus operations to New York City in 1962, and Krock shared in the $32.7 million paid in the condemnation.

Krock testified as a government witness at two trials of lawyer-financer Roy M. Cohn. Cohn was acquitted in 1969 of bribery and conspiracy and in 1971 of fraud conspiracy in the Fifth Avenue Coach case.

The government had claimed Cohn diverted $2.7 million to himself, Krock and Victor Muscat.

Krock, who now lives in Brookfield, Mass., was a newsboy for the Worcester Gazette. At age 16, he bought a grocery store and later sold it for a profit.

By 1965, he was an officer in 14 companies and affiliated with interest valued over $600 million.

He was a frequent visitor to the White House during the administrations of Presidents John F. Kennedy and Lyndon B. Johnson. He was a contributor to the Kennedy campaign in 1964.

Krock was awarded the "American Success Story Award" in 1964 by the Free Enterprise Awards Association.

At one time, he was an official of the Defiance Industries of Ohio; B.S.F. Co. of California; American Steel and Pump of New York; Wright Machine Corp. of Worcester, and the Mercantile National Bank of Chicago.

MIT Prof To Speak On Financial Crisis

Professor Charles P. Kindleberger of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology will speak under the sponsorship of the Department of Economics on the subject of "Contemporary International Financial Crisis: A Passing Crisis or a Harbinger of Western Disaster?" on Wednesday, April 18 at 3:00 - 4:30 P.M., Campus Center, Room 904-908.

One of the most pre-eminent American authorities in the field of international finance and trade and monetary problems, Professor Kindleberger will deal with the issues raised by the recent two devaluations of the American dollar, the "overhang" of 40 or more billions of American dollars in the Central Banks of industrial nations and the prospects for negotiating a new viable international monetary system.

All students, Faculty and Administrators are welcome to this lecture.

Weathered and aged, beaten by winter
and hoping for spring.

Schuss !

MONTPELIER, Vt. (AP) - Two heavy snowstorms in a row have given Vermont ski areas an unexpected reprieve from an unusually warm and early spring.

Several areas announced Wednesday they would stay open longer than expected or reopen for the week-end. More than two feet of snow reportedly fell at Stowe, Sugarbush and Stratton Mountain areas during the past two weeks. The areas were reporting winter skiing conditions.

Chan Weller, a spokesmen for the Sugarbush ski area said the biggest problem posed by re-opening after the spell of warm weather was rehiring personnel such as lift operators and kitchen help, who were let go when warm weather closed the ski area.

A spokesman for Stratton Mountain said the most difficult task was overcoming the psychological hold of spring, in other words, getting people in the mood for skiing again after they've already played the first round of golf of the season.

Oil Spill In Maine

SOUTH PORTLAND, Maine (AP) - Between 5,000 and 10,000 gallons of kerosene spilled into the Fore River through a break in a Gulf Oil Co. underwater oil line, the Coast Guard reported Wednesday.

The oil was discovered around 9 a.m., said Lt. Michael Raschio, and the source of the spill was pinpointed shortly before noon.

Much of the kerosene had been dispersed by winds and tides, said Raschio, and the light oil was reported on the shore in the Turner's Island area of South Portland.

He said the six-inch submerged oil line may have been damaged by the propeller of a vessel.

The line is one of three that run between Gulf's Portland and South Portland tank farms.

Park Cabs Go Up

By ARTHUR EVERETT
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP)—The high cost of living it up.

On a motion by Councilman Angelo Arculeo, a Republican-Conservative from Brooklyn, the City Council's finance committee has increased the rates for Central Park's colorful hansom cabs to $10 for the first half-hour and $4 per additional half-hour.

It's twice the former rate, but the first increase in 11 years.

WENTACHEE, Wash. (AP)-Nine-year-old Sandra Kimble's nightgown caught fire last month and her body was badly burned.

Since then, she has been kept alive by pigskin dressings, through a technique developed by Dr. Ben Knecht.

He supervised the daily application of pigskin dressings flown here from Phoenix, Ariz., at a cost of more than $100 per day. Laid on the burned areas, the pigskin reduced the chance of infection, prevented fluid losses and eased the pain.

But Sandra's progress has been such that the pigskins are no longer necessary. She has begun receiving grafts of her own skin to restore the damaged areas.

SHAKER, Calif. (AP)—Butterflies aren't free here. John Nickelsen and Carlos White have begun their annual spring roundup of butterfly larvae, which they retail at $6 per set. Last year, they sold 15,000 sets.

"We raise butterflies in cages like cattle in corrals at a ranch," explained Nickelsen. "We strip their eggs off host plants and then the eggs are incubated and the larvae are allowed to grow to about a quarter of an inch long."

Schools and individuals buy the larvae to observe the 30-day growth process of the butterfly. Said Nickelsen:

"It's one of nature's most fascinating feats, converting a sightless larva into a colorful creature."

Blackness Is A Rainbow

The UMass Program Council will present the United Black Artists (UBA) of the Cornell University Africana Studies and Research Center in concert in the original theatrical production "Blackness Is A Rainbow" in the Campus Center Auditorium on Saturday, April 14th at 8:15 p.m.

Described as a "total theater" production, "Blackness Is A Rainbow" is a chromatic interpretation of the Black experience according to the colors of the rainbow.

Conceived by Chestyn Everett, Langston Hughes Professor of Black Theater Arts at Cornell, the production will be under his direction in association with Ms. C. Bethany Jenkins.

Curtis B. Taylor, a graduate student in music at Cornell from Charleston, S.C., and Phoebe Hamilston, a junior music major at Ithaca College from Rochester, will serve as music directors for the production. Other members of UBA's cast include Calvary Baptist Church choir of Ithaca, New York, guest dancers Diana McIntyre, Dorian Williams and William Donald of New York City, guest UBA actress Gwen Nelson of Newark, N.J., and artists from the New Africa House, University of Massachusetts.

Tickets will be on sale at the door for $1.00.

Returning Westover POW's Speakout

By MARY SCHEIER
Associated Press Writer

CHICOPEE, Mass. (AP)—A B52 navigator says that, from inside the Hanoi Hilton attacking, B52s sounded "awful" and made him afraid he'd be hit.

"I'd never heard a B52 from that angle before," said Maj. Fernando Alexander, 44, of Chicopee at a Wednesday news conference. "I can recall crawling under my bunk because the walls were rattling."

Alexander and four other airmen all stationed at Westover Air Force Base here held the news conference. They were shot down in two separate incidents last December.

Three were fellow crewmembers with Alexander: Capt. Hal Wilson III, 34, of Palmer, pilot of the plane shot down Dec. 19; Capt. Charles Brown Jr., 26, of Bakersfield, Calif., co-pilot; and Capt. Henry Barrows, 26, of South Hadley, the electronics warfare officer.

Two other crewmembers of that plane are listed as missing.

Also speaking at the news conference was Lt. Paul Granger, 25, of San Anselmo, Calif., copilot of a B52 shot down Dec. 20.

The five men said that apparently because of the impending Vietnam ceasefire they were never tortured. But they said the North Vietnamese treated prisoners in the Hanoi Hilton unequally in an apparent attempt to make the POWs jealous and distrustful of each other.

Alexander and his three crewmates originally shared the same cell, but were later moved to different cells in the same block. Granger was in a different part of the prison.

"Each one of us had our own life style depending on where we lived," Alexander said. His block had three daily lockups, but prisoners were allowed to talk and play sports.

Granger's group could roam freely outside of the cells but could not intermingle or take part in sports. He said some prisoners were given mail while others weren't.

"I believe the reason was they were trying to split up groups, trying to show favoritism and trying to sow dissension," Granger said.

"We would have to sit down and talk to keep this from becoming a sore point," Alexander added.

Barrows said that the prison food was "great," if you liked pumpkin soup and cabbage soup.

"If we said, 'Gee, the soup is really bad today,' someone else would say, 'You should've been here a couple of years ago,'" he said.

Granger and Brown had different accounts of Christmas at the Hanoi Hilton.

Granger said a guard came in with a bag of candy given by a priest in a nearby cathedral.

"He said it was for Christmas and that, 'If you had not come to bomb our country, you would not be here. You'll have a blue Christmas,'" Granger said.

Brown said one of his interrogators came in to his cell Christmas Eve and said, "Merry Christmas. I think you'll spend four more years in Vietnam."

"I said, 'Son of a gun'," Brown added.

Alexander said he and the other prisoners "talked about Jane Fonda pro and con, We were in the prison complex she visited. I at one time gave her the benefit of the doubt and figured she was naive."

He said that, after Miss Fonda called former prisoners "liars and hypocrites" for their descriptions of torture, "I lost all respect for her."

The five men said they thought B52 bombers did an "outstanding" job of hitting military targets.

"The North Vietnamese would intermix a military target with a civilian establishment," Brown said. "It's awful hard to pick out a military site when it's surrounded by houses and people. I think we did an outstanding job."

The men said they were unaware of dissension among prisoners, prisoner complicity with the enemy, or deaths in prison camps.

"The biggest casualty I saw was Jam. Alexander coming in white as a sheet with plaster all over," Barrows said, referring to Alexander's reaction to a bombing raid.

Barrows, a native of Germany, said he thought that postwar aid to North Vietnam might be as effective in helping to "bury the hatchet" as the Marshall Plan was in aiding Europe after World War II.

Wilson said the North Vietnamese "played up" the extent of American bombing of dikes and said he didn't think the Bach Mai Hospital in Hanoi was being used as a hospital when it was bombed.

Brown said he thought draft resisters should be allowed back into the country, but should serve in a nonmilitary capacity for a period of time.

Brown is the only one of the five planning to leave the Air Force. He said he doesn't want any more long separations from his wife.

The five men among them had a low of nineteen B52 missions over North Vietnam for Granger to a high of 275 for Alexander.

Peace Corps Farm Training For Africa

On Thursday, April 12, Professor Clarence H. Parsons, former Extension Service Specialist of the University, will speak to th Peace Corps interns, future volunteers and interested students. The topics of his presentation will be the effectiveness of farm demonstrations, the work with individual farmers and the use of visual aids. After many years of service in the College of Food and Natural Resources, Professor Parsons spent four years in Africa under a contract of the University with AID. The presentation will be illustrated with charts and slides and there will be time for discussions and refreshments.

Court of Appeals

Student Paper Independence Upheld In Court

RICHMOND, Va. (AP)-A federal appeals court had held that a college president cannot withhold funds from a campus newspaper simply because he disagrees with what he considers its racist editorial policies.

The 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, in a 2-1 decision Wednesday, overturned a ruling which had upheld the action of Albert N. Whiting, president of predominantly black North Carolina Central University.

Whiting terminated financial support for The Campus Echo after its editor, Johnnie E. Joyner, published an editorial criticizing an influx of white students.

Whiting said The Echo did not "represent fairly the full spectrum of views on this campus," and that the university would oppose any practice or policy that would "deprive any individual of a right or privilege because of race."

The Circuit Court said a college "may not restrict speech simply because it finds the views expressed by one group to be abhorrent."

A district court had upheld Whiting's action on the grounds the 1964 Civil Rights Act barred a state agency from spending state funds to discourage racial integration "by a program of harassment, discourtesy, and indicia of unwelcome."

Organization Formed To Deal With Future 'Red Tide'

BOSTON (AP)-A regional organization has been proposed to deal in an organized way with any future outbreaks of the "red tide" along the New England coast.

A special committee appointed by Massachusetts Public Health Commissioner William J. Bicknell said in a preliminary report that the Bay State take the lead in dealing with the problem.

The committee was appointed after the red tide algae, which secretes toxins which contaminate shellfish, forced the closing of shellfish harvesting from Maine to Long Island Sound last September.

The committee report recommended that an eight-member committee of scientists and public health experts to develop a coordinated program should the algae strike again. The committee would be headed by a fulltime official paid $25,000 a year.

The report also called for 25 monitoring stations throughout New England to check periodically the toxic level of shellfish, improved testing and research facilities and 24-hour policing of contaminated areas and tighter inspection of shellfish outlets.

THE CHANGE IN SEASONS is more than welcomed by the flock of seagulls patronizing the Martha's Vineyard Ferry. The prospect of a fresh crop of popcorn carrying passengers is as appealing to them as the year's first tan is to their benefactors.

Everywoman's Center Sponsors Child Birth Films

Everywoman's Center will sponsor two films, "The Child" and "Minute of Truth" Monday, April 16 at 8 p.m. Ms. Ingrid Mitchell, a midwife trained in Sweden, will discuss the films and answer questions in 917 Campus Center.

"The Child" (55 minutes) is a Swedish film based on the methods of Dr. Grantly Dick Read, and showing an actual delivery.

"Minute of Truth" (19 minutes) is a French film made originally for nurses, midwives and doctors, showing several deliveries based on LaMaze techniques.

Scholarship Renewal Due

All recipients of Board of Higher Education Scholarships, who are eligible for a 1973-74 renewal award, must sign a renewal application prior to May 1. The renewal applications are available in the Financial Aid Office, Room 232 Whitmore. If a renewal application is not submitted your scholarship will not be continued for 1973-74.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By STONEY COMAR

"I am a movie buff and also interested in astrology as you present it. Can you tell me the signs of Hedda Hopper and Tom Mix?" Paul Salomon, Hollywood, Calif. Answer: The late motion picture columnist, Hedda Hopper, was Gemini to her fingertips, vivacious, active, flirtatious, brimming with enthusiasm and a love of life. Tom Mix was a legend in his time a cowboy star supreme and exemplifying many qualities of his zodiacal sign, which was Capricorn.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Favorable lunar aspect coincides now with creative changes, special relationship with member of opposite sex. Your desires can be fulfilled. You make new start. You receive recognition for unique talents, abilities.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Continue moderate pace. Don't overlook details necessary to security. Aquarian could figure prominently. Your home, domestic conditions are spotlighted. Older family member deserves a hearing. Be receptive.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Stress versatility. Show that you have more than one talent, procedure which can be utilized. Relative is in your corner but she is a distracting influence. Make up your own mind, let others know you have life of your own to live.

CANCER (June 21-July 20): Money situation improves; you are provided with more creative room. Opportunity exists to plug loopholes. You can demonstrate truth of your beliefs and you can do so at a profit. Aquarius, Leo and Scorpio persons could be involved.

LEO (July 21-Aug. 20): Cycle is such that you can be at right place at propitious time. Be ready for change, possible travel and a variety of experiences. Gemini, Virgo persons are apt to be featured. You can analyze and arrive at truth.

VIRGO (Aug. 21-Sept. 20): Accent is on hospitals, special organizations, groups. Quiet meeting with one who seeks and would be constructive, be especially co-operative where family enters picture. One who is disabled does deserve special consideration.

LIBRA (Sept. 21-Oct. 20): Key now is to be perceptive enough to detect subtle nuances. Pisces person can aid. Some of your desires may not be practical but could be fulfilled. Know what it is you really require. Then go directly to source.

SCORPIO (Oct. 21-Nov. 20): Challenge proves beneficial. You come through with flying colors. Financial gain is indicated. Also, special relationship can develop which is constructive. Older individual figures prominently. Capricorn is in picture.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 21-Dec. 21): Long-range view is essential. See project, goal in its entirety. The bits and pieces are things of the past. You should now be bent on obtaining true view. Put aside childish fantasies. Clash of real ideas is far more exciting.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Look toward one who is practical, who was dependable in recent past. New view regarding finances is essential. Find out what is coming in, going out. Income from special agreement is assented.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Obtain kind from Capricorn message. Be aware of legal ramifications of any action. Some of your natural assets surge to forefront. You are in stronger position than might be apparent. Key is to consolidate forces.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Don't spread efforts too thin. Work, recreation and time goals to both. these are emphasized. One who relies on you seeks to return favor through surprise gathering or gift. You can afford to relax.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are versatile, artistic, fond of travel, generally energetic and high strung. August could be your most significant month of 1973. You are due, this year, to be rid of burden you should not have carried in first place.

Austin To Play New England All-Star Game

Tom Austin, UMass forward who will be graduating in May, was recently named to play in the New England All-Star game to be played at Fairfield University in Connecticut later this month. Tom is the only UMass player from the '73 NIT team to be named to play in the contest and he will be joined by other New England stars such as James Garvin and James Brown.

FAIRFIELD, Conn. (AP)—Ernie DiGregorio of Providence College, named Wednesday as the top senior college basketball player in the country, said he was not invited to play in a New England all-star game here next week.

Spokesmen for the tournament were unavailable Wednesday to explain why.

"No, I was not invited," DiGregorio said from the Naismith Basketball Hall of Fame in Springfield, Mass. He had just come from a luncheon where he was presented with the third annual Joe Lapchick trophy, given to the top senior college basketball player in the country.

DiGregorio received 34 first place votes from among the 100 basketball writers who pick the Lapchick trophy winner.

The all-star contest at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday pits top New England college division players against university division all-stars, with proceeds going to the basketball Hall of Fame in Springfield.

"I didn't hear anything about it the Hall of Fame game," DiGregorio said. "I am surprised. I don't know what I did to them. I thought I was a good guy."

The university division team was picked by a coach committee headed by University of New Hampshire head basketball Coach Jerry Friel.

The 22-year-old DiGregorio appeared in Hartford Sunday with his own all-star team and was scheduled to make another appearance with his all-stars Wednesday night in Torrington.

He said his lawyer suggested that DiGregorio stay out of all-star games in light of the upcoming pro basketball draft Monday and Tuesday. But he plays with his own all-star team, "a group of friends . . . just for fun," he said.

He said he doesn't like to play in games with other college all stars because "I just don't enjoy myself any more. I don't like playing with a group of strangers."

Although it has not been announced officially, the North Providence, R.I. native is expected to be a first-round draft choice of the American Basketball Association Kentucky Colonels.

Picked to coach the university division players in Tuesday's game was University of Maine basketball Coach Skip Chappelle who had a 13-10 record last season.

Following are the names, height and schools of the university division players slated to compete:

Steve Rowell, 6-4, University of Rhode Island; Peter Gavett, 6-7, Maine; Gene Doyle, 6-8, Holy Cross; George Groom, 6-2, Fairfield; Charlie Crawford, 6-5, Providence; Al Vaughn, 6-2, Connecticut; Tom Austin, 6-9, Massachusetts; Frank Costello, 6-7, Providence; Nehru King, 6-5, Providence; and James Brown, 6-6, Harvard.

Also, Jim Schnarr, 6-6, Holy Cross; Robert Young, 6-6, Rhode Island; James Garvin, Boston University; Mark Angellison, 6-2, Dartmouth.

College division players were named last week.

Lacrosse Powers Clash "A Date With Adelphi"

By MARTY KELLEY

A Storm Out To Sea—They sat rather quietly on the stairs just inside Boyden as gusts of better than 40 miles per hour brought the crowd to their feet. They said little. They felt much. They stared at each other in a blankness and uncertainty. Behind them, a 4-4 first half, in front, the epitaph with one of the best lacrosse teams in the country. The storm was well out to sea . . .

Into the wind they went. Garber's Gorillas walked headlong into the face of a challenge and a chance. Against Adelphi, there was a chance, a ray of hope, that Massachusetts would climb to perhaps 13th in the country. They were denied. And the storm went out to sea and back to Long Island in the personage of Adelphi. The Gorillas were left alone . . .

Alone with the blank stare or defeat . . .

The locker room was blank . . . The air rather speechless. Perhaps co-captain Dwight Blomquist captured the aura of the Adelphi game days before the debacle. He was used rather sparingly against Connecticut by Coach Garber and was listed as doubtful against Adelphi. "If I don't play in this game I might as well forget the rest of the season," said Dwight. But you have to understand the context of the UMass-Adelphi to follow Dwight. You also have to have a pretty good pair of legs as well . . .

You see Dwight Blomquist is one of the best lacrosse players in the country today. Adelphi is one of the best teams. So it stands to reason that this was one that Dwight Blomquist wanted more than a Connecticut, an MIT, or a Weakleyan. And Dwight didn't get it. Neither did the rest of his Gorillas. So what gear are you in now?

Yeah, it hurt. It had to. The blank, speechless faces in the silent UMass locker room following told the story. John McCarthy had it written on his face. Bruce Sibson was white. John Martin graciously accepted congratulations on the superb effort he turned in, but still John was straightjacketed. Defeat held his trigger. He really couldn't respond.

And maybe we owe defeat its proper respect. Mentally, until the final gun, the Gorillas wanted Adelphi in the worst way. Have you ever been in a subdued locker? How you ever witnessed what it's like at Bucknell when an 6-0 football team faces defeat for the first time and as you walk by the semi-made bodies you can hear your heartbeat. Maybe we should give defeat her due respect and pound our fists on the locker saying, "We should have won that fuckin' game". But you didn't.

Life for the Gorillas goes on. It has to. You don't close the carnival for a faulty merry-go-round. Hell, maybe you do. But still there is something very real and well worth retaining from the Adelphi loss. Sport takes you into a reality of its own. It's a lifestyle. Very real. Very plausible. Very adaptable to every day life. From defeat you're given an opportunity to be stronger. It's a lesson, and a hard one at that, that makes athletes men through the sporting experience . . .

For that one small instant Goalie John Rutledge, who was simply remarkable against the Greeks, was in limbo. Defeat exudes such a response. But so often in life you have to bounce back. That's why there should be a sport for everyone. It's one of your better teachers. It's made a man out of 35 Gorillas for Dick Garber. And it wasn't hard.

So the best (Adelphi) has left town. The Adelphi Affair should now be forgotten. But like Bucknell in football, it remains a vivid lesson, somewhat painful . . . It's over now . . . Bury it . . . for the storm's gone out to sea . . .

Hall of Fame Game

IM's Reset

By BOB KAGAN

The "Annual Rainout" of outdoor intramural sports - horseshoes, soccer, and softball has once again hit the UMass campus.

According to Peter Graham of the Intramural Office, only two sights of competition were held during the first week of the season, due to the stormy weather and muddy conditions of the fields.

Those games which were scheduled to be played on Thursday, April 5, have been rescheduled for Friday, April 13. Likewise, the activities which were postponed on Tuesday, April 10, have been rescheduled for Monday, April 23. All rescheduled games will be played at the same time and on the same field.

Graham said that future postponed games may have to be cancelled and not rescheduled if the inclement weather continues. The last day for I.M. activities is May 11, thus allowing for only two more possible days of rescheduling.

Previous experience has shown that weekend scheduling of postponed activities does not work out, said Graham. Approximately 75% of the teams did not show when this was done.

Yanks Win

NEW YORK (AP) - Mel Stottlemyre fired a two-hitter Wednesday to beat Cleveland's Gaylord Perry as the New York Yankees rolled to their first victory of the season 4-0 after four straight losses. The game drew only 5,059 spectators.

Stottlemyre, 1-1, was bombed in the Yanks' 15-5 opening day loss to Boston, but this time got all the support he needed when former Indian Craig Nettles singled home a run in the second inning.

Perry, 24-16 last season, dropped to 1-1. He was rapped for 11 hits.

Gorillas Halted By Ale Adelphi Freeze 8-5

By MIKE ELLIOTT

Brrrr!! Yesterday about a hundred UMass fans braved the cold, windy and (yes) snowy weather to watch Garber's Gorillas go down in defeat 8-5 at the hands of Adelphi U. of Long Island.

The UMass shakebeaters started out hot, scoring the first goal of the game at 4:31 of the first period on an unassisted goal by freshman Jim Curran. However, the Panthers of Adelphi tied it at one less than a minute later and then added another goal at 7:07. Three minutes later Frank Garrihan combined with Peter Conolly to even up the game. The Gorillas regained the lead at 11:25 of the same quarter on an unassisted score by Joe DeRiso after a nice length-of-the-field rush by defenseman, Billy Blaustein. But the Long Island team tied it again sixty-six seconds later. Both squads traded goals in the second period with Pete Conolly tallying for the Gorillas. At halftime the score stood 4-4.

Ah, but the second half was a different story. Adelphi came out strong in the third period and scored three goals within four minutes with the first one being netted at 6:29. There was no scoring by either team until Adelphi increased their lead 8-4 at 9:47 of the final period on a score off a rebound. John Martin, hampered by a muscle pull, scored the final goal of the day at 10:47 of the last quarter on a nice pass from Fred Michels. However it proved to be too little, too late.

Both teams played a fine first half. The Adelphi Panthers had more scoring opportunities than did Garber's Gorillas but could not make them count because of the fine goaltending of John (O.J.) Rutledge and the riding of the defense and the attack. Rutledge turned aside several good scoring bids by Adelphi offense. The Gorillas missed some good scoring chances themselves.

The game turned around in the second half, however,. For UMass, this part of the game was characterized by bad passes and loose balls. The Gorillas had a little trouble picking up ground balls. They had several good scoring attempts but could not put the ball in the net. Reasons for this were faulty passing and bad shooting.

After the game Coach Dick Garber commented on his team's performance. Said Garger, "The midfield gave a super effort. O.J. (goalie John Rutledge) was good and the defense played well." The coach said the players "have nothing to hang theic heads about. Everyone played well but the shooting was off."

UMass returns to action this Saturday at 2 p.m. hosting Farleigh Dickinson at the Upper Boyden Field.

The Raw Weather doesn't seem to bother defenseman Richie Laily as he applies a dose of technique to an Adelphi sticker in yesterday's action at the Upper Boyden Field. Richie is responsible for one-third of coach Garber's stellar defense with John McCarthy and Billy Blaustein. The defense along with goalie John Rutledge provided all the stops yesterday but the offense was as cold as the weather.

Mac Wants It All

By EARLE BARROLL

Peil Pennington was bedecked in pro style, dingo boots and all. Steve Kosakowski was wondering how his tennis team could play this Monday with Passover on the way. And Dick MacPherson said "Ucky-Mucky".

This was the cast for the final ecumenical get-together at the Newman Center for this calendar year, otherwise known as the Varsity M Club luncheon.

The biggest news, outside of the fact that Kosakowski balked at leading off ("I'll let Mac go first"), was the fact that next football season UMass will have the chance of not only returning to the Boardwalk Bowl, but also of going on to California in the middle of December for THE national title.

"Granting that we get back to New Jersey and win," said MacPherson, "we'd next travel a week later to the semi-finals in Wichita Falls, Texas and if successful on to Sacramento on the 15th of December for the Camelia Bowl."

To get there, "We're going to need the talents of Peil Pennington," said MacPherson. "He's the guy that makes the UMass machine go. I want him to call every play he wants to call this season. I want him to execute what he calls. And in so doing I want Peil to make full use of his great talents."

The "ucky-mucky" Mac sprung on the weekly faithful pertains to the tundra behind Alumni Stadium that has thrown a curve at spring football. Nevertheless, it has gone on, as over 140 candidates turned out last Friday for opening day and surprisingly since that time only 25 or so have dropped out.

"We're going to find out who wants to play in the next couple of weeks," explained MacPherson. "We tell the athletes that they can make the team in the spring. But we also have to tell the high school seniors when we recruit that they too have a chance at making the team in the fall.

"When I came here it was my intent to get the best football players from Massachusetts to go to their state university. We've made many inroads but we're still having problems with Boston College," said MacPherson.

When Kosakowski got his chance he was vintage "Koz" which transcends anything that can be put into words. He blasted MacPherson "for not giving me any of the proceeds from the Boardwalk Bowl." He demanded complimentary passes for the secretarial corps at the Boyden Building.

He threatened passing the hat "beginning at the Boyden offices" when his team has home matches to pay for "the $1900 bill I was stuck with in Florida." He predicted another Yankee Conference title and demanded a bigger office for the trophies "that I still haven't taken out of the boxes yet."

He was just beautiful.

Steve Crowe

"Will It Ever Happen?"

"One Barber Scholarship, please," demands the whistling coach as he taps his fingers rythmically on the "ticket window of the Athletic Director's office.

"One free ride to the University of Massachusetts coming up!" says the cheerful secretary as she reaches into the file marked, "Athletic Scholarships." She pulls out a maroon and white card and rolls it into the typewriter.

"Who's the lucky guy?" she asks.

"It's a boy from the City," replies Coach Jock Lamean, "named Irving Juluan. Give him the works!"

"Wow, another full scholarship!" gasps the rosey secretary. "That's your fifth one this month!"

"Well," shrugs the coach, "if you got the dough, spend it!"

Another coach saunders up to the window and asks, "Could I please have a ticket for one of my football fellas, dear, when you get a chance?"

Lamean says, "Hey 'Mac', so you got another one; What's that make it? Twenty-two?"

"That's right, Jock," answers the pleasant, easy-going football mentor. "This boy is going to be playing varsity for us next year. His coach says it's alright, his mommy and daddy want him to play, his girlfriend is happy and his puppy dog thinks it's just wonderful!"

"Excuse me, men." A reporter appears from around the corner. "What's going on here?"

The two coaches explain that they are picking up scholarship tickets for their recruits.

"Are you kidding me?" pops the reporter. "I can remember when I was the Sports Editor of the Collegian. In those days, coaches had to fight for all the money they got!"

"Oh, that was way back—probably before the Dome and the Arena were built," says Lamean.

"Dome . . . arena?" asks the reporter.

"Don't tell me you haven't seen the new Sports Arena?" exclaims Lamean.

"Or the Dome over Alumni Stadium!" adds MacFearsome.

"Huh?"

"Let me explain," begins the football coach. "Way back in 1974, after Larry Ladd and Don Glickstein graduated, we started to build. In those days, we had a hard time getting scholarships for our boys. We never knew how much money was going to be in the Barber Fund. We never knew if we were going to play in the Boardwalk Bowl or the NIT. We couldn't make much money at home because the students took up all the space that a paying customer could have had. And, in football, our success depended on the weather. A few rainy Saturdays and our faithful alumni weren't so faithful."

"So, what happened?"

"So, we put a Dome over the football field," continues Lamean, "—no rain, no problems."

"And then the Arena was built across Rt. 116."

"Where'd you get the money for that?" the newsman asks.

"We didn't build it ourselves," the coach replies. "A private company built the 12,000 seat combination basketball- hockey rink and we rent it from them."

"Do the students still get in for 'free'?"

"No, they pay a buck; the general public pays $3-$5 for seats," answers Lamean.

"And the students stand for that?" the reporter asks.

"That's right!" says Lamean. "I was just getting to that. Students have to stand during the game."

"And when we saw how successful the Sports Arena was doing," adds MacFearsome, "we decided to sell Alumni Stadium to the same enterprise."

"This is disgusting!" exclaims the old Sports Editor, "It's against everything I believed in. I'm going up to the Collegian and complain to Sports Editor, Melley Karty."

"Save yourself a long walk for nothing," says 'Mac.' "They combined their office with the Sports Information and cheerleading departments—right down the hall."

"Oh, God no! This is a bad dream," sobs the reporter.

"Here, kid, have a cigar."

Havlicek's 32; C's Advantage

BOSTON (AP) - Boston's John Havlicek poured in 32 points and Jo Jo White provided punch to the Boston attack in the second half as the Boston Celtics defeated the Atlanta Hawks 108-101 in their fifth quarter-final National Basketball Association game Wednesday.

Boston leads the best-of-seven series 3-2, as the series moves back to Atlanta Friday.

The UMass - Amherst College baseball game scheduled for yesterday was postponed because of wet grounds and has been rescheduled for today 3:00 at Amherst College.

This new development in the schedule now means that the pitching staff will go through another California, only in temperatures averaging about thirty degrees colder, as they will play Amherst today and Holy Cross both Friday and Saturday. The team will get Sunday off and come back on Monday to play host to Northeastern for a doubleheader that will start at 1 p.m.

Tuesday will see A.I.C. in town to challenge the Minutemen before the UMass Nine leaves to play Springfield College the following day. Friday and Saturday will see UMass play an away and home two game series with UNH. Coach Bergquist merely said, "We will have to be ready, I guess." when asked about the rough schedule ahead. Baseball is the type of game where one must take it one day at a time. "We can't afford to look too far ahead at this early point in the season. . .not with this stretch of games right in front of our faces," according to Bergquist.

Man of Year

UMass basketball coach Jack Leaman has been honored as Boston University's "Man-of-the-Year" in a vote taken by the athletes at B.U. for accomplishments by an alumnus who has best carried on the name of B.U. For more details see tomorrow's sports page.

Koz Aims For Jeffs

By SINCLAIR FOSTER

UMass tennis coach Steve Kosakowski and Amherst tennis coach Edward Serues take much the same approach to this afternoon's tennis match - one of extreme predictive caution. Hoping for some good weather to open both of their northern seasons, UMass will be looking to knock off hosts Amherst for the second time in 47 years.

The Minutemen first conquered their cross-town rivals last year, by a 6-3 margin; which is why Serues figures UMass has to be favored. After all, UMass lost but one player to graduation and in addition picked up a few more racquets on the way.

UMass will enter the Amherst match with the youngest starting lineup in its history. Three sophomores are joined by two juniors and one senior on the 1973 Minuteman squad. At first singles sophomore Ted Donahue faces another sophomore, in John Bates. Amherst's number two man is the youngest of them all. He's freshmen Javier Cartin who will be facing the visitors Robert Schpeiser.

Senior captain Steve Ferber, and newcomer Don Douglas occupy the third and fourth positions for UMass. Douglas, a junior transfer, is up against Amherst's star football player in Robert Blood, while Ferber opposes the Jeff's Richard Weller.

Fred Braley and Mike Philipp, junior and sophomore respectively, will fill slots five and six. Amherst looks to Brian McDermott at five, but as for six, Serues has decided to wait until match-time.

Having also made a southern swing, Amherst strung up two victories on their trip, against the University of North Carolina at Charlotte and Wingate. The Wingate win was an especially satisfying one for Serues, who hopes to improve upon last year's 5-5 seasonal mark. His Jeffs will get that chance today against a well rested Minutemen squad, who envision few better ways to open their season that with a victory against a powerful Amherst squad.

C.C. Board Elects New Head

By SHARON HUGHES

The Campus Center Board of Governors elected Jim Lindsey as the new Board Chairperson replacing Richard Nelson in an unscheduled election last night. Richard Nelson resigned from the board altogether. Vice Chairperson Frank Cotter also resigned.

The Board voted to accept the Top of the Campus Budget by substituting a Recommendation from the Food Services Committee of the Board.

The Board also passed a motion to place all Program Council budgets except the Craft Center Budget into reserve account until the council sets up a constitution.

In further business, the Board approved the purchases of two amplifiers (not to exceed $700) as requested by the Concert Committee.

The Board tables a motion to change the 20% across the board student discount at the Top of the Campus submitted by the Food Services Committee.

The Board expects to issue a statement elaborating on the elections within a few days. Board member Howard Levin said the elections were legal because last December's election when Nelson was elected occurred during executive session and was never confirmed in regular session.

Richard Nelson called the proceedings "constitutionally questionable and probably appealable". However, he said, "The method in which it was done showed most Board members did not support me."

The vote was 7-5 to replace Nelson.

Nelson said "I think I've been a very effective chairman and the things I've done have been positive."

The Food Services Committee recommended "lower key" (less frequent) entertainment and a price increase on all drinks at the Top of the Campus. Committee Director John Hays called the proposal "the most viable business solution to the problem."

The Top of the Campus generated a deficit last year because "it is very close to competition and the small area is not designed for a high volume, high revenue operation", said Mr. Hays.

Board member Tony Tartaglia objected to a price increase and suggested alternate ways of generating revenue such as renovating the bar and hiring cheaper bands.

Hays defended the increase saying "it is still a heck of alot cheaper than downtown.

The amendment passed (10-4) will become effective unless the Student Senate asks the Board to reconsider.

The People's Market: Attention Vegetarians, Get Your Red Hot Mangos Here

By BARBARA YOORHEES

Avocado connoisseurs, rejoice! Avocados along with artichokes, mangos and zuccini have been added to the stock of the People's Market.

The market is averaging a sale of $375 worth of goods each day and co-proprietors Ellen Gavin and Gail Sullivan agreed along with the rest of the staff that their venture is a great success.

Both co-proprietors cited a need to expand the market but said that there is no available space. New shelves are being built, a new refrigerator was purchased and two more refrigerators are being considered.

The People's Market is now free from debt. The Commuter Assembly recently voted to change their $4000 loan used to start the store into a grant.

Ms. Gavin said that shoplifting has been absolutely minimal. The store breaks even each week and has even cleared up to $40 in one week.

The market is presently a Student Senate RSO but staff members have been considering opening up an independent RSO account.

Both co-proprietors suggested that customers take a more active part in market affairs; bringing back bags and returnable bottles, bagging their own purchases, and helping unload trucks if they are there at unloading time.

The market is also in need of volunteer workers.

Neither Ms. Gavin nor Ms. Sullivan will return for the fall semester and both expressed a hope that the market be run by a group of people, with one co-ordinator. Each member of the group would have an equal say in market affairs.

It Ain't The Ritz!

HEADQUARTERS—This plush fourth floor bathroom in James House served as living space for Matthew Zofrea of 414 James Wednesday night. According to sources on the fourth floor, Zofrea, while he was out, had his belongings, lock, stock, and barrel removed from his regular room into the head. Zofrea apparently didn't mind the switch and settled in rather comfortably, as this picture shows.

The fourth floor source in an exclusive Collegian interview said last night that the fourth floor had since "flushed him down to the third floor."

When the Collegian sent a reporter down around 8 p.m. last night there was no one in the third floor john save for a guy with lather on his face. There was no bed.

Speculation is that Zofrea was "stalled" somewhere in James. He was unavailable for comment last night.

Marathon: Harlem Prep

Placing Dropouts In College...

By DAVID SPARLING

The Harlem Preparatory School was founded in 1967 as a result of two basic realities in the Black community—a dropout rate of one thousand high school students a day from New York City schools and the absence of any high schools in all of Harlem.

Speaking at a School of Education marathon workshop yesterday, assistant to the Headmaster of Harlem Prep, Hussein Andieh, noted that Harmel Prep has grown from an institution housed in temporary quarters with forty nine students to its present permanent housing in Harlem and an enrollment of 650 students.

The school, Andieh said, is solely concerned with taking high school dropouts (or "pushouts") who have been on the streets for at least two years and placing them in college.

"This," Andieh said, "is to prevent Harlem Prep from becoming merely a high school equivalency program."

The school was founded primarily by three people. Eugene Calendar, a minister and then director of the Urban League, Mother Margaret McCormick, president of Manhattanville College, and Harlem Prep's present headmaster, Edward Carpenter.

The financial problems of Harlem Prep are always of major importance, according to Andieh. It receives money solely from private sources. Andieh said there are many foundations that contribute but the major sources now are the Ford Foundation and Exxon.

The Board of Trustees, Andieh said, is composed of a balance of educators, lawyers, business leaders, politicians and parents The Board of Trustees, Ahdieh said, is composed of a balance of educators, lawyers, business leaders, politicians and parents of the students.

The faculty is composed of a regular staff as well as many volunteers. Ahdieh said that having a degree is not as important as gaining a rapport with the students.

"After taking someone on the faculty at Harlem Prep," Ahdieh said, "we reevaluate him at the end of two weeks. If nobody is coming to his class then something is wrong and he goes."

There is a full time staff member concerned solely with the placement of students, according to Ahdieh.

Often standardized tests (like SAT's) are ignored and instead informal procedures like conferences with various deans and administrators are used. Ahdieh said that the student must by necessity receive "the full financial package" the college offers.

Harlem Prep currently, Ahdieh noted, is housed in a converted supermarket. It has two stories and wall to wall carpeting. There are paintings and murals on the walls and only a few partitions used to separate the classes.

The curriculum ranges from basic English courses to the sciences. Many of the most "aware" black students, known as the "Gods" in Harlem, are not interested in conventional English or sociology courses and concentrate on the science and chemistry courses offered.

The political atmosphere of the country, Ahdieh said, has changed and affected Harlem Prep's operation.

Ahdieh cited the "combination of the national need and good feeling towards the poor and minorities" in the late 1960's that allowed such an undertaking as Harlem Prep. Now, Ahdieh said, the feeling has changed, giving President Nixon's recent social legislation budget cuts as an example.

Also, Ahdieh said, many inner city colleges are "in a panic because there might be more minority students than "majority" students in their schools."

Of the 650 students currently enrolled at Harlem Prep, Ahdieh said, 450 are black, 150 are Puerto Rican and 50 are either white, oriental or foreign.

The screening process is involved. There was, Ahdieh noted, 4000 applicants this year. Only 600 are accepted.

The applicants take a reading test and then are interviewed by a former student, a faculty member, and an administrator. Two of the three interviewers must agree to enroll the student.

Once enrolled, Ahdieh said, the student quickly learns the meaning of the school's motto—Moja and Logo. These words of African origin mean unity and brotherhood.

Marathon: Educator's Role

...Enhancing Human Life...

By MARK VOGLER

AMHERST—Dean Dwight W. Allen, head of the University of Massachusetts—School of Education, does not consider teaching the major role of the educator in today's world.

In a lecture Thursday during the fourth day of the annual UMass School of Education Spring Marathon, Allen said that educators have an important mission "to take the responsibility to enhance the quality of human life."

"Life is so complex, but the schools are still simple-minded. And as long as the schools remain as such, they're not going to be any good in improving the quality of human life," he said.

"Educators must get on top of the process of change, and teach people to accept that change as the standard in their daily lives. Comfort of one man can't be independent of the discomfort of others."

Allen suggested three objectives which education should have in mind if it is to increase the quality of human life:

—recognition of the complexity of the human environment.

—sensitivity to the community in a social context.

—cognizance to important social issues of the time.

Educators must recognize that it is no longer possible to have basic skills that can be mastered by everybody, he said. Allen selected reading and human relations as the most important skills to be acquired for the assurance of a reasonably comfortable life.

"Education has to stop being subversive. We have to break down the walls between the school and the community," Allen said. "We have to begin to consider the community as a resource of the classroom; the classroom as a resource of the community; and beyond that, communities as resources to each other."

Allen said that if social issues of the times were completely ignored, society and school would fall apart. He referred to "objectivity of the schools" as a "lie" and argued that an educator should recognize the values of the society he serves.

"Public schools should reflect a broad arrangement of values in their fullest extent . . . Teachers shouldn't just base importance on the subjects they teach," he said.

"If the school burns down, a math teacher won't be able to teach Algebra; If a boy gets killed during a war, what good does the Algebra do him?"

Allen said that never in the history of the world, have educators had so many alternatives available to them; but suggested that some people have so many options that they go on doing the "same thing".

He used the case of the Marathon to support his claim. Many people don't even know how to go about participating in a marathon, Allen said.

"Some people hang around one spot and miss a lot while others just pick out the titles. I remember one man told me he enjoyed the marathon very much, yet he didn't even get out of the hall the whole time he was there.

"One of the things commonly wrong with teachers is that they have simulated machines. And we wonder why the result isn't a human result. Any teacher who can be replaced by a machine should be."

Marathon: Beer Brewing

...Getting A Buzz

By DEBBIE MORIARTY

"Everything you always wanted to know about beer", or "How to get wrecked on ten cents a quart or less" was the subject of one of yesterday's Ed. Marathon sessions. The speaker, physicist, Tom Manwell, defined beer as anything contining spices and three to four per cent alcohol.

Man well also gave simple, non-failproof instructions for the making of home-brewed beer. The recipe included one three-pound can of "Blue Ribbon" malt, ale yeast, and five pounds of sugar. This simple procedure includes mixing together the sugar, malt, and the yeast. After about a week a "head" should form on the mixture. Although the beer is drinkable after a week, Manwell advised storage of the beer for at least six momths. Concerning storage, he said that bottles should be sterilized first to prevent anything but the intended yeast from fermenting the beer. Although home-brewing beer is relatively easy, Manwell said that "someone making beer by themselves is left very much in the dark because they don't know how much processing goes into malts". He advised not using barley for not only is it expensive, but it is hard to get in the necessary, unhusked state. He did say, though, that by following his directions carefully, with a little bit of luck, there's a good chance you'll get beer.

Concerning American beers, he said that they are made for sheer profit. Although the U.S. produces thirty-five per cent of all the world's hops, American brewers replace expensive barley with corn and rice. In Germany, it is against the law to use any substitute for barley. He also said that, although a good beer takes six months to set, commercial beer is shipped out three days after it is made. Concerning light beer, he said: "American light beers are light, basically because there is nothing in them". One good aspect of commercial beer, though, is that it can stay unspoiled for almost a century. This is probably due to the pasturization and the small amounts of formaldehyde added to it.

Manwell gave as reason enough for making your own beer, the fact that you don't know where commercial beer comes from, or what it is made of.

Manwell's session also included sampling mead and maple beer.

The Elma Lewis School — Opera And African Drums

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP)—In the heart of the Roxbury ghetto, a 23-year-old dance class for neighborhood children has evolved into a multi-million dollar cultural arts school. It blends Shakespeare, Mozart and ballet with drums, soul and tribal dances.

Five hundred youngsters learn culture in the atmosphere of a conservatory, while two blocks away, Blue Hill Avenue stretches through one of the highest crime neighborhoods of the city.

Inside, students rush from courses in opera to costume making. Some play African drums, while others study the violin. There is music theory and sculpture, painting, orchestra and plays.

The Elma Lewis School of Fine Arts has grown into a center of learning for people off the streets as the streets themselves degenerate into crime and poverty.

The school is the work its director, founder and namesake, a stout little woman who says black pride is nothing new; she's had it and taught it for years.

Miss Lewis teaches children of the ghetto in a former synagogue building. She began 23 years ago in a Roxbury apartment, she said, so that she could "offer quality training in the arts to neighborhood children."

"We celebrate ourselves here," she said. "In Western civilization, black people are called upon to celebrate everyone but themselves."

The children, mostly in their early teens and younger, take 13 hours of classes a week. They go after school, all day Saturday and a few hours Sunday.

No one is forced to attend, but those who do must take at least two courses a week in each of the five disciplines—drama, music, art, dance and costuming. Everyone learns at least two musical instruments.

The school is 90 per cent black, reflecting the neighborhood around it. When it was founded, it was predominently Jewish.

It is open to all, Miss Lewis said. There are no entrance requirements. But the waiting list is one year long.

"We are an extended family," Miss Lewis said. "The parents know that once the student gets to the door, that's our child. They've lost their jurisdiction. Sometimes we spank, and sometimes we love."

To do this, the school depends primarily on grants, such as $100,000 each from the Ford and Rockefeller foundations. The school's $1.1 million a year budget is also contributed to by contracts for city education programs, money earned by school performances and tuition.

"jazz" is Dead! Black Music Lives!!

. . . And the Black Soul lives! That was the resounding message of the artists and participants of the "Freedom Now" experience, an original production presented in the Student Union Ballroom, last Wednesday evening.

The totality of Blackness was emitted through song, word, music and movement. Total theater—African drama—wherein all art exists in complement characterized the "Freedom Now" production. Each artist, in the context of the collective, shared with the audience participants, his testimony to TRUTH. Ceril Bridgewater and Billy Harper blew words of wisdom; Stanley Cowell fingered keys, unlocking doors to Black thoughts; Reggie Workman strummed the chords of the Black heart; and Max Roach beat new rhythms for Black folk to move to/with. The message was resounded through the instruments of Ossie Davis and Dee Dee Bridgewater, the spoken and the sung word, while the gospel of the messengers of the choir added testimony to the NEW—New Africa!

Here were the carriers of TRUTH—the prophets—rebels crushing the lie, the jazz, "Negroes". And a mother and her baby moved to the NEW/rhythms; a cameraman rejoiced in the revival; others held their right hands up to the Supreme Spirit . . . and the audience/participants, in their response, testified to the truth of the TRUTH, and reaffirmed that the experience was total, aesthetically and politically, and therefore, Black.

Yet, the "Freedom Now" experience was further revolutionizing in its objective composition; there was correspondence through images. The artists—students, professors, and professionals—revitalized each other. Max Roach beat rhythms of wisdom as John Betsch matched the profundity of Roach's wisdom with the intensity of new ideas/rhythms, while Jim Bridges strummed an uncompromising "No!" to Black students who were thinking it was THEMSELVES who were crazy!

The people, old and young, Muslim and Christian, joined in union with the artists/prophets, treking the journey to spiritual harmony, to love, to rebirth, to Freedom. And as the participants in the experience attempted to become one with their spiritual beings, to redefine—the people present in the Student Union Ballroom become makers of the experience, producers of the "Freedom Now" production, and not from suffering, but from the positive efforts of all!

So it was a ritual and a revival. The African word—TRUTH—was spoken! In lyrics, we acknowledged the tears we shed for our slaughtered warriors, our dehumanization as a people, our prayers, our protest to the injustices, our quest for peace, our desire for unity, and we stated that in spite of . . . in spite of the bastardization and commercialization of the art of Black genius, and in spite of the dehumanization and exploitation of Black people—"Black Music lives! The BLACK SOUL LIVES!" . . . in spite of!

Yet freedom . . . It was symbolically significant that Max Roach and Oscar Brown Jr. did not complete "Freedom Now." For Black people still trek the journey towards freedom, and in accordance with the African concept of art where a work is left unfinished, we understand that all is not perfect. Black people must strive for perfection. "Freedom Now" allowed us to taste freedom . . . but there was wisdom in the words of Janus I. Adams, who, through Ossie Davis, said that Black people must work for it—perfection/freedom—we must "learn what Freedom is."

Yet, the "Freedom Now" production was complete in the connecting link between the introductory remarks of Acklyn Lynch and these closing words of Ossie Davis, and it is this connection that defines the contradiction between incompleteness and completeness. Uhuru Sasa, Sasa, Sasa!

Black Music Important As Vehicle For Soloists

By GARY GOMES

"New Compositions and Techniques" were the topics of discussion yesterday at the Black Musicians Conference. Keynote speaker at the panel discussion in the morning was Sam Rivers, a tenor saxophonist who has made music with Cecil Taylor and Miles Davis, and has been a musical advisor to Wilson Pickett and Jerry Butler. Fellow panelists were multi-instrumentalist and composer Joseph Jarman, who is a member of the Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians of Chicago, and Bill Cole, who is currently teaching at Amherst College.

In his keynote address, Mr. Rivers stressed the importance of black music as "vehicles for soloists", saying that "Dixieland" arrangements were takeoffs on the improvisations produced by the individual players. Mr. Rivers then led this into the oral tradition of Black Music, saying that "Improvisation is the key factor."

He then pointed out some of the new techniques that were being used to make music, including giving oral instructions to the musicians as opposed to written instructions if the musicians are good enough; interpretations of artistic drawings by the musicians; counterpoint, which involves the playing of two or more separate melodies; and the rhythmic approach, in which a basic rhythmic pattern is set down and the "orchestra fills in".

Mr. Jarman asked the participants to keep in mind the "oral tradition of Black music", as the guideline for improvisation. Mr. Rivers brought up pianist Cecil Taylor, whom he says, "improvises for 8, 9, 10 hours." Rivers stressed the importance of practice in this process.

Another member of the panel discussed the expressive possibilities of music—"There seems to be a very necessary technique in improvisation—a process you go through to coordinate minds and fingers."

The panel went on to the discussion of what music is. Some descriptions were that it was a "spiritual essence", and the affinity of music with life, that is, ". . . everyone's playing is a production of what they've experienced". In addition, the concept of the black musician as black philosopher was brought up by Mr. Cole.

One of the participants, a bassist in the Art Ensemble of Boston, discussing the relationship between Western instruments and Afro-American music, said that he wanted to learn to fix his own bass on his own standards, rather than European standards.

In reply to this, Mr. Jarman stated that "Black musicians in the United States have to deal with what they have . . . and are finding other ways."

Mr. Cole added that, "The only thing that bothers me about people who are affected by the West is that he is out of tune with nature, he can't respond properly. We have a blatant disrespect for all things happening in nature . . ."

The panel then moved on to the subject of improvisation, Mr. Rivers saying that he felt it was on a "definite line from New Orleans."

Roland Wiggins, a Professor here at UMass viewed the importance of the Sematic basis of black music, and inquiring as to whether "white Western instruments were natural.

Jarman next brought up the topic of self-discovery in each instrument, "a process of self-discipline. An instrument can be a vehicle that can give expression . . . When I walk out after playing, my mind is tripped by the music I created, and that is what interests me.

Bringing up the New Orleans continuum, Mr. Rivers decried the rejection of 'avant garde musicians by older, more traditional musicians. "We don't learn from history," stated Rivers, why don't older musicians play this? The New Music is not being helped by the Traditionalists. They're playing it safe."

Cole thought that this was based on "going down a life of 'Your music ain't worth shit' . . . they can't relate to it. It's human."

The discussion then turned to the reasons behind this. Some felt it was economic, while Rivers stated that "You don't hear the music . . ." Some great jazz players get $250. Some awful classical musicians get $5000." Another participant said that this happens because of "fixed standards" having side effects, because people don't move with the times.

A technical discussion came next, viewing musical graphs and symmetry as a method of creating guidelines for making music.

Archie Shepp, a teacher in the Afro-American Studies department, asked the panel to view the musical complexity of a James Brown. He also stressed what he felt was the idea of music. "What is the purpose? To communicate with people." He stressed the need to "keep and utilize traditions . . . What gives our music meaning is its relevance to tradition . . . "Folk music is what we must create."

Wiggins stressed the nedd for "principles of transference—not vertical, but horizontal concepts.

Bill Would Allow Hospital Abortion Ban

BOSTON (AP)—Leaders of the Massachusetts Legislature are apparently trying to find a way to circumvent the U.S. Supreme Court decision granting women the right to abortion on demand.

Two bills introduced by House Speaker David M. Bartley and Senate President Kevin H. Harrington would not only allow any individual hospital staff member to refuse to participate in an abortion, sterilization or in the dispensing of birth control products or information; but would also allow entire hospitals to adopt the same policy.

More than 100 persons appeared at the State House Thursday to testify on the bills before the legislature's Social Welfare Committee, and most were in favor of the portions of the bills which would give individual doctors and nurses the option or refusing to participate in abortions and related areas.

The debate came on the issue of whether the boards of trustees of publicly supported tax-exempt hospitals such as Boston City Hospital should be allowed to vote to refuse to allow abortions in their hospitals.

"I'm glad to see these bills here this morning to prevent the involvement of people who do not want to be involved in the slaughter of innocents," said Rep. William A. Carey, D-Boston, who claimed that he is "one million per cent against abortion."

Haig Reports On Cambodia War

By HARRISON HUMPHRIES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon got a 45-minute report Thursday from Army Gen. Alexander M. Haig Jr., just back from a fact-finding mission to Cambodia.

Meanwhile, on Capitol Hill, a State Department legal expert and various senators disagreed on the President's powers to conduct bombing missions in Cambodia.

Although Nixon sent Haig to South Vietnam, Laos and Thailand in addition to Cambodia, public attention focused on his sessions with leaders of the Lon Nol government in Phnom Penh.

The White House gave no details of Nixon's meeting with Haig, Army vice chief of staff.

However, press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said Wednesday he did not anticipate any announcement of major change in U. S. Policy on Cambodia after Haig submitted his report.

Nixon spent about an hour and a half at a regular meeting of the National Security Council Thursday morning, and the White House said Haig was not present.

Secretary of Defense Elliot L. Richardson at the Capitol to brief a Senate Appropriations subcommittee, was asked about reports that South Vietnamese troops may be sent into Cambodia.

"There are no proposals to do this," he replied, adding that the South Vietnamese are undoubtedly considering various contingency proposals.

At a Senate Foreign Relations Committee meeting, State Department legal advisor Charles N. Brower said "it is clear beyond a doubt" that the President has authority to conduct air strikes in Cambodia.

The authority derives primarily, he said, from the President's constitutional powers as commander-in-chief of the armed forces and his position as the nation's chief executive for administration of foreign affairs.

Brower made the assertions in testimony opposing a pending bill to limit presidential authority to send troops into combat, without approval of Congress.

The action could be taken only in emergency situations and for 30 days only. Meanwhile, in a Senate speech, Majority Leader Mike Mansfield, D-Mont., challenged claims of authority for U.S. military operations in Cambodia.

"In my opinion," he said, there are no legal or constitutional grounds for our becoming involved in any way shape or form in the Cambodian civil war."

Mansfield cautioned against talk of using South Vietnamese and Thai troops to stabilize what he called "the tenuous position of the present Cambodian government." The support, he said, would really come from the United States.

Nixon Urges Standards For Jobless Benefits

By ROBERT A. DOBKIN
AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon urged Congress Thursday to establish federal minimum standards for unemployment compensation benefits, now administered by the states, and to extend coverage to 635,000 farm workers.

In a special message to Congress, his third in three days, Nixon said his legislation would guarantee that about 80 per cent of workers covered by unemployment insurance would receive at least half their average weekly wage when out of work.

The President said he also wants a third change in the unemployment insurance system that would bar payment of benefits to strikers, now paid by only two states, New York and Rhode Island. This, he explained, would "preserve the neutrality" of the system during labor disputes.

Opposition is expected from both business and the agricultural industry over farm worker coverage and the new federal standard.

Organized labor's chief spokesman, AFL—CIO President George Meany, voiced approval of these two features but said the proposal is "heavily outweighed by numberous and glaring deficiencies."

Meany objected to the labor dispute provision and complained that no provisions were included for determining how long individual must be employed before they are eligible for benefits, or for how long a jobless worker is entitled to receive benefits. He called this a step backward and said the AFL-CIO would oppose it.

Nixon recalled that in 1969 he asked the states to raise jobless benefits voluntarily to his suggested helf-pay minimum, but few responded.

Although most states now set benefits at half pay, their formula is rendered almost meaningless because it usually is fixed on relatively low ceilings based on average wages in the state.

Nixon said the result is that more than two-fifths of all workers covered by unemployment insurance receive benefits less than half their normal pay.

He proposed that an insured worker, when out of work, receive benefits "equal to at least 50 per cent of his average weekly wage up to a state maximum which shall be at least two-thirds of the average weekly wage of covered workers in the state."

This, he said, would assure at least half pay to at least 80 per cent of covered workers. The remaining 20 per cent, relatively high-wage earners, still would receive less than half their pay.

Although most states now set benefits at half pay to at least 80 per cent of covered workers. The remaining 20 per cent, relatively high-wage earners, still would receive less than half their pay.

Weekly unemployment compensation benefits paid by the states, usually over a maximum 26-week period, range from $50 to $109. Only three states - Arkansas, Hawaii, Utah - and the District of Columbia now meet the proposed standard.

Research Planes Crash, 16 Die In Flames

By TIM REITERMAN
Associated Press Writer

MOUNTAIN VIEW, Calif. (AP) - Sixteen persons, including eight scientists, were killed Thursday when two planes collided in flight and plummeted in flames to a golf course, the Navy said.

Five were crewmen on a Navy P3 Orion turboprop, the Navy said. Three crewmen and eight scientists were aboard an Convair 990, a flying laboratory called the "Galileo," owned by the National Aeronautic and Space Administration, the Navy said.

NASA said its plane was on a checkout flight for a research mission. Both planes were approaching the Navy's Moffett Field.

The aircraft, which plummeted with one on the other's topside, crashed in flames just before 3 p.m. on the Sunnyvale Municipal Golf Course, about 40 miles south of San Francico.

There was one survivor, identified as Navy crewman Bruce N. Malibert, who was thrown clear of the wreckage. A spokesman at El Camino Hospital said he was in critical condition with burns and fractures.

A golf course spokesman said there were no golfers in the area when the planes went down.

The NASA plane was on a 1 1/2-hour flight which originated at NASA's Ames Research Center at Moffett.

"We saw a lot of bodies burned in the fuselage, maybe several," said Mountain View Fire Chief William Miller. "There's not much left of those planes."

Eyewitnesses said the smaller Navy plane was flying in front of the NASA jet. They said the Navy plane pulled up and was hit from behind. The Navy jet flipped up on top of the larger jet, witnesses said.

"They were in contact when I first saw them, maybe 1,000 feet from the end of the runway," said eyewitness Ken Green, 36, an employee of a company that borders the golf course.

"As I watched them go to the ground, they seemed to remain hooked together," Green said.

POW Hits N. Viet Aid

SAN ANTONIO, Tex. (AP) - An former prisoner of war said today he doesn't want his tax money used to rebuild North Vietnam.

"I just hope that my tax money doesn't get there," S.Sgt. David F. Allwine, 24, told newsmen.

"They didn't want Americans there. They don't have Americans there. Let them do it by themselves," he said.

The Phoenix, Ariz., native met newsmen Thursday morning at Brooke Army Medical Center along with three other former prisoners - Lt. Col. Artice W. Elliott, 43 of Mesquite, Tex.; Capt. Luis G. Chirichigno, 35, of Austin, Tex.; and S. Sgt. Juan L. Jacquez, 25, of Albuquerque, N.M.

Elliott and Chirichigno reported weight losses of up to 35 per cent due to the meager prison diet.

Jacquez was locked in stocks in a bamboo cage during his stay in Cambodia.

CIA Blamed In Commando Raids

By HOLGER JENSEN
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP)—Firing machine guns in a final salute, Palestinian guerrillas buried eight comrades killed by Israeli commandos striking in the heart of this city and Sidon.

About 40,000 persons turned out for Thursday's funeral rites and heard tirades barked over bullhorns against Israel and the United States.

Palestinian guerrilla leaders have accused the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency of participating in the attacks early Tuesday that killed three top commanders.

Secretary of State William P. Rogers summoned top Arab diplomats in Washington to tell them that the charges of U.S. involvement were "an absolute falsehood."

In New York, the U.N. Security Council was summoned into special session to hear a complaint of the Lebanese government against Israel.

The crowd jammed approaches to the Martyrs' Cemetery in a pine forest near a Palestinian refugee camp on the edge of the city. Loudspeakers exhorted the slain men's families: "Mothers be happy! Your sons died like real men!"

They repeated a Moslem chant, "La ilaha illa Allah"—There is no God but Allah.

Guerrillas carrying the coffins danced up to the freshly dug graves then retreated to prolong the burial, signifying that the deaths at the hands of the Israelis were noble.

Then men dressed in camouflage commando uniforms fired machine-gun bursts into the air and the dead were laid to rest.

The crowd dispersed quietly.

The burials followed emotional funerals in a mosque and a Christian church—one guerrilla was a Protestant—and a procession by chanting mourners, many of them heavily armed, through Beirut's streets.

The city was closed down; a general strike was in effect.

Symbolic funeral processions also took place in Cairo, Damascus, Baghdad and Kuwait.

The crowd of mourners in Beirut carried the coffins, draped in the green, white, black and red-striped Palestinian flags, raised above their heads along a four-mile route from the center of the city to the cemetery.

Led by Palestinians, they chanted anti-Israel, anti-U.S. and antigovernment slogans.

"The deaths of the martyrs will strengthen our revolution and pave the way to victory over Israel!" they shouted.

"The Israelis didn't come by boat . . . They didn't come by air . . . They came from the U.S. Embassy!" they yelled.

At one point, several youths tore down a huge portrait of the Lebanese premier, Saeb Salam, who resigned after the Israeli raid. They shouted, "Down with the cowards!"

Few prominent Lebanese leaders took part in the procession. Guerrilla leader Yasir Arafat was notably absent.

The U.S. Embassy was heavily guarded.

Guerrillas have threatened to strike at U.S. interests in Lebanon as reprisal for the Israeli raid.

Japanese Ahead In Pollution Control

By MALCOLM JOHNSON
Associated Press Writer

DETROIT (AP) - U. S. auto makers who have a one-year extension on meeting the 1975 exhaust omissions requirement still face a question prompted by their Japanese competitors:

Why can't Detroit with all its technicological muscle cut down on auto pollution as quickly as Japanese auto makers?

Basically, all four American companies contend the technology does not exist to enable them to meet the controversial standards on a full production basis over the period of durability testing - 50,000 miles. And if the technology was developed in time, it would cost the car buyer an exorbitant amount - hundreds of dollars extra for a new car and more hundreds on later maintenance, according to American Motors Board Chairman Roy D. Chapin Jr.

Ford officials have said costs would rise $300 a car, with no profits.

But Toyo Kogyo - the maker of the Wankel-powered Mazda-and Honda, both of Japan, say they can meet the standards, even by 1975.

A Honda official said his company's engine could be mass-produced by any auto maker and "would prove to be applicable to large engines in the near future."

American companies dispute the idea that meeting the standards with their big V8s is as easy as with the little rotary and Honda engines. And producing omission-free engines in the quantity demanded by the American consumer is another problem.

While some critics have blasted the industry for not coming closer to the emission standards, company reports indicate a huge amount of money and manpower spent on meeting the requirements.

General Motors has reported spending or planning to spend $2 billion to meet the standards - in engineering, tooling, research and development, not including the price of devices or parts for cars.

That the American companies are expending great resources in attempting to meet the standards is not questionable. The method being used has been.

College Cost Climbs

By CAROLE MARTIN
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) - The cost of attending college rose an average of $100 to $150 during the past year, the College Entrance Examination Board reported Thursday.

A nationwide survey by the board's College Scholarship Service revealed that the average budget for students who live on campus had increased by about $100 over last year and by $200 to $300 over the last two years. The average budget for commuting students increased $100 to $150 over the past year and $200 to $350 over the last two years, the survey showed.

The survey found that the average yearly cost of a college education ranged this year from $1,637 for commuter students at public two-yar institutions to $3,279 for resident students at private four-year institutions.

It also indicated that students who commute to college usually spend 12 per cent to 18 per cent less than those who live on campus.

Students commuting to public four-year colleges, spend an average of $225 less than resident students at the same type institutions. Students who commute to private four-year colleges spend some $535 less than their resident counterparts, according to the survey.

These average college costs were based on information provided by financial aid directors of more than 2,000 public and private colleges and universities.

In most cases, these officials also provided estimates of student expenses at their institutions for the 1973-74 school year.

The figures were collected and published by the board in a booklet entitled "Student Expenses at Post Secondary Institutions 1973-74." The booklet was designed to assist students, parents and counselors in determining the amount of money needed to cover college costs next year, and to assist financial aid officers and scholarship agencies in the equitable distribution of financial aid funds.

In detailing the rising costs for College students, the booklet presents statistics by type of institution and type of student.

The average budget of $1,637 for commuter students in public two-year colleges, for example, represented an increase of $109 or 7.1 per cent this year, and $205 or 14.3 per cent over the past two years.

For resident students at private four-year institutions,the average resident student's cost of $1,984 was up $110 or 5.9 per cent this year, and $202 or 11.3 per cent over the past two years.

The smallest increasw

For resident students at private four-year institutions, the average budget of $3,279 was an increase of $109 or 3.4 per cent this year and $306 or 10.3 per cent for the past two years.

At puvlic four-year institutions, the average resident student's cost of $,984 was up $110 or 5.9 per cent this year, and $202 or 11.3 per cent over the past two years.

The smallest increase in average total budgets occurred at the private two-year colleges, where the average resident budget of $2,539 was up $56 or 2.3 per cent this year, and $160 or 6.7 per cent over the past two years.

Ellsberg's Lawyer Ill, Testimony Halted

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Daniel Ellsberg's testimony at the Pentagon papers trial was halted unexpectedly Thursday when his chief defense attorney, Leonard Boudin, reported he was ill and court was recessed for the day.

Ellsberg, who arrived in court prepared to launch the most dramatic portion of his testimony, was immediately informed of Boudin's illness.

Boudin, 60, a veteran New York civil rights attorney who wears a heart pacemaker, said he had suffered "discomfort" during the night. He appeared in the courtroom to inform the judge and later left to see a cardiologist.

Ellsberg had been scheduled to take the stand for the third consecutive day to tell jurors why he decided to copy the Pentagon papers in an effort to end the Vietnam war.

U. S. District Court Judge Matt Byrne, informed of Boudin's illness, agreed to recess court until Friday. Attorneys said the judge indicated he would suspend proceedings until Monday if it appears Boudin cannot work until then.

Boudin's wife Jean said the attorney contacted his own cardiologist in New York City and was advised not to continue questioning at the trial until he is examined by a doctor in Los Angeles.

Ellsberg said he expects Boudin to continue questioning him during his testimony. But he said he will be preparing with another defense attorney, Charles Nesson, if Boudin can't go on.

Jurors were told by Byrne only that, "One of the attorneys in this case has had a personal matter arise that requires his attention. It has nothing to do with this case."

The judge told them: "Out of courtesy to the attorney I am going to recess court today." Defense attorney had asked the judge to tell jurors that illness was involved in the delay, but the judge refused.

Maine Debates Shield Law

By PHYLLIS AUSTIN
Associated Press Writer

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP) - The legislative judiciary committee Thursday issued five reports on one bill - a controversial proposal to give news reporters immunity from prosecution for withholding information and their sources' names.

Sen. Elden H. Shute Jr., R-Farmington, sponsor of the strongest measure, remarked: "I've seen divided reports before, but this is confetti." The Senate postponed debate on the so-called "shield law" bill until Wednesday.

"The five reports on this bill may establish a record," Shute told his colleagues. "I've talked with the old timers, and they can't recall having more than this. They will require study."

The radio broadcaster, who owns WKTJ, suggested that lawmakers study over the weekend the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution and Article 1, Section 4, of the Maine Constitution to determine if further protection for the press is needed.

The First Amendment guarantees freedom of the press. Article L, Section 4 says: ". . .no laws shall be passed regulating or restraining the freedom of the press." Shute's bill would give newsmen complete immunity from prosecution for refusing to divulge their sources or information.

Only one of the 13 judiciary committee members-Rep. John R. McKernan Jr., R-Bangor, recommended passage.

Eight members favored a qualified version drafted by the panel chairman, Sen. Wakine G. Tanous, R-East Millinocket. It would give the Maine Supreme Court authority to determine when a reporter had to reveal his source and information.

In addition to Tanous, those supporting his version were: Sen. Jerrold B. Speers, R-Winthrop; Republican Reps. Lowell Henley of Norway; Stephen L. Perkins of South Portland, Charlotte White of Guilford, Ethel Baker of Orrington; Democratic Reps. Mildred Wheeler of Portland and Jane Kilory of Portland.

Senate minority leader Joseph E. Brennan, D-Portland, was alone in backing his proposal that would protect only newsmen called before grand juries.

Rep. Roland A. Gauthier, D-Sanford, offered another version that would shield from prosecution reporters.

Democratic Reps. James P. Dunleavy of Presque Island and J. Robert Carrier of Westbrook signed the adverse report of the committee recommending the legislature refuse to pass any shield law.

'Mustache May Be a Hazard' Judge Warns Firefighter

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP)-Most men have a constitutional right to wear any kind of mustache they wish, but firemen must also think of safety, according to a Superior Court judge.

Judge Arthur M. Healey made that legal observation in a ruling centering on the mustache formerly worn by firefighter Charles Goodson.

There may be constitutional protection for hair fashions but "an individual firefighter's constitutional right to wear his hair-be it long, sideburns, mustache, goatee or the like-cannot be considered in a vacuum," Healey wrote.

Fire Chief Francis J. Sweeney ordered in January 1972 that Goodson trim his mustache because it extended one inch below the corners of his mouth in violation of departmental regulations.

Goodson protested but shortened the mustache. Later, however, Local 825 of the International Association of Firefighters, AFL-CIO, to which he belongs, challenged the regulations in an appeal to the State Board of Mediation and Arbitration.

The state board supported the chief's order, and the union carried its protest to Superior Court.

Brooke And Richardson To Discuss Base Closings

BOSTON (AP)-Sen. Edward W. Brooke, R-Mass., has cut short his tour of Southeast Asia to return to Washington for a meeting with Defense Department Secretary Elliot L. Richardson in connection with the proposed closing of the Boston Naval Shipyard and Westover and Otis Air Force Bases, Brooke's office reported Thursday.

Brooke is in Asia as the ranking Republican on the Senate Appropriations Committee's subcommittee on foreign operations studying reconstruction aid to Southeast Asia.

Brooke said Thursday he had been assured by Defense Secretary Elliot L. Richardson that no base-closing decisions will be announced before the senator returns from Saigon to discuss the issue.

Brooke, in a statement from Saigon released by his office here, said he learned of Pentagon plans to close the Boston Naval Shipyard, Westover Air Force Base and Otis Air Force Base, all in Massachusetts.

"I have requested meetings with both the President and secretary Richardson on Monday," Brooke said. "I will leave for Washington immediately."

The Massachusetts Republican said the closure of the bases "would have disastrous effects on the economy of the commonwealth."

Upon learning of the reported closings, Brooke said, he telephoned Richardson "and requested postponement of the decision until I have had an opportunity for a full discussion with him and with the President.

"Secretary Richardson assured me that no decisions will be forthcomings until I have had the opportunity to talk with him."

Brooke said he cabled Gov. Francis W. Sargent and asked him to join in the requested talks.

The Pentagon has said it plans to announce soon the closing or reduction of several hundred military installations, and New England is expected to be hard hit when the announcement comes.

Richardson, however, has refused to say which bases are affected, although various New England lawmakers have said they expect Westover, the shipyard and any of several Rhode Island naval facilities to be on the list.

Marines To Land At South Boston

BOSTON (AP) - The Marines will be landing at Carson Beach in South Boston Saturday afternoon, a training exercise preparatory to an "amphibious raid" scheduled for later in the spring.

The Metropolitan District commission reported Thursday permission has been granted to Company A, 1st Battalion, 25th Marines, for the activity this Saturday, between noon and 3 p.m. It is anticipated 30 to 40 Marines will participate.

The MDC said this "refresher training course" is a first step "in a multi-service raid to be staged in Boston later on this spring."

In a separate announcement, the MDC reiterated that licenses, costing $1, must be obtained for newly-authorized round-the-clock fishing at the Wachusett and Sudbury reservoirs.

The permit can be obtained from the office of Allan Grive Jr., chief engineer and director of the MDC's Water Division.

A report from an earlier announcement on the fishing privileges had indicated that a "regular fishing license" would cover the day and night fishing but the MDC said a permit from Grive's office is mandatory.

R.I. Doctors Anti-Anti-Abortion Law

By TERENCE HUNT
Associated Press Writer

PROVIDENCE (AP)-Attorneys representing a group of physicians who would be willing to perform abortions in Rhode Island sought to intervene Thursday in a federal court suit challenging the state's anti-abortion law.

The motion to grant rights as an intervenor were denied by Chief Judge Raymond J. Pettine in U.S. District Court. However, Pettine said he would accept briefs as friends of the court from the attorneys and would allow the attorneys and their clients to testify Friday, if they wished.

Attorney Bruce Selya said he represented a group of 10 to 13 gynecologists and obstetricians "who are interested in preserving high medical standards, and therefore would like to see the present statute declared unconstitutional."

The one-month-old statute under attack in the suit forbids all abortions except those needed to save the life of the mother.

The suit, brought by the Rhode Island affiliate of the American Civil Liberties Union on behalf of three unidentified women, names Atty. Gen. Richard Israel as the defendant and seeks a declaratory judgement against the Rhode Island law.

In the afternoon session of the trial which opened Thursday, Dr. Albert W. Liley of Auckland, New Zealand, gave 1-1/2 hours of expert testimony for the defense. He maintained that life begins at conception, the same contention as the Rhode Island statute. Liley, a physiologist, also declared there is no scientific base for court rulings which have divided term of pregnancy into trimesters.

Liley's complete testimony, on behalf of the Constitutional Right to Life Committee, was taken over the objection of Richard Zacks, ACLU attorney. Pettine reserved opinion on whether the testimony was relevant.

Executive Power

American history has shown the Executive Branch of government to accumulate power in times of crisis. The Vietnam Era has bestowed upon the Presidency just such an accumulation of power. In great part this flexing of executive muscle has made a power-poor Congress even poorer.

Now that the crisis in Vietnam has subsided the need for executive might has reduced. The Legislature should act to regain power and prestige lost, or start thinking about becoming a monument to a once-effective branch of government.

Already Congress has waited far too long in moving to regain an equal footing with the Executive Branch. Capitol Hill should start resisting administration attempts to cut approved spending, to enter war without Congressional support, and to protect its members from criminal investigation.

A good start for Congress would be to call up those administration members whose testimony is crucial to the Watergate investigation. If they refuse to appear, they should be cited for contempt of Congress and brought to trial before the Senate.

In any case, if the Legislature wants to regain the power that has been slowly siphoned away from it, it must act now.

Police Recruitment

The selection and training of University police officers affects not only the department but also campus life. To insure a high quality professional police department the selection and training process must choose the best possible people and make them the best possible officers. Without well educated officers the University police system would be little more than a farce.

It is important to distinguish between police officers and security officers (Institution Protection Officers). Security officers wear green uniforms; they give parking tickets and do not carry weapons. They also do not have the power to arrest. University police drive police cars, carry firearms, and make arrests. At present, there are 34 police officers and 39 security officers.

Candidates for jobs with the police department apply through Whitmore. The applications are screened to remove anyone who has committed a felony or has not graduated from high school. The department would like to hire people who have degrees or are working on them. They express a preference for people who have majored in fields that are related to police work. Experience in dealing with people is also wanted. Last year out of the ten new officers hired over half had degrees or were working on them. Over three hundred people applied for these ten positions last year. An intensive screening process reduced this number to fifty. Physical examinations and general knowledge tests eliminated many applicants. The remaining people went before a screening board, which last year, was composed of members of the Student Government, people from Whitmore, and a psychologist. Their suggestions were taken into consideration but they were not binding. The final selection is left up to the director of the department.

The training program used by the University is unique. Amherst police, like most local police, go to the State Police Academy for ten weeks. This Academy is one of the best in the country. The University has developed its own eight week program. It is felt the UMass situation is different from any other, therefore, training should be specialized. Criminal law, interpersonal relationships, traffic control and other topics are stressed in the school. The officers are taught how to stop a car, control a disturbance, and other things related to police work. Training with firearms is prefaced by a long discussion of the morality of handling a weapon. The gun is shown as a last resort. Officers are taught to avoid drawing attention to their weapons by placing their hands on them when talking to people (a practice that many small town officers seem to have acquired). Refresher courses are offered by the department in fields such as first aid and bomb control. Police people also participate in programs offered by other departments.

There are two detectives working with the department. This year they were able to report a decrease in the number of robberies reported and an increase in the number of cases brought to court. One of the reasons for this is the Theft-Guard system being used in the dorms. Social Security numbers have been engraved on valuables, making them much easier to identify. There is no rape officer, as such, with the department. If a rape is reported, the department calls on one of its policewomen. She will work with the victim and the two detectives. The same policewomen are also used by the Amherst police when they are investigating a rape.

The University police are to be applauded on their selection program. There should be a greater emphasis on the screening board. They should be able to veto any applicant but not make the final choices. The training program might also be expanded to give the new officer a greater feeling for the Campus. One would hope that every possible effort is made to recover stolen property. Preventive measures such as Theft-Guard are excellent ideas. Most hostility against the police comes from their handling of traffic problem, parking and speeding tickets. The training program should stress that this is not an officer's main duty and that they should not be over zealous about this aspect of their jobs.

The Bureaucracy

Last time I promised you that I'd tell you where it is Nixon gets his bureaucracy from. In order to do this however, let's look at what one has to do in order to run for the Presidency on either the Republican or Democratic ticket.

What one has to do is go to one of the meccas of liberaldom and proceed on to one of their law schools, preferably Harvard's. From there, you join a little known group located on 68th Street in New York City known as the Council on Foreign Relations. The admitted goal on the CFR is to abolish the Constitution and replace it with a world government. They are little known simply because they shun publicity. These people go as far as to require an oath of silence upon admission, just like the Mafia. But like Joe Valachi did for the Mafia, somebody talked about the CFR and revealed to us all the history of a conspiracy to take over the world. That person is Dr. Carroll Quigley, professor of history at Georgetown University. The title of Dr. Quigley's book is "Tragedy and Hope", published in 1966. The book is 1300 pages long and is available in Goodell Library. What Dr. Quigley states is that he has been a member of the CFR for over twenty years and was permitted to examine its documents, including the most secret ones, for two years. He says he is in favor of the CFR's objectives and admits being proud of being an "Insider" but feels that the CFR should have more publicity because of its impact on the government of the United States.

The roster of membership in the CFR is long and impressive. It includes high ranking members of both political parties, members of the press, and others with a strong sphere of influence. They include the following people who have worked in the federal administration during the past six administrations. Dean Acheson, Alger Hiss, Adlai Stevenson, the Kennedys, Averill Harriman, Henry Fowler, Dean Rusk, Adam Yarmolinsky, John Kenneth Galbraith, Arthur Schlesinger, Hubert Humphrey, John Lindsay, Dwight Eisenhower, John Foster Dulles, Thomas E. Dewey, Jacob Javits, Robert McNamara, Henry Cabot Lodge, Elliott Richardson, Caspar Weinburger, Henry Kissinger and Richard Nixon.

Nixon joined the CFR back in the forties and they manufactured Nixon's phony conservative image by allowing him to expose Alger Hiss. They then set up a phony conservative image for Eisenhower and, through the backing of the multi-millionaires who run the CFR, got him on the ballot in 1952. Eisenhower's campaign slogan was to clean up the mess caused by the Truman administration. This was enough for him to beat Adlai Stevenson. But what Eisenhower did was to make the situation worse. Documentation of this is in Robert Welch's "The Politician".

Remember now, Nixon was Eisenhower's vice-president. The same image stood because of CFR efforts in the mass media. This is why he is in the White House today. And, like Kennedy, Truman, Roosevelt, Eisenhower, and Hoover; he rewarded the CFR by appointing CFR members to key government positions. A few of these are the aforementioned Kissinger, Richardson, and Weinburger; Ellsworth Bunker, C. Douglas Dillon, John W. Gardner, Rev. Theodore Hesburgh, Jacob Javits, David Rockefeller, Dean Rusk, and John D. Rockefeller III. Many other CFR members are also on the government payroll. And this is where Nixon gets his appointees from . . . an organization whose avowed purpose is to abolish the constitution and replace it with a one-world socialist dictatorship. Why? Well, its because of Nixon's personal ambitions. Richard Nixon is a ruthless individual whose only interest is gaining personal power. He has cast his fate with the CFR "Insiders" feeling that his best chances were with them. He apparently was right.

The CFR is the group that has promoted leftist schemes in the last few decades as another function of their operations. They have backed such leftist groups as the SDS, the Black Panthers, and Women's Lib, just to name a few. They were also responsible for bankrolling the Russians Lenin and Trotsky. They also were responsible for setting up the United Nations, planning the depression of 1929, and World Wars I and II. It is believed to be planning a crash to occur shortly that will be many times worse than the crash of '29. The inflation of the nation's currency by Nixon and the Federal Reserve is evidence to show that this MAY happen. I'll go into this in more detail next week.

"We only do hits in concert and we don't have any, so we do other peoples!"

Sha Na Na's Swan Song

By Patrick Coffey

I was stuck on Route 181 last Sunday afternoon. The rides had been bad all the way from Boston. It was nice weather, but Belchertown didn't do anything special for me and given a choice I'd rather be locked up in my dorm room instead of stranded on the road. I was becoming disillusioned with thumb - tripping until a neatly-groomed young man in a late model compact picked me up. I wrestled for a few minutes with an obtuse seat belt that kept buzzing for attention, and we started the usual question and answer swapping 'hi, thanks for stopping, it was going to be a long walk, how far are you headed?' 'The Lord Jeff, I've been cruising the Flea Markets this afternoon and have an engagement in Amherst tonight.' He looks to me like a hip junior executive in sports clothes- of course I ask, "What kind of work do you do?" Offhandedly, he tells me, "I'm a singer with Sha-Na-Na." My driver was Don York, vocalist with the fabulous greaser rock band, Sha-Na-Na, who played the Amherst Cage last Sunday night.

Neato! It was a golden moment for me. I admit to owning a pair of white socks, went to everyone of Little Latin Larry's U. Mass concerts, and I still choke up when I hear "Teen Angle" and "The Last Kiss". I thought we must have something in common. No doubt he had several pounds of Brylcream in his suitcase and a leather jacket in the trunk, but he looked too 'now' with his dry-look hair and double-knit pants. He just didn't fit my image of Sha-Na-Na.

We talked freely about the group as he drove. I hadn't told him I was a Poor Richard's Staff Reporter. I knew nothing more about Sha-Na-Na than what I had seen in their debut in 'Woodstock" and in their recent television appearances, and I asked all the questions I could think of. They were playing the Amherst College Cage that night and I quickly sensed I might have stumbled onto something. My cub reporter's nose for news told me this was something to call my editor about.

By the time York dropped me off at the Lord Jeff Inn, I had the inkling of a story and a guest list admission for two to the concert.. I was tempted to take my steady girl with me, but she had to wash her hair that night and instead I went with a photographer friend from But-

Aardvarks

And On Stage!

By Rose Marie

In this chauvinistic world it has always been a difficult job for girl groups to emerge as superstars. With the exception of the Andrews Sisters and The Supremes, girl groups have always had a tough time making it to the top. Aardvarks this week proudly endorses a new girl group and will hopefully help these wonderfully talented women to get what they deserve. Introducing: "The Bubbaloni Sisters!"—Carmina, Anita, and Pasquilena. These three, unbelievably effervescent, began their soon to be superstar existences under the warm wing of their mentor and mother, Ethel Vermin Bubbaloni. In the shadow of an old olive oil factory the girls began harmonizing their way into the business. In 1944 Ethel dragged the girls off to Paris where she enrolled them in L'Ecole de la Musique Classique run by opera diva Studienta Karamazov (sister to the Brothers) famed for her interpretation of Florence Foster Jenkins. As you can well see the Bubbalonis are indeed well versed in the great music of the world. But it was in Paris that the girls discovered that whay they were lacking was a beat, a rhythm that could carry them to where they wanted to go. And in a petite Bistro, after stealing away from both Ethel and Studienta, they tapped their platform heels to wholly different numbers. With a quick goodbye to the classical world and especially to Ethel they travelled to the Azores where they immediately became the hottest things on the island, after an appearance in the "Fatima Follies" where it is rumored that several spectators had visions. A few days after this concert, the local officials suggested that the Bubbalonis make a quick trip to America; the officials being so concerned that they even supplied the sisters with the air fare. In America the girls have not really been appreciated, having only received offers from The Regency Baths and the Napoleon Club. It is here that Aardvarks would like to call on all of you appreciators of music to come out and stand up for Anita, Carmina, and Pasquilena, all good women, all good workers, all great stars-to-be! When you all hear their beat, so new and exciting, their style, so pulsating with life and sensuality, you will understand what we mean. Their version of "Drooling Bongos" is unsurpassed, containing the raucous Latin beat with that homespun Yankee "brown bread and bean" taste.

Come out of your musical closets, people, support the best singers in the world and make them your own. UMass' own Diving Ms. D., that is, Moe DePalma has said: "Those Bubbalonis pack a wallop!" Let's face it, Bette Midler claimed her fame recently, Barbra Streisand is now the star in Hollywood, why shouldn't the same thing happen to the Bubbalonis? We can make it happen. We also want you to know that it is not the last time that you will heard about these singers; with so much going for them they cannot lose, Aardvarks will not let them fade into the "Veronica Lake Syndrome". Remember, now, this is only a beginning for the Bubbaloni Sisters. You'll be hearing them all over the place soon.

Over The Rainbow

Thomas Pynchon is one of the least known but most revered novelists currently working in fiction today. In the early sixties he astounded literary critics and audiences with his complex, devastatingly ecletic satire entitled "V". In 1967 he published a much slimmer, equally virtuoso work of fiction entitled "The Crying Of Lot 49". Since then, aside from a single article published in the New York Times Magazine and a few short stories, Mr. Pynchon has hid himself from public life. He still prefers a cultish anonymity, but with the publication of his latest, longest, and most fulfilling work of fiction "Gravity's Rainbow" may find being obscure more difficult than ever before. The book is reviewed on page fifteen.

Cry Baby Cry

Ingmar Bergman's "Cries and Whispers" is a film of great complexity and controversity. Some critics, such as Vincent Canby and Judith Crist, have hailed it as a devastating accomplishment, the apex of Bergman's art. Pauline Kael has said its hypnotic but unfulfilling. Andrew Sarris calls it overrated. The film surely effects everyone in different ways. In our second, but not to say final, opinion of the movie on page twenty—one, Ed Meek tells us Bergman has done better and "Cries and Whispers" remains an incomplete work.

Greasy Kids Stuff

Three concerts—two past, one future—headline our music pages this week. Sha Na Na drew four-thousand plus into the Amherst Cage. Our reporter got out intact to tell about it down to the last sh-boom. Alice Cooper graces our pages once again; this time on stage with the scoop on his new act. And Ry Cooder plays tomorrow in Putney, Vermont; E. Cohen gives him a thorough investigation. This is your life, Boomer! reviewed this week: Dr. John, Traffic and Procol Harum. 'Nuff said.

Amor, and more

On our right is a Quiz. Remember the Current Events Quiz in your old Weekly Reader? Well, kids, sit down and try again. Also did you know the truth about Faculty Unionization here on campus/ The analysis of the situation can be found on page thirteen. Kurt Vonnegut is one of the best read novelists of our generation. Popularity leads to analyzation and for a look at the first popular critique of this novelist's work, see page fourteen. Also on page fourteen, a political scoop, or how Dickie had Martha in the cradle and John on the phone. The New York subway system is the setting for an exciting new novel reviewed on page fifteen which righteningly makes real the experience of terror one can experience under the New York Streets. The circus is coming to the Cage, Emmet Kelly Jr.'s which may not be the greatest show on earth but will due do in the clutch. For more on this crew who will be here next Wednesday night in a benefit performance for Belchertown State School, see page twenty. Weekend fills out the rear. A note, by the way, Weekend will cover films in the area up to the Saturday of the upcoming week as to keep you informed as to what is coming up worth seeing.

Here's A Few Things You Ought To Know

By Howard Bloom and Steve Ferber

INSTRUCTIONS: O.K., gang. If you remember last week we tried to embarass you into telling us what you want most to read about, and what concerns you. So far, response to our initial questionnaire has not been earth-shaking, so we thought we'd try another tack in our never-ending crusade to get you to start thinking.

Here is the culmination of our second effort in as many weeks to get you to get off your derrieres and be informed. Below, you're going to find 11 multiple choice type questions. Most are about well-publicized events that have happened fairly recently. If you can't answer them correctly, then the article we wrote last week was without a doubt about you. The other couple of questions are designed to give those who really keep up with what's happening in the world a chance to prove it.

The answers can be found upside down at the end of the quiz. Here is the rating scale:

0-4 correct: Ever consider duty on the Posiedon?
5-7 correct: Get back in your cave!
8-9 correct: Damn good! Now, who's Kreskin?
10-11 correct: Are you sure you belong at UMass?

1. Which Senate expert in Constitutional law presently heads the Senate Investigating Committee on the Watergate crimes?

a) Senator Muskie
b) Senator Ervin
c) Senator Kennedy

2. Running for the mayoral seat in Oakland, California is a nationally renowned figure who headed one of the largest radical organizations in the late 1960's. Who is this man?

a) Bobby Seale
b) Jerry Rubin
c) Tom Hayden

3. In November of 1972 militant Indians took over the Bureau of Indian affairs in Washington D.C., protesting its lack of responsiveness to increasing Indian needs. Seven weeks ago the Indians carried their protest to Wounded Knee, South Dakota. Key among the Indian's numerous gripes was:

a) That Richard Wilson, chairman of the tribal council, is not a member of the American Indian Movement.
b) That the dropout rate in the three Indian schools in Wounded Knee was unproportionally high.
c) That the Indian's average national income is less than 50% of the average incomes for all Americans.
d) All of the above

4. For nine months following Edgar Hoover's death, L. Patrick Gray III was acting director of the FBI. After President Nixon selected him for the permanent position, Gray came before the Senate for confirmation. Gray is no longer in the running for the permanent directorship. This comes as a result of:

a) His being voted down by the full Senate
b) An unfavorable report on him by the Senate Judiciary Committee
c) A request on Gray's part to have President Nixon withdraw his nomination.

5. Serious conflicts over impoundment of funds and the waging of war in Cambodia without Congressional approval have earmarked the drift between President Nixon and the Congress of the United States. A recent development that has added fuel to the power struggle involves:

a) President Nixon's ceiling on meat prices
b) President Nixon's refusal to to testify in the Watergate hearings.
c) President Nixon's attempt to gain authority both to raise and lower U.S. tariffs and other trade barriers.

6. The Watergate scandal began in the summer of '72, and since that time each day has brought a wealth of new information and mention of at least two or three more names connected with the incident. Your task here is to identify that man who has NOT (as of yet) been associated with the Watergate affair.

a) James McCord
b) Gabe Lesperato
c) Donald Segretti
d) G. Gordon Liddy

7. A recent proposal to alleviate the Supreme Court's case load involves:

a) Formation of a National Appeals Court
b) Doubling the number of law clerks assigned to each Supreme Court justice
c) Changing the rules for granting a writ of certiorari from a four-man rule to a five-man decision.

8. In 1970, ITT spent approximately $1 million in an abortive attempt to influence the elections in what country?

a) Rhodesia
b) Brazil
c) Chile

9. FFF, SFCA and NFO are three groups currently involved in protesting:

a) Aid to North Vietnam
b) The recent pro-abortion ruling by the Supreme Court
c) The increasing prices of meat

10. This artist shocked the world with the first cubist canvas, Les Demoiselles d'Avignon painted in 1907. He died at Notre Dame de Vie, France last Monday at the age of 91. Who is he? (This is a fill-in, but you probably could have figured that out yourself since we're offering no choices)

11. What close friend of Daniel Ellsberg's, currently standing trial with him in the Pentagon Papers case, made the name Xerox a household word by using a copying machine.

a) Anthony Russo
b) Howard Hunt
c) Daniel Berrigan

Answers:
1)a; 2)a; 3)d; 4)c; 5)b; 6)b; 7)a; 8)c; 9)c; 10) Pablo Picasso; 11)a terfield, Conrad Stahelek. We armed ourselves with a 'Cub Reporter Cassette Recorder', a telephoto 35mm camera, and a couple of beers.

We were late and arrived in time to catch the tail end of the warmup, the dynamic "James Cotton Blues Band". We were given the V.I.P. escort to the foot of the stage by concert security people and I was feeling very good about the power of the press and about the 'King of Beers' I'd had shortly before.

From what York told me, I knew Sha-Na-Na consisted of 12 men, most of them from the original group that formed in 1968 at Columbia University. Oldies were their biggest requests by 1969, when they were spotted by Woodstock talent scouts at "The Scene", a N.Y. City discotheque they had a whirlwind, rock-'n-roll greaser act together. They first made national notice a year later when the film "Woodstock" premiered. They have been on the road constantly since. They work four nights a week and take two months off a year; and ask $6,000 to $10,000 a night.

Their basic act is a one hour whirlwind of precisely choreographed bumping, grinding, guitar strumming, greased-up, oldies. They played to a crowd of over 4,000 Sunday night and the fans went wild; but the group has been doing it for four years and feel stale playing only oldies. Their second album contained some of their original work, mostly mellowed out jazz progressions, but it didn't sell well. In concert, their image is strictly satarized grease and that is what their audience pays for. Three members, the two leather jacket guitarists, Gino and Rick and the bass player, Bruno, will be leaving the group within the next few months. Gino and Rick are headed for parts unknown and Bruno plans to return to Columbia to complete a B.A. in Philosophy. The band will continue to tour and add one or two new members, while trying to figure a way to break their stereotype.

The band bounded on stage in single file and started with a crisp pounding old tune. Most of them attired in Brylcream, pointed shoes, white socks, black chinos, and motorcycle jackets, were outdone by their male dance trio. The "Golden Glimmers" were all agliter in stunning metal flake suits and boots. The srawny alley tough struts, combing his hair, and flicks the grease at the audience. The Glimmers do some intricate hip shaking and when the lead guitarist warms up he plays with the guitar behind his neck. I was thrilled to see they only drink Budweiser on stage. All of them are dripping sweat at the end of the first song and they change positions onstage swiftly for the next tune. Amazingly versatile, most of them play two instruments, do vocals and their specialty in the act during the performance.

The audience applause brought them back for four encores. In the first encore the organist announced to cheers, "We've just got one thing to say to you fuckin' hippies, and that is rock-'n-roll is here to stay." They played my old time favorite, "Everybody Rock and Roll." After the first encore I hustled backstage to arrange interviews for later as Conrad popped more shots of them. It was done easily enough and when they went back on for a second call, the lead golden boy had changed into an embroidered Presley suit and carried a pink and white flowered acoustic guitar. He did a rousing imitation singing "Hound Dog". When they played "Great Balls 'o Fire" in the third encore, the organist played for us with a surprisingly accruate stocking foot. As a finale they said goodbye with "Never Say Good-bye."

We hurried backstage and followed them through a labrynth of corridors to the dressing room. They washed the sweat and grease off their bodies and guzzled the iced Budweiser that is always provided for them at concerts. They all looked pretty blown-out after their performance, as Bruno the bass player explained, "It's a packed enough hour that people don't feel short-changed. We really couldn't do it much longer." They needed the beer more than I did, but by the time I was offered one it was all gone. Two trash cans full of iced beer had been provided early in the evening.

I asked Big Lenny Baker, a sax man for 15 years, why the group doesn't do any original tunes. He said, "We only do hits in concert and we don't have any, so we have to do other peoples!"

Bruno added, "We do want to extend the base of the show doing original material, the problem is how. I imagine when the new people come in they will attempt to change the act." But he assured, "the greased show will still be there. It will never be dropped."

Sha-Na-Na's road manager, Donny Kingswell, who introduces and ends each show, said the group is now booked up till the middle of July. Their schedule includes Oregon, California, Hawaii, and New York, plus a Europe tour.

It was mentioned in the locker room that Sha-Na-Na had beaten the rock revival by several years. Baker responded, "Well, a lot of people say we're responsible for it. I don't know if that's true, but I think that we certainly helped it along.

When asked about their attitude towards the music they play, Bruno said, "Some people feel rock music has degenerated and we must save it by bringing back the roots. We don't. We just play it for a put-on. We make an exciting show for a good time."

The act was over and the real people of Sha-Na-Na were heading for their respective homes, in their modest cars, minus the grease. They looked like real people and could have blended in on any campus. They were still Sha-Na-Na, but they refuse to live up to any image, offstage.

Faculty Groups Move Towards Unionization

By Bill Densmore

Two faculty groups at the sprawling 21,000 student UMass campus here have begun a process which is regarded as unusual in American higher education.

But UMass President Robert C. Wood says the process "reflects a general transformation of American colleges and universities," which puts them "on the verge of a whole new set of governance procedures."

The process is organizing for the purpose of collective bargaining, and the best estimates are that at least half of the 1,400 faculty on this campus want to join up. They presently have no collective bargaining agent, although three unions have chapters on campus.

--The American Federation of Teachers (AFT) which is strong at two state college campuses in Massachusetts and at the City College of New York, but has a minor contingent at UMass-Amherst and does not appear to be seriously involved in collective bargaining attempts;

--The Massachusetts Teachers' Association (MTA) which has a chapter for UMass-Amherst professors known as the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP);

--and a local chapter of the national American Association of University Professors (AAUP).

Both the MTA affiliate (MSP) and the AAUP chapter have sizable membership on campus, but neither has a clear majority.

The AAUP was traditionally a professional organization much like the American Medical Association, but it endorsed collective bargaining as a legitimate tool for achieving goals in 1971 and has functioned much like a union since. It is active in cases where academic due process has been violated, and may censure a college or university if it feels the institutions employment practices are unsatisfactory.

The Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) was created in the middle of last year as a higher education arm of the Massachusetts Teachers' Assoc. (MTA)

The MTA claims to represent 50,000 public, elementary and secondary school teachers in the state and maintain broad negotiating powers and strong lobbying activity on Beacon Hill.

Out of an estimated $3.8 million in annual dues one source claims the MTA has $1.6 million for "field services" to finance organizing and bargaining activities in Massachusetts.

And Cyril S. Solomons, an educational consultant working for the MTA in Amherst has said that the union could spend up to $100,000 on a UMass organizing drive.

MTA executive secretary-treasurer William H. Hebert claims there is no budget of $100,000 for the UMass drive but has called it a "major effort."

Solomons said earlier this month that "a great many faculty members on campus cannot really afford the dues" of simultaneous membership in local, state and national unions.

He also said that without the "prestige" of the AAUP as an ally the local affiliate of the MTA might have "only a 50% chance of winning a referendum election.

"The first couple of years are going to be tough" with a unionized faculty at Amherst, according to Solomons, and the MSP "is going to be subsidized very, very heavily," from outside sources.

In order to be recognized as a collective bargaining unit either the AAUP or the MSP, or a colaition of the two would have to gain majority of the faculty's vote in a referendum election.

The MTA affiliate is asking that the bargaining unit be made up of department heads, instructors, asst., assoc., and full-professors, librarians and certain program directors at UMass.

The AAUP chapter vice-president at UMass, Cadwell L. Ray, has indicated that his union will also negotiate to represent faculty, either as sole bargaining agent, or in a coalition with the Society of Professors (MSP).

Campus reaction to the principle of collective bargaining and a unionized faculty is beginning to surface.

The faculty senate at UMass-Amherst recently refused to consider a motion that it endorse "collective bargaining in principle." And the student senate has appointed a committee to study the effects that a faculty union would have on students rights and role in University decision-making.

David E. Booker, 26, a junior and speaker of the student senate says that although he has received scant information about unionization, "most of the evidence given me is that it would hurt students."

"The faculty would negotiate with the administration and the students would be left out of it completely," Booker feels.

Administrators in Amherst have adopted a wait-and-see attitude towards bargaining attempts, defering comment until hearings on the MSP's claim of 30% membership among faculty are held.

UMass-Amherst Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said during February that he would like to know "how a union is going to be a vehicle for getting more scholarship aid, or changing criteria for granting tenure."

And he has indicated that he does not want department heads as members of a bargaining unit, because they are also administrators.

Union leaders have said they are concerned about tenure procedures, scholarship aid for students, class sizes and financial constraints being imposed by federal and state budget priorities. They claim that the traditional bread-and-butter issue of salaries has a low priority.

Robert L. Gluckstern, Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs has said he is "not attracted to the notion that faculty concerns can be better served by unionization."

Gluckstern says that administrators are boning up on the issues and problems surrounding a collective bargaining situation. Chancellor Bromery has said that Gluckstern will probably act as the university's representative in non-legal union matters.

It is hard to predict if a University-wide faculty union could be effective at handling the needs of 1,400 professionals, and even harder to know that those needs are beyond the traditional matters of salary and working conditions.

Some observers feel that the present move towards collective bargaining results because faculty feel estranged from where the real decisions are being made about the future of UMass.

Cyril Solomons has said "people are willing to pay for something they can see they are getting, but they're not willing to pay for what amounts to promises."

Union members on campus acknowledge that the financing of public higher education and the student-faculty-administration power triangle are central problems a union must deal with.

And it looks as if before summer comes faculty here will have a chance to decide if collective bargaining can tackle such problems--with promises or action.

Vonnegut: Scrutinized, Inspected, Rejected, Etc.

By Ed Bryant

When Screaming Yellow Zonkers were first introduced to the marketplace, the box in which they came was chock full of information, including a valuable series of answers to that perplexing question, what to do with Screaming Yellow Zonkers. It was perhaps a good idea, since many of the people who were eventually to read the box were too high to realize that Zonkers were primarily intended as a cure for munchies, and that they were meant for eating.

Kurt Vonnegut, Jr., like Screaming Yellow Zonkers, is alive and well, but there seems to be confusion as to what people should do with him. There abound in recent years misguided individuals, most of whom seem to be interested in careers as English professors, or worse, as critics, who ask themselves this question, without noticing that their less than wise answers would have best been left uncommitted to paper, or at least unpublished. One such individual is Peter J. Reed, author of Writers For The Seventies: Kurt Vonnegut, Jr. Reed's answer is to treat Vonnegut as a writer who should be scrutinized, inspected, dissected, rejected, deflected, and all kinds of things like that as they do in English class. Peter J. Reed's career in the Wonderful World of Books has undoubtedly been advanced by the inclusion of his collection of essays in the Writers for the '70's series (which includes books on Hesse, Tolkien, and Brautigan, as well as Vonnegut), but he has missed the point, rather drastically.

Kurt Vonnegut is a writer of fantasy, one whose works are best enjoyed by the kind of person whose idea of having a good time is to have a good time. If there is anything to say about Kurt Vonnegut, it is to tell all your friends about him, and let them read the books themselves.

One can assume, in 1973, that the authos of Writers For The Seventies: Kurt Vonnegut, Jr. would agree that people should read Vonnegut's books. It is also a safe assumption that "you should read Vonnegut's books" would not justify publication as a serious piece of criticism; if you want your book published, you have to say more.

What else does Peter J. Reed have to offer by way of insight into Vonnegut?

> The protagonist, other characters, and even the author himself, seem to indulge the notion that, the present being grim and the future holding no promise, the past must somehow have been better.
> At times PLAYER PIANO is serious to the point of being solemn, elsewhere it can be breezily lampooning. Yet it is in part the tension between derision and humane concern which lends the novel strength.

In reading Player Piano, it somehow escaped my notice that the novel had borrowed strength from anywhere. To be less flippant, Vonnegut is not the kind of writer for whom this sort of analysis is at all appropriate.

Perhaps the best example of Reed's unfortunate tendency to beg the literary question in his attempt to lock Vonnegut into a classroom is his essay on God Bless You, Mr. Rosewater. Despite the assurance we have that Reed has read Vonnegut, he evidently hasn't learned anything; he is still bent on being serious at all costs:

> In effect, the novel comes almost as close to re-posing the question of "Hamlet's Madness" as it playfully suggests, as well as recasting the "To be or not to be" quandary in a contemporary rotten state. The nature of love, also a thematic problem in Hamlet and a subject Vonnegut constantly returns to, reemerges as a major consideration in this work.

Respectability has its advantages at times. It is understandable that someone who is into respectability might wish to gain respectability for something he or she likes which is looked down on by people he or she respects. Or maybe Reed just wanted to write a book about Vonnegut because he knew he could find a publisher.

It is unfortunate, but there is a strong tendency afoot to establish standards in areas so subjective that the notion of standards would seem ridiculous to anyone not determined to create such standards. One such area is, obviously, the writing of creative fiction. The relationship of style and content in a given work is either successful or it isn't, depending on who is reading. Perhaps Peter Reed is troubled by just who is doing the reading.

Kurt Vonnegut will never win a Nobel Prize for either literature or porpriety. Peter Reed seems to be the sort of fellow who would love to win either. So he wrote a serious book on Vonnegut. It would have been a better catharsis for him to attend the next meeting of the "I Read And Respect The New York Review Of Books" Club in the nude. Then he might have demonstrated that he had at least some inkling of what Kurt Vonnegut is all about.

"Caesar has no idea what's really going on."

Were Martha And Dickie On Your Dance Card?

By Dennis Suman

Because of the most exhaustive investigation that my staff and I have ever undertaken, a task that took eight months of tirless research, clandlestine undercover work in the White House by a team of ex-CIA agents, countless interviews, payoffs, bribes, and I must admit, a little blackmail, we are able to bring forth to the American public the true facts behind the Watergate incident.

While the results of this report may cause you concern, even shock you, read on, keeping in mind that we are all only human, and that even the most respected of us succumb to the eneviable course that nature sets. It is only now that we can bring to you all the real facts behind that fateful day in June 1972, that is even now causing concern among this nation's citizens over the credility of the American judicial system. It is in the light of this fact alone that we feel obligated to bring you the whole story. We shall start from the beginning.

As you probably know, John Mitchell was forced to resign from his post as the President's campaign manager by his wife, Martha, because she thought he "gave too much time to his job, and not enough to me (Martha)". It is a well known fact that the timing of the sabotaging of the Watergate office and John Mitchell's resignation are separated by only two weeks. It is only now that the real reason why John quit can be brought out in the open. In reality, President Nixon was caught having an affair with Martha by a few power hungry Democrats. We don't know how they discovered what surely must have been one of the most well kept secrets in Washington, but never the less, they were discovered. For months, they compiled films, photographs, and tape recordings of the scandalous incident. Finally, after they had all the documented proof they needed, they gave the President an ultimatum. Unless President Nixon resigned as President of the United States in one week, they were going to tell Pat everything.

In a fit of desperation, Richard sent three of his top security men to Watergate, where he had learned the Democrats were keeping the incriminating evidence. His orders were to break in and steal all the evidence. However, the security men were caught by the Democrats, who suspected that the President would stoop to such low tactics. Larry O'Brien, full of spite and anger, decided to tell Pat at once. "That will teach him", Larry said in a tone of sadistic triumph. Richard had no choice but to tell Martha what happened. Reliable sources told us that her first reaction was one of fear.

"If any of this gets out, I'll never be able to call anyone on the phone without being thought of as anything except a hussie", Mrs. Mitchell was overheard as saying. She then dragged John from his job by declaring the now famous quote: "It's either me or your job, John". He picked Martha, reportedly with some reluctance.

Pat was told the whole tale by Larry. But, being a wise and prudent wife whose first and second duties bound her to her country and husband in that order, her first reaction was of precaution. Apparently, the First Couple were able to reach some sort of reconciliation. We have been able to obtain part of a tape recorded conversation between Mr. and Mrs. Nixon. Here is part of that conversation.

"...What are you trying to do Dick, blow the election? Why, all a reporter has to do is ask you why there's so much secracy behind the Watergate break-in and you'd probably blurt the whole thing out. Can you imagine what the American people would say? They'd say: 'Hey, he really is a tricky Dick'. A lot of good that would do us. I don't want you to go out campaigning this year. It could be very costly for us, besides, I want to keep an eye on you."

"Alright dear, I suppose you're right. I guess I'll have to ask Spiro to do a little work for a change. I've got to admit though, he sure has a keen vocabulary. I bet he can make some swell speeches."

"Good. And don't forget to tell John to keep his mouth shut. (Apparently, John had found out about the whole ugly mess). We're going to have enough trouble keeping Martha's closed."

"Don't worry dear. I've talked to her and she's promised no more phone calls in the middle of the night. As an extra added precaution, I've got a 24-hour watch on her at this very moment."

"How many men do you have watching her?"

"Oh, about 10 or 12."

"Double it."

Unfortunately for Rich and Pat, the Democrats decided to make a case out of the affair and are attempting to oust the President from his office by claiming political espionage on the Republican party's part.

There is a lighthearted note, though. We have learned that the Democrats have obtained the film rights to this milestone in American politics, and since they don't have anything else to do for four years, have scheduled the making of a picture tentatively entitled Dick and Martha and John and Pat. It is hoped that the movie will be a smash hit (which it certainly will be) for the profits will be used to help pay the four million dollar debt Senator McGovern ran up during the 1972 campaign.

PIRI THOMAS

Piri Thomas grew up in New York's Spanish Harlem where poverty and discrimination led him into drugs, youth gangs, criminal activities. After serving a six year prison term for armed robbery, he got it together and kicked his drug habit, worked with street gangs, and addict rehabilitation programs. A victim of a system that creates ghettos, Piri fought back to become an outstanding author. His controversial, "Down these Main Streets" is a hard hitting account of his life on the streets and in prison. An artist, poet, and film maker of Petey and Johnny; The World of Piri Thomas. Seen on NET, Piri's latest book is "Savior, Savior, Hold My Hand", Sept. 1972.

Piri will be lecturing Drugs, Cities and the Third World.

Gravity's Rainbow by Thomas Pynchon
760 pp. Paper $4.95
Viking Compass

Gravity's Rainbow is above all an incredibly long, difficult, intricate and even verbose work. A panoramic view of the twentieth centufy, it is set near the the close of World War II. Beginning in London the scene shifts all over Europe, space and time no barrier to the narrator's creative consciousness. The reader is taken backwards in time to various scenes in Africa, America and Europe. At times, indeed often, the narrative sounds like the insane spoutings of a paranoid dope freak.

It is impossible to talk about Gravity's Rainbow and not discuss what is meant by the modern novel. This is a term often used, but very hazily defined. Exactly what the demarcation point is between the modern novel and the classical novel is, as well, seldom commented upon. The aims of the modern novel are not so very different from what has come before them. Exploration of the human condition, exposing the absurd contradictions of modern society, social comment; these are all themes present in Gravity's Rainbow and in most fiction which has been passed on to us. The difference comes when we look at the use to which writing techniques are put. The metaphor, alliteration and symbol patterns, long established methods, have, in the modern novel, been updated and elongated. In Gravity's Rainbow the use of scientific metaphor is an excellent example of this. While science and the humanities were once seen as opposites, there has come about a reconciliation of these two areas. The modern writer, to some extent, has realized that he can no longer afford to exclude any part of the human experience in attempting to reach his objectives. This book is an excellent example of that realization.

The anti-hero is an important component of the novel. There are a few such characters in this work, but I should like to concentrate upon the principal one, Tyrone Slothrop. Slothrop is probably the most interesting character in the book and also the only one the reader can really keep track of. His personal history extends back to America, Harvard and a rather bizarre sexual fixation which serves as the fulcrum point for the first section of the novel. Slothrop begins the book in London and from there goes on to cover a good deal of Europe. His motivation is centered upon the A-4 rocket, which I shall discuss in more detail shortly. After being chased by portion of the entire Allied command, and managing to elude them all, Slothrop, at the end of the book, seems to fade into oblivion and carry on only as a legend, a perverted one, after that. Many of Slothrop's problems are caused by a Mr. Pointsman, who is obsessed by Pavlovian theory. Cause-effect relationships and vice-versa, run throughout the book and serve as the basis of Slothrop's dilema.

Pynchon and Vonnegut have certain similarities as manifest through the recurrence of minor characters. While Pynchon does not use this device nearly as often or as persuasively as Vonnegut does, the presence of this device shows a certain affinity among modern writers. Dog Years by Gunter Grass however, is much more similar in both form and content than any other modern novel I can think of. One similarity which comes quite quickly to mind is the use of the anti-hero and that person's wanderings all over post war Europe. As well in the beginning of Dog Years one of the characters throws a penknife into a river and it turns up later in the book as a symbol of the continuity of life. A similar occurence happens to Slothrop, when he loses a harmonica in the toilet at the Roseland Ballroom in Boston and finds it some six-hundred pages later in a stream, emphasizing a theme quite similar to the one in Dog Years.

The A-4 rocket, a device invented by the Germans to bomb London, serves as the central point around which the events of the book revolve. It is this rocket which Slothrop pursues through Europe and also the title is derived in relationship to it. The Gravity of the title is the rocket, as is mentioned in several places in the book. The Rainbow is the arced trajectory the rocket follows as it flies towards London. When we consider the Biblical significance of the rainbow, both as a promise and a threat of the fire next time, we can understand how the paranoia develops in the novel. All the characters are constantly living under the threat of the rocket. Slothrop is obsessed by it and at one point in the novel dresses in a hornless Wagenrian opera helmet and a cape, calling himself Rocketman. It would seem that he becomes the object of his paranoia.

Some reviewers in attempting to compare Pynchon with a composer, have proposed that his writing is comparable to the enormity of Gustav Mahler. It would seem though, in attempting to find a counterpart of Pynchon in music, Charles Ives would be much more suitable. The music of Ives, with its twisting intricacies is much more suitable, the subtle innuendos of Pynchon in mind.

The use of technique is probably the point at which the modern novel most obviously emerges and diverges from its more classical forerunners. The scientific metaphors throughout the book relate to science both as an entity in itself and also, in the form of the rocket, as the major theme of the novel. Pynchon deals in lyrical detail with complex systems of thermodynamics and their relation to the energy of the novel's characters. This technique is inventive, but it also makes for extremely difficult reading at times. It seems there should be a point in writing abstractly at which the author should stop in order to stay within the same sphere of perception as his reader. This point is often overstepped in the course of Gravity's Rainbow.

The seemingly most important thing about Gravity's Rainbow is that it embodies, to some extent, all the prominent characteristics of the modern novel. Science, the zodiac, Pavlovian and Freudian psychology are a few which are especially well used. It serves as a point from which one can go out and delve into modern literature and then refer back to as a resting place of modern technique. It is finally, an experience in fiction of vast depth and certainly worth the bother to read it.

Ever Ride The New York Subway?

By Carl Greenberg

The Taking of Pelham One Two Three by John Godey
Putnam
316 pages, $6.95

The Taking of Pelham One Two Three concerns the hijacking of a subway train. From what seems to be an idiotic proposition, author John Godey has written a novel of real suspense and realistic action. One of the only faults that may lie with this book is that someone just may try it after reading the book.

The book's major credits are its descriptions of action which have the ring of truth, its chronicling of the backstage of the New York City sybway system, its well-modulated suspense and the very nearly real people. None of the characters are really completely drawn, but the main one's are well enough described so that the reader can sense that they are being true to themselves when they act, and it is the action which carries this book as it should be.

Perhaps the best part of Godey's characterizations is the snatches of dialogue he gives us. The best lines in the book come from the people on the street speculating as to what is happening below ground and telling each other how the mayor and the police should handle the situation. "You know how they're gonna get away? The sewers." "Dogs. All they got to do is loose a pack of Dobermans..."

The reader meets the mayor and the various police officials and it is with these people that Godey shows his greatest control. None of the characters in the book are romanticized. Everything is described as it probably would actually happen and no character is made into a hero with the possible exception of the leader of the four men who attempt this master crime. Not that he is actually a non-believable character, but the reader may wonder if he had to be that perfect.

Godey has an eye for detail that is at times so subtle that the reader must read carefully to pick up these nuggets of description. For instance, it is easy to pass over the first descriptions we get of the main characters, but they turn out to be vitally important since they contained clues to the disguises being worn by each of them.

Anyone who has ever ridden on a subway in New York will not only recognize the people that Godey describes, but will also have answered any questions he may have on the operation of the subway from the details of how the trains themselves run, to the organization of the Transit Police (one of the largest police forces in the country) to the overall organization and operation of the system. The book might easily have been titled "Everything You've Always Wanted to Know About Subways, etc." The title, by the way, is derived from the manner in which each subway train is designated. The train in question began its run down Manhattan from Pelham Bay Park at 1:23 P.M.

Except for two things, Godey's educating us about the subway might have been stiff and akwardly put in; first of all, a great deal of the detail is important to the story itself, and secondly, it is truly interesting stuff.

All the details and the obvious painstaking research of the author add up to a perfectly conceived crime. (One wonders why Godey only wrote about it.) Of course, the first question in everyone's mind is "how the hell are they gonna get away?" A good question, and Godey provides a pretty good answer. Revealing this part of the plot would be a crime in itself, since a major part of the suspense in this book revolves around the getaway.

Besides a good look at the workings of the subway system, we also get a good look at the workings of the Mayor's office, the police, a bit of the underground arms business (the hijackers are armed with submachine guns), and the Federal Reserve Bank (the hijackers demand $1,000,000 ransom). (Ten thousand fifty-dollar bills and five thousand hundred-dollar bills (one million dollars) make a block about twenty inches high and twelve inches deep, for instance. It is obvious that Godey took time to write this novel.)

One telling instance of Godey's ability to visualize the situation and make it realistic occurs as the money is being raced to the hijackers. Two policemen in a police car, with an escort, are suddenly responsible for delivering $1,000,000 cash in unmarked bills. The scene is so vivid that we ask ourselves what we would do. Are the cops going to think of just taking off with it? Indeed they do, so concerned is Godey with even his minor characters, and even after their delivery, Godey returns to them so that we can hear one of them regret the fact that they didn't even just "dip in" for a couple of packets. Who was ever gonna know? Were the hijackers gonna complain?

As is the crime it describes, the book is nearly perfectly executed. All the way to the very end, which is not really a "surprise" ending but is true to the character who ends the book, there is an almost eerie sense of reality, even in the most violent scenes which are motivated and calmly described.

In the same way that there are spooky books which are ideally suited for reading in the dead of night, this is the perfect book for subway reading. Sales in New York are probably soaring. But in this era of the supercrimes of plane hijacking and assasinations, the book takes on an immediacy for more than just the subway riders of New York. (This book courtesy of the University Bookstore.)

Alice On Stage: Sicker, Bigger And Better

By Mike Kostek

In Concert: Alice Cooper/Flo & Eddie at the Boston Garden, March 26

What may be the largest grossing tour in the history of mankind is currently unfolding around us. Alice Cooper is touring fifty-six cities and taking in $4.5 million (Note: Three Dog Night lays dubious claim to $5.5 from their 1971 tour of the nation's ball parks). Last March 26 they came to Boston and this reviewer was fortunate to get tickets to this affair, since the 17,000 seat Garden was sold out in a day.

The Phlorescent Leech & Eddie have shortened their name to Flo & Eddie and have gotten aboard Alice Cooper's express as the opening act, and this is kind of unfortunate. Trouble is, most of the stops on the tour are 17,000 seat hockey arenas, and Flo & Eddie just don't translate well into that type of situation. Their impish put-ons (and their savage put-ons) and satiric clowning are a large part of their act and appeal, and don't work when you can't hear or see them. I don't imagine most of the folks in the second balcony and the far end of the Garden (that's 8000 people I'm talking about) knew what the hell they we talking about. The strongest part of F&E's music is their justly famous singing and harmonies, and since the human voice is the hardest thing for a PA system to project properly, and since there is such a small margin of error between good singing and bad singing, and since most hockey rinks are accoustically awful, you can see what kind of troubles Flo & Eddie might run into.

The cultural highlight of their act, besides Aynsley Dunbar's fleet drum solo, came in the middle of their act when they saw their mellower songs weren't going down too well with Boston's younger set. "You wanna boogie?", asked Mark Volman (he's Flo). "YEAH!", they wanted to boogie. So, using the famous Canned Heat "Refried Hockey Boogie" riff, Flo & Eddie stomped around and gave it to us. "You wanna boogie? We'll give you boogie" went the lyrics. I don't believe too many of us got it.

The great moments of Rock Production have been largely confined to the studion, with most groups concerned only with reproducing their recordings faithfully on stage. Not Alice. Certainly no other show can compare with the preparations Alice and Co. have made for the Billion Dollar Babies tour. Performing on a giant perversion of a Hullaballoo stage setting, this Alice Cooper Show packs a punch that can be felt in even the farthest corners of the garden.

Alice knows that the stage effects will mean little without adequate musical backing, (read: power) so on stage he's added a pianist-organist-mellotronist (thus leaving Mike Bruce free to roam about on guitar) and has also brought along another guitarist (that makes three) so waves of music keep churning out despite whatever personnel are diverted to the machinations are going on stagefront.

Even the thirty or so roadies were dressed snazzily with tight black shirts with white printing. Some said "Alice Cooper", with a large two-headed snake as the S in the $. Below that, "America '73".

Meal Smith's silver drum set is a twenty-two drum salute to his percussistic imagination, his bankroll and his natural flash. It has to be the ultimate kit as drums.

Behind Neal stands a gold Egyptian mummy that lights up in bizarre shades of green, red, blue and yellow.

Hung up in the rafters of the twenty-five foot high set are shiny silver and gold mannequins that gesture and pose like the embalmed victims of the last show. The set is fraught with lights, lights, lights and more lights. Lights overhead, lights underfoot. The steps light up as does part of the main platform's walkway. Not only do they light up, but the stage turns different hues on command. Hanging at the bottom of the lighted set are two large chrystal-covered balls that rotate occasionally, and make for spectacular effects during something like say, "My Stars".

After Flo & Eddie leave, a smooth movie soundtrack comes through the PA, trying to foster a strange, sickly sedate mood on the crowd of Cooper crazies.

Finally the boys arrive, and "Hello! Hurray! Let the show begin! I've been ready..." The lights flash and change bar by bar, song by song. They get to the first "I feel so strong!" line and CUT and fire into "Billion Dollar Babies" with Glen Buxton singing Donovan's part then CUT to "Elected" complete with the Walter Winchell "Good evening America and all the ships at sea". In whipping through about half of each song in this infamous trilogy, Alice lets it be known that the Show, the visuals, are as important as the music. Each number all evening long is used to invoke memories, moods, emotions and then is cut when they're done with it.

...He masturbated babies, made love to the dead.

"I'm Eighteen" is given a big treatment, with a long instrumental middle, although about half of the studio version is sung. In the middle Alice sings, while sitting on the edge of the front of the stage, "I'm 18/I'm not 19/I'm not 20/Not 21, 22, 23, 24 or 25/I ain't no American Pie." Strobes flash into half of "Raped And Freezin'" and then "No More Mr. Nice Guy".

Alice is offering his Budweiser to the Boston rock camera crew in the pit in front of the stage. The four of them take a swig and give it back to him. Alice struts and frets on the stage. He is the real show. His position in the set is right out front, centerstage.

Change of props and custome are achieved under cover of darkness or smoke, and done to the accompaniment of some classic horror movie theme soundtracks.

"My Stars" is next and features some beautiful flashing lights. Then "Unfinished Sweet" replete with a three foot dentist's drill, smoke, a giant dancing tooth, a six-foot long toothbrush and a five foot long tube of toothpaste which naturally wound up between Alice's legs.

Of course, for our benefit and enlightenment they did "Sick Things". Alice had a gaggle of dismembered dummies to stomp and strew about, and more than one wound up, naturally, between Alice's legs. Alice's snake, Sheena, made its only appearance during "Sick Things."

"Dead Babies" brought out Alice's sword impaled through a baby doll, and "I Love The Dead" featured a remarkable sequence with the dummies that modestly and a sense of impropriety prevents me from mentioning.

And yes indeed, Alice is guillotined amidst swirls of chemical smoke.

Alice came back renewed with "School's Out" and tons of posters to throw into the crowd. "You know what? That's crazy!" said Alice as he pointed to the crazed mob devouring the posters. "Say, I haven't heard one good insult all night!" taunted Alice. Howls, screams, epithets and upraised fingers. "I want to hear the dirtiest thing you can think of." implored Alice and helt the mike out to the crowd. The din grew to majestic proportions. A forest of upraised middle fingers spread through the Garden. Love/hate. Alice smiled and shook his head. "You're beautiful."

For an encore we got a fifteen minute "Under My Wheels" in which Alice laid down to all just what and where his wheels were. Out came a giant American flag which Alice held aloft and waved in triumph. Out marched the band holding sparklers aloft. Someone gave Alice a dirty post car. He looked at it, shook his head, wagged his finger in mock-disapproval as he handed it back. He turned away smiling, unable to supress his wonder at the decadence of it all. He loves it. He hates it.

By this time Kate Smith was booming "God Bless America" over the PA, the band was collected on stage, sparkling, and the evening was drawing to a close. Dennie Dunaway wore a monster mask. The band had played well, nothing great, but had got the job done. Their powerful riff seated the audience to a satisfactory degree. The Alice Cooper Show had taken Boston successfully, Exit right.

As Alice said recently, "You kids out there keep getting sicker, and we'll keep putting on bigger and better shows for you."

His Voice Tells the Story

by E. Cohen

Ry Cooder comes to Windham College, Putney, Vermont, tomorrow night, April 14th for what promises to be one of this areas' major folk concerts.

Cooder brings with him a colorful music background. He's played with everybody from Captain Beefheart to the Rolling Stones, and is recognized as one of the leading bottleneck guitar players in the Rock music field today. Until recently, he's been in the shadows, behind the stars he's played with. But with his first album, Ry Cooder, his musical identity was formed and is becoming greater and more distinctive with each passing year.

The type of music that he sings and plays has roots deep in his past. His father gave him the push he needed at an early age. He described his past to Bob Felder and Bob Norman of SingOut magazine in a recent interview:

"I'm from out here in LA and. I've lived here all my life, travelled around a bit, not too much. I've stayed around Los Angeles. I've been playing guitar since I was three or four, my father gave me a tenor when I was a little kid. I used to watch him - he knew some kind of cowboy tunes, and some Woodie Guthrie songs. I'd just imitate what he did. He never played very much, but I went ahead with it...then they gave me a six-string when my hands got bigger, and I just fooled with it all the time through my childhood; fooled around and I didn't even think much about it...just had records around the house all the time."

His parents introduced him to folk heroes such as Pete Seeger, Leadbelly, and Woodie Guthrie through those same albums.

"Mainly, I liked him, Woodie Guthrie, the best-there was something about the stories in all his tunes...very graphic, you know, dust bowl, real intriguing. The dust bowl thing became a kind of fixation of mine, to find out what that was supposed to be...photographs and all the people and all the old cars...going off across the highway. So I got interested in that historic thing, and that's always meant the most to me...the people and the songs...If I can visualize it or not..."

His style and musical identity comes from those cloudy eras of yesteryear. His music forms a bridge spanning the romatic and tragic periods of the '20s, '30s, and '40s with the revivalist themes of today's music. His professional career started at the famous hanging place, the Ash Grove, a Los Angeles folk music club.

"Whenever there was a good guitar player there, I'd sit in the front row and watch. I got pretty good at remembering stuff. If someone like Gary Davis was in town, I'd talk to him, go to where he was staying, give him $5 and get him to play as much as he could while I watched. About a month later, I'd find that I'd start to remember how he did things."

Ry recalled, "They used to have party nights at the Ash Grove, when people would get up out of the audience and play. And it seemed like when I was 16 I was good enough, and somebody said, 'Get up, get up', and they pushed me on stage. I got up and I was so scared that i was petrified. I played and sweated and people laughed and clapped." These beginnings led to an Ash Grove appearance with Jackie DeShannon which Ry considered totally unsuccessful.

A big break appeared when Taj Mahal showed up in Los Angeles somewhere around 1966:

"I guess after Newport '65 became a thing, Taj Mahal came out to LA from Cambridge or wherever he was and I met him", Ry said. "He was real raggedy and I was real raggedy, so we got together and went to the Teen Fair in Hollywood and sat in a booth for Martin guitars and just played Delta blues. It was hard and it was good. There were sequined bands on either side of us and the Byrds were the big thing so it was different, blues at the Teenage Fair, it was far out.

"So then naturally things took their course, and the William Morris agency came over and said, 'you guys sign right here' and I went through all that mess, and these people, shyster guys, make you a star, give you a chair with your name on it, give you a '59 Cadillac or something. And it was the comic book situation, you know. We were suddenly in the classics thing, and there's no reason for it, 'cause we weren't good. It wasn't really a group because nobody could even agree on what key to play a tune in.

"We called the group the Rising Sons. We actually lasted about a year and a half, which is fantastic, it just shows you that in those days there was no competition out here and we could get work playing at Cirro's and at Whisky a Go Go's and the Trip...We got to be real good, got some fine pieces, had a repertoire of almost all original tunes or at least tunes that nobody'd ever heard before.

"I guess we were fun to see. Taj was theatrical-you know, he jumps around-and nobody was playing blues in town much. This was before Paul Butterfield came out and made a big hit and the Lovin' Spoonfuls hadn't arrived yet, so we still had some areas that hadn't been covered. When some really good groups arrived, there were no more Rising Suns, of course."

Taj Mahal went off to seek his own musical identity, and Ry became a studio man.

"The producer, Terry Melcher, liked all this folk stuff I played, and right about then people in the studio record business began to realize that it was better to have specialists come in and lend some kind of character to an ordinary record rather than have the same old studio band play it over and over again.

"Terry got me down to do some Paul Revere and the Raiders sessions. Well, that was a whole new thing, guys working anonymously for a front act, very expert, quick guys. I was so at sea--I couldn't know about major seventh chords. But I slowly and surely started doing that kind of work for Terry and a few other people till my bottleneck playing attracted some attention and that got me some more jobs."

Ry supported himself with the studio work during this three year period. He learned how to regiment himself, and said, "I learned on those records what it meant to be in the studio and conform to some sort of pattern rather than sit and play a Blind Blake song."

During the Taj Mahal period he met Don Van Vliet, alias Captain Beefheart. He worked with Beefheart's Magic Band and on the group's first album, Safe as Milk, he was credited with arranging "I've Grown So Ugly" and "Rolling and Tumbling." Cooder said about the Beefheart experience:

"Oddly enough, when I first met him, he was trying to play blues, but he wasn't going to end up playing blues for an entirely different reason than I do. He likes blues 'cause he likes sounds that those guys make with their voice...He's got his memory full of all these grunts and groans that people like John Lee Hooker make...so he's reacting to it on a kind of an abstract level, he's a very abstract person. I'm not really so abstract. So when we were playing together, I was always being sort of linear, you might say, saying, "Now you play this and I'll play that and we'll play a beat here and a beat there;" he'd tried to...he'd resist that and want to go in a kind of a free-form direction which would...he was the main guy, we'd end up free forming, and I'd pack up and leave because I didn't relate to that too good. So it was off that we were playing together. It didn't last, consequently. There was no real rapport there at all. Except that he liked bottleneck, you know. Everybody likes bottleneck, you know. There's something about it. But he thought it was dramatic and he wanted to use it as a sound thing, you know, rather than a melodic instrument, he wanted to make it like theramin, he wanted to have it whistle and scream and hum and all that stuff. So I never understood what he was up to at all. I mean, as far as I was concerned, I thought it was crazy, I still think it's crazy, but now I can see what he's after, I think I can."

Ry Cooder

After Beefheart and Taj, Cooder continued to play with the studio people. While at the studio he met Jack Nitzsche and helped him with the film score to Candy. Through Nitzsche, Cooder got the opportunity to play with the Rolling Stones interview.

After Beefheart and Taj, Cooder continued to play with the studio people. While at the studio he met Jack Nitzsche and helped him with the film score to Candy. Through Nitzsche, Cooder got the opportunity to play with the Rolling Stones, since Jack needed help on the score for "Performance". In a Rolling Stone interview, Cooder tells of his experiences with the famous English rock group.

"We stayed around and did some work on Let it Bleed. My participation was limited to sitting around. The Stones kept getting bogged down and puzzled. Keith Richard didn't like me. Like, he left the room when I walked in. But I tried to be invisible and just blend in." Later on, both Nitzsche and Cooder got more active. "We'd pick up an instrument, Mick'd dance around, and we had a good time. I did a mandolin thing and played some jams; just got spaced out and played every note I could think of. Then all of a sudden Mick said; "That's it; we've got it. Let's go home'."

For too long a time, Cooder didn't hear from the Stones, so he went to the studio and arrived just in time to hear a track, featuring a guitar part that "Sounded just like me. Keith Richard must've done a sponge job." As things turned out, Cooder got credit for the mandolin part in "Love is Vain". He is also on a tune called "Sister Morphine", which hadn't been released (as of November, 1970).

Ry left the studio life after he discovered that his music began to artistically suffer:

"I found out that it was just going to kill me because I forgot most of the music I learned, I forgot a lot of playing, my hands got weak, I didn't have any chops left, I sort of lost interest...I decided I'd better quit playing studio work, and do something legitimate or professional, anyhow, so that's when I started making my own record. Now I play with some friends...I mean if Randy Newman has a seassion I come down, you know, 'cause I like him real well and we get along."

Ry's albums draws from sources that reach down from the grassroots levels. He takes music that's 30, 40, and 50 years old and transforms them into old picture postcards, complete with that musty smell and the brown, faded picture. Ry has said it's important that he can see in his own head what it was like back then. But that's where he's great - he lets the listener see the same picture.

Themes like the Depression, the poor struggling against hopeless odds, the working man fighting to keep his head above the gutter, and the joys and sorrows of the Mississippi Delta people just trying to live are things that he uses.

Of the gospel music he has said:

"The chord movement in those gospel pieces is great...the church feel...that mountain harmony, I like that real well; that's beautiful. I'm thinking about the sound of those chords that they have in those gospel pieces and their harmony and blues at the same time kind of make sense to me. It's the combination in there that seems to work, the rhythm and the sound of the barrelhouse, delta blues feel and that good, right kind of round church sound..."

Ry's music is a synthesis of four main elements: voice, mandolin, bottleneck guitar, and piano. His voice tells the story; the bottleneck fits in with his voice perfectly, in that it floats the same way. He trails off just as the sound shifts-maybe that's why people like his bottleneck so much. It holds just about anything together and does it so well it sounds like someone is singing along with him.

His mandolin flutters along and fills in the gaps left by his voice and bottleneck. Piano provides a backdrop that's sometimes light, sometimes not noticeable, but always audible when used.

"I really love guitar and piano together," that's something that hasn't been exploited too much. They sure made some great records in the thirties with guitar and piano...blues records...beautiful duets...I'd like to try to find a piano player that could handle that and most people out here on piano, it's really unfortunate...they're backed into a half assed sentimental heart song kind of thing...country piano, you know, that Hollywood studio sound...that's no good to me."

Ry stopped listening to people who couldn't feel what he did from the music of such people as Sleepy John Estes, Woodie Guthrie, and John Fahey.

"...At least I don't have to go to these sessions where they ask me to do some outrageous thing like put a fuzz-tone on the bottleneck. These Nashville refugees out here in the pop-music business, guys that come out and cut anybody...Ann Margaret doing "Louie Louie" or something....I mean wretched stuff. You can't go from day to day doing that, so I don't work very much anymore. But it's given me time to really form, put into a form, the music that I like, and I've come to enjoy it."

Cooder has his own musical identity now. He's taken traditional pieces and old folk and blues ballads and transformed them into contemporary pieces. There are very few like him today. He's someone that everybody should hear, not only for the experience of listening to his music, but also to get a glimpse of what's dead and gone, never to return.

Dr. John

In The Right Place
Atco SD 7018

By Mike Kostek

One of the more unfortunate trends in current popular music is that of the long song. No, not side-long "In-A-Gadda-Da-Vida"'s, but rather each and every song expanding to four and five minutes. Whereas there used to be at least twelve songs on every album (fourteen in England), today there are rarely more than ten. Whereas the old songs were almost all under three minutes long, you came out with some pretty short albums (the first Beatle album over a half hour long was Sgt. Pepper). These three minute ditties were something, however. Economical, tight, they did their number and got out. "Please Please Me" was a monster smash at 2:00. Elton John's "Rocket Man" was a monster smash at 4:40. Now, at least in AM Radioland, this difference means a lot of important things:

ONE. "Rocket Man" takes up twice as much airtime as "Please Please Me", so, since they've got to keep on pushing out those wonderful commercials, we're going to hear fewer different songs.

TWO. No one can doubt that hit singles are so because they have at least one catchy, hummable 'hook line' in them to grab the audience and keep the tune in their heads (hence the beginning of a famous saying: Once you're stuck on one of these songs, you're said to be caught "hook, line & sinker"). No one can doubt that hit singles tend to wear out extremely fast after say, 200 listenings, at which point even the best AM Chartoppers ("Maggie May", "Tightrope", "Killing Me Softly") become anathema to the listener once the 'hook line' has worn off.

From these two important things, we can draw several conclusions:

A.) Since "Rocket Man" is 4:40 and "Please Please Me" is 2:00 and since we assume that the 'hook line' is used twice as much in 4:40 than 2:00, it becomes obvious that "Please Please Me" will not wear out as fast as "Rocket Man" will, given the same number of playings and given listeners with equal dispositions toward both. I am willing to bet that people play Elton John albums, with their four and five minute cuts, only half as much as early Beatle albums, with their two minute cuts. If you get sick of "Please Please Me" after 100 playings, you'll be full of "Rocket Man" after only 50 listenings.

B.) Albums are certainly longer today, but with Beatle albums being played twice as much as Elton John albums, it stands to reason that true music fans are buying more albums than before, in search of placebos when Honky Chateau wears out.

C.) Considerable boredom emerges if Elton should make a four minute clinker. If you didn't like a cut on The Early Beatles, you had to bear it for only two minutes before it was gone. I wonder what the cumulative effect of listening to a song you do not like fifty times. Do you just get bored? Mad enough to get up and skip it? Do you get to like it? Or do you stop playing the record?

D.) Lastly, it is certainly a lot harder to write twelve good songs than it is to write ten, or nine or eight. It's even easier to come up with three songs and then elaborate on them for forty minutes a la Yes' Close To The Edge. It's also much tougher to say everything you want to say in two minutes (Rubber Soul is a masterpiece in this respect) than it is when you have four minutes to 'elaborate'.

Final Conclusion:

The music scene (ugh!) is as strong as ever. We're just getting tired of it a lot faster. If you really got excited about a two-minute song, you had to play it again and again for fulfillment. With a four-minute "Rocket Man" you only played it half as much and for half the total span in days, months etc., due to physical characteristics of our lives (the same dime that played "Please Please Me" will play "Rocket Man", and since we all have a fixed number of dimes...). Hence, you're probably interested in 'Elton John' for only half as long as you were interested in 'The Beatles'. You spent only half as long talking about Elton as The Beatles, half as long buying Elton John posters, joining Elton John fan clubs, etc.

Of course it all comes down to What Do You Have To Say? Can you do it in two, or do you need four? The short-range effects are more lucrative, since hearing a four minute song on the radio will imbue the listener with the magic 'hook line' twice as much as the two minutes will. Thus it makes for easier access to Top 40. But boy, don't they wear faster! I've got nothing against longer tunes, as long as they can justify their extra length.

As you might have guessed, Dr. John's (remember him?) new album is made up of mostly two and three minute songs, and its kept me buzzing twice as long as any recent release of comparable quality but longer songs.

It's a beautiful combination backing the Doctor, with The Meters (New Orleans' premiere band) playing and Allen Toussaint, famed N.O. soul producer, arranger, writer and artist controlling all the production. Allen has boiled all the fat out of this one, leaving us with just what's essential. Almost everything is perfect, and, most importantly, everything's here that needs to be. This is where recording genius comes in.

Outstanding in this collection of pearls is "Right Place, Wrong Time", a joyancy lament of missed opportunities and cosmic irony:

I been in the right place
But it musta been the wrong time.
And I done said the right thing
But I musta used the wrong line.
I been on the right road
But I musta took the wrong toin.
I made the right move
But I made it at the wrong time...

It's a superb arrangement with thumping bass, kinky-fuzz electric organ, bongos and a beautiful, 'natural' Dr. John vocal. As a single, it cuts "Crocodile Rock" by a mile.

Right after this is "Same Old Same Old", a weaker song made great by an arrangement that is about as good as one could do for the tune. More fonky fuzz piano, more bongos, horns, thumping soul bass and a perfectly understated half-spoken, half-sung vocal:

"Gotta go ta woik to get the braid to buy the braid to get the strength to go back to woik another day..." Chorus: "Same old me/Same old stuff/Same old woik/You don't make enuff."

If I were going to be stupid enough to try and label this music, I'd call it "Fonky New Orleans reggae soul".

Toussaint's "Life" is given a good treatment as is Mac's "Cold Cold Cold".

"Qualified" finds the Doctor in a playful mood, but with a vengence:

"Your champagne ain't no hipper than my soda pop.
Your social life ain't no better than my hot dog stand.
Your ed-ja-ma-kashun ain't no better than what you understand.
I may seem sick, and I may seem dumb–
That don't mean you know where I'm coming from;
Don't you know that I'm qualified?"

Except for two throwaways, each and every song is a delight, with lyrics that fit perfectly. There's even a voodoo song, "I Been Hoodood", for old times sake.

Okay, eleven songs, nine gems, and only one over four minutes long. I can't wait to stop writing this diatribe and go play In The Right Place again. I think the rest of The Business might learn something here.

Traffic

Shoot Out At The Fantasy Factory
Island SW-9323

By Steve Feld

Traffic's latest hexagoned offering has proven itself to be a sticky matter indeed. The common sentiment towards it has been singularly disappointing and unenthusiastic with words such as listless and soporific dominating most scathing critiques. The closing song, aptly named "(Sometimes I Feel So) Uninspired", has made it readily convenient for those unbelievers to pop off clever ironies about the present state of this once prolific rock group. Others, including this critic, have been fairly satisfied with it; more so, in fact, than with their previous Low Spark Of High-Heeled Boys. And so, before Shoot Out becomes dismissed, overlooked and underrated, let's add it up, compare, and see what happens.

"Shoot Out At The Fantasy Factory" is a better song than "Hidden Treasure", the opening song of Low Spark. The Achilles' heel of "Hidden Treasure" was Jim Capaldi's redundant and annoying lyrics. The verse always repeated itself in what could only be explained as sheer saucherie:

"Take a walk down by, (take a walk down by) the river.
You will hear the sound (you will hear the sound) of life." Its pervasiveness wrought havoc to a beautiful Stevie Winwood ballad.

"Shoot Out At The Fantasy Factory", on the other hand, is a cooker. It, like many other Traffic songs, sounds deceptively simple. The charm of the neo-Traffic lies in the way they embellish uncomplicated chord structures. They've been taking their time, stretching out and subtly experimenting with modes of instrumental punctuation and accentuation. On "Shoot Out" there's a lot happening. The bass plays loping octaves against Rebop's bopping congas, giving the song its foundation. The band plays in a loose call-response pattern while Winwood's guitar is alternating between high bending notes and low rip-saw fuzz figures. Winwood's vocal is a bit muddy, making it hard to discern the lyrics, but the song as a whole moves along at a fast, taut clip, abounding with some good liks from everyone.

"Roll Right Stones" and "Low Spark" are the twin brothers in this analogy. They are extended jam pieces that comprise the backbone of their respective albums. Once again, it's "Roll Right Stones" that comes out on top, going through more transitions and having a more solid structure. It starts out a whimsical ballad, steadily gains momentum, and surreptitiously ends up a kinky, rat-tat-tatting blockbuster. Perhaps the ending is just a mite too long, but it's easy to go with the flow.

"Evening Blue" and its Low Spark mate, "Many A Mile To Freedom" fare in a tie. Both are straight out of the Winwood oeuvre of touching ballads. The same goes for the "(Sometimes I Feel So)Uninspired" - "Rainmaker" vie, mainly because whatever preference is felt for "Uninspired" is being attributed to its newness. "Uninspired" is my favorite on the Shoot Out album, being a minor-key lament turned around into an affirmative major-key ode. Winwood performs his best vocal of the record, while all the gears of Traffic seem to mesh just right. The verse is hauntingly beautiful and nearly impossible to forget.

The remaining songs on both albums must, in the final analysis, be considered filler. From Low Spark, "Rock 'n' Roll Stew" was the offspring of two ex-members and primarily session-men Rich Grech and Jim Gordon; and "Light Up or Leave Me Alone" was Jim Capaldi trying out his chops in preparation for his solo album. Neither were pertinent to the album. Shoot Out pulls a quickie with Chris Wood stepping out on tenor sax with "Tragic Magic." An instrumental, written also by Wood, it carries with it the texture of the title song.

At any rate, Shoot Out winds out on top. Side one is clearly better, while the second side, at very least, is just as good. Let one person go on record as saying he likes Shoot Out At The Fantasy Factor better than Low Spark of High-Heeled Boys. Stevie Winwood is at the controls and up-front. Capaldi snould go back to drumming and allow Winwood's obviously exceptional leadership steer the path the group takes. This, more or less, seems to be the moral of our story.

Procol Harum

by David Sokol

Frand Hotel
Chrysalis CHR 1037

For almost a year, Procol Harum have been performing a whole batch of new material in concert. It hasn't seemed as impressive as their earlier works and I was prepared to be disappointed by Grand Hotel. As a Procolphile of the highest order, I've come to believe in Procol Harum as musical divinity, performing the best and the classiest contemporary music. A Salty Dog and Home have been religious experiences. To get to the point, Grand Hotel leaves me cold. It's not that it's not good because it is. It just lacks the magic of their earlier recordings. Nothing here comes close to an "In Held Twas In I" or a "Pilgrim's Progress" or a "Whaling Stories". The inspirational forces of Matthew Fisher and Robin Trower are sorely missed, making one realize how great Procol Harum once was.

Gary Brooker now composes all the music, and as always Keith Reid writes the lyrics. I've often thought of Reid's lyrics as poetry in the highest sense, and for the first time in a Procol Harum album, all the lyrics are printed. For the most part, they are not up to his earlier writing, although "Grand Hotel" (the song) and "Fires Which Burnt are fine. On the other hand, the lyrics to "T.V. Ceaser" and "Bringing Home the Bacon" border on the embarrassing. Perhaps Reid is trying too hard to be funny or cute, which is a shame considering his eloquent past efforts.

The musicianship on the new album remains awfully good although Mick Grabham's guitar work sounds uninspired, as though he doesn't mean it. I must note however that the first note in his "T.V. Ceaser" solo is impressive. In concert, both Grabham and bassist Alan Cartwright look as though they're merely going through the motions, without the feeling and emotion the music often demands. B.J. Wilson remains fantastic (very likely rock's most exciting drummer) and Chris Copping is good on organ. Brooker, the maestro, takes my breath away with whatever he does. Were he born in another era, he probably would have composed epic symphonies rather than epic songs.

With their switch to Warner Bros. Records and with their incredible comeback on Procol Harum Live and "Conquistador" (actually "Procol Harum for the millions" is a contradiction in terms), Procol Harum are about to have the greatest promotion in their history. They certainly deserve their newly found popularity, yet I miss the kind of intimacy, the limited cult feeling that Procol Harum gave me in the past, when they weren't very well known. Heck, the night all of my friends went to the senior prom, I purchased Salty Dog and I'm sure I was happier than all of them put together.

Warner Bros. claim that Grand Hotel is Procol Harum's best album can't be substantiated; but it is Procol Harum, and that by itself puts it above the great bulk of current releases.

A Nightmare Come To Life

By Mike Kostek

In Concert: Sha Na Na/James Cotton Blues Band at the Amherst College Field House, April 8, 1973

On Record: Sha Na Na: The Golden Age of Rock 'n' Roll Kama Sutra KSBS 2073-2 (recorded live)

This was a rather daring undertaking, as this show was the first large (3000 plus) paid admission concert in the Amherst area since the infamous Traffic 'accident' when 6000 people found their way into the UMass cage and helped set an all-time record of 10,000 people in the Cage. That was back in early 1971.

So Myself

So myself and 4000 other music lovers crammed into the Amherst College "Cage" (it certainly was; once you got in, you couldn't get out) for the show. I now know why they call it a 'field house' as we went in and sat down on-a field. Yes, 4000 kids sitting on a dirt floor for three or four hours do tend to kick up quite a dust storm, and combined with all the usual stagnant smoke supplied by our wonderfully thoughtless friends, made for a less than delightful environment. Please, Amherst and/or Smith, never pack another 4000 people in there without laying down mats or something. And be more careful with your posters next time too. Cotton.

However. All of these petty and not-so-pretty grievances melted away in the shining light of what we had all come for–music.

I don't know exactly how they do it, but everytime I see James Cotton, I say, 'nope, they don't have it tonight'. And somehow they always do have it, and really get things jumping. Sunday was no exception. They're limited as hell, playing in the narrow, good time, blow-out-the-rafters/gritty B.B.King blues category, but before the show is over, we're all standing. The guitar player knew his solid tricks inside out, and the drummer could handle his basic rythms well while flipping his sticks from hand to hand. However, it's still James who always comes through to grab the show bodily (spiritually?) and lift it out of the boogie-blues rut into that finer, higher catagory where stupid labels fall off, and sheer talent shines through. He sings blues like a gravel-voiced B.B., and plays harmonics with flash, imagination and skill. James Cotton is a forty-ish man who comes out in dungarees and a ridiculous knot golf shirt. He's not putting anyone on. If the music's going right, he'll do somersaults on stage, much to our delight, but theres nothing phony at all about this guy. James gets along fine on just his talent and needs no trappings to hype his music. Which may explain why he's still on the very limited college bar circuit.

Sha Na Na use (and need) trappings to hype their music. And they work. Fabulously.

It was a strange crowd. About ten or so came semi-greased (are the intimate days of Latin Larry gone for good?). Amherst proper is much too cool to come greaseball, and instead detached itself from the show and waited to be entertained. Where else can you see a guy sitting in the dirt eating sugarcane? Where else can you see a girl reading Karl Barth's Church Dogamtics? At a Sha Na Na concert?

Anyway, the twelve band members have got the 50's down pat. Bowser, the 105 lb. bass voice, slicks back his hair one more time and flips the spare grease off his comb and into the audience. A 300 pound cross between Burl Ives and Big Daddy Roth steers his way out on stage, middle-finger extended in a practiced manner. One by one the ten other members wend their way on, each with a certain schtick, a certain aspect of the fifties to cover, protect and project. And all in thorough pose of Sneer. Introducing them was a well-dressed Englishmen who shook his parasol at us and looked like H.S. Salt gone looney (pronounced lieu knee).

I hate the fifties, so it was eerie and a little frightening to see the almost perfect microcosm of that rank period assembled on stage; a nightmare come to life. There was a Gene Autry gone astray, now playing piano, with his moon face and stupid cowboy shirt. When the occasion called for it, he became Jerry Lee Lewis, playing his piano with his foot and riding it like a filly. There were greasy little Italians, a greasy, acne-ridden Chemsitry Major who's a real nice, shy kid, rending his insides out over Why He Must Be A Teenager In Love; a greasy Wally Cleaver-Elvis type; greasy, crazy WASPs, etc. Except for the three in the splash gold suits and the one tough comb playing jockey in a red & blue T-shirt, all the band wore black and white.

You can't just sit and watch, you have to fight to see everything, as the stage was covered with insipid inspired choreography, flying cowboys, or the Lenny B., the fat sax player, showing his unique way of illustrating the four chapters of "The Book Of Love".

They really can play, they all can sing, and they put on a tremendous show for all concerned. They were called back for four encores, and deserved them all.

If you were there Sunday, or have enjoyed them elsewhere, you can appreciate Sha Na Na's new live album, The Golden Age of Rock 'n'Roll as it will bring the magic of their performance back to mind. However, if you've never seen them live, then this will probably bore you. As a straight collection of old Rock and Roll, it's sort of stiff. It's when you know what happened when Bowser takes his spit in "Blue Moon" that the good times roll. So what it really boils down to is a long-playing souvenir. Sha Na Na earn over a million dollars in concert bookings a year, while their albums sell relatively little. I don't believe this new release will help this situation much.

The First Clown To Play The Cage

Clowns, music, balloons, animals, spectacle, suspense and just plain fun is coming to Curry Hicks Cage on the UMass-Amherst campus on Wednesday, April 18, 1973. The Emmett Kelly Jr. All Star Circus will perform two shows at 3:00 p.m. and 7:00 p.m.

Designed especially for the whole family, the circus will include such familiar T.V. stars as the clown Emmett Kelly Jr., the famous Daktari Animals, Judy and Thoto the Chimps, Tony the Wonder Horse, Gentle Ben the Bear, Clarence Jr. the Cross-Eyed Lion, and many many more.

The Circus is being sponsored by the Boltwood-Belchertown Project at the University of Massachusetts for the benefit of the Belchertown State School. Tickets are $1.00 for children under 14 and $2.00 for adults, and are available from the RSO office, Campus Center, University of Massachusetts.

Concentrating on two ingredients that most captivate audiences-- animals and clowns - this circus maintains all the excitement of the traditional big top shows.

The Circus has traveled throughout the U.S. including a show for Tricia Nixon's Halloween Party making it the first circus to perform in the White House.

Emmet Kelly.

When one thinks of a clown, the name EMMETT KELLY JR. comes in mind. Following in the footsteps of his famous father, Kelly has attained his own world-wide recognition as an ambassador of happiness. With his whimsical look as he trudges through a world of upsets and difficulties, he tickles the funny bone of even the most hardened audiences.

Judy and Thoto, the "Daktari" chimps, are natural performers who love the spotlight. Their act includes some staged scenes from "Daktari".

The biggest and most respected name in the animal world of show business is that of Gentle Ben the Bear. An accomplished actor, Ben starred in the motion picture "Gentle Giant" playing two roles, his mother who was shot by hunters and himself as the grown up cub. He also has his own T.V. series.

No circus is complete without an accomplished ringmaster, and the Emmett Kelly Jr. Circus has the very best. Austin Miles, described as being the most colorful showman since P.T. Barnum, is the most publicized and respected ringmaster in circus history. When Austin announces the proceedings, the circus assumes a symphonic majesty, as he waves and makes a flourish with his entire body, his scarlet coat tails flagging behind him.

"The First Clowns To Play The White House"

By A. H. Weiler

Such distractions as uncertain weather and overly energetic, vacationing youngsters notwithstanding, this is still the time to be merry. And the Emmett Kelly Jr. Circus, which began a week's stand yesterday at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, may do nothing about a gray winter but it certainly spreads some bright cheer among the local, sub-voting set.

It's a modest aggregation formed just a few months ago and this is their first visit here if you don't count a previous, short run in Westbury, L. I.

The Cast

THE EMMETT KELLY JR. CIRCUS.
Produced by Leonard Green; staged and directed by Austin Miles; animal trainer and supervisor, Derrick Rosaire; music director, Clement E. Toca; tour director, Sherman Pitluck. Presented by Circustime, Inc. at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. With Emmett Kelly Jr., Austin Miles, Judy and Thoto, Gentle Ben the Bear, Miss Tina, Tony the Wonder Horse, Les Thinis, The Blue Streaks, Phil Chandler, Terri Lewis, John and Tina, Louise and Bob, Lumie, Uncle Jake, Pamcia's Mad Mod Dogs, Clarence Jr., the Cross-Eyed Lion and Derrick and Pamela Rosaire.

And, says an enthusiastic tub thumper, "it's the first circus to play the White House—for Tricia Nixon's Halloween party." Sundry statistics aside, they're a happy group of clowns, trampoline and trapeze artists, skaters, a magician and, above all, some well-publicized animals, all of whom seem to enjoy their acts as much as their audience did.

Emmett Kelly Jr., is, of course, the 47-year-old son of the famed clown. And, he's proudly following—as he has for a good number of years— in his father's oversized footsteps as the "Weary Willie," tattered tramp with a bulbous, red nose and a woebegone expression. If he isn't on stage too often, his sweeping of imaginary dirt from the ring, his aping of a wire-walking bit, and his awkward pas de deux with Terri Miles, an authentic ballerina, are pleasing shtick that rate and get a hand.

The trampoline trio, Les Thinis, including 7-year-old Diana, make bouncing and somersaults eye catching and Miss Tina's twisting on a trapeze and the roller-skating of The Blue Streaks are swift diversions too. As noted, however, the animals dominate the show even if their trainers, Derrick Rosaire, his son, Derrick Jr. and his daughter, Pamela, obviously lead them through their paces.

Rosaire and Gentle Ben.

They're noted "actors," of course. There's Clarence Jr., The Cross-Eyed Lion of TV's "Daktari" series, out there in a cage in the lobby to greet the customers. More important, there's "Daktari's" chimps, Judy and Thoto, to ham it up pleasurably; Gentle Ben, the unmuzzled seven-foot, 700-pound bear, who's appeared in the movies and is as unferocious as his name while walking and wrestling; Tony the Wonder Horse, a palomino with enough trick's to enchant any kid and a pack of frisky dogs to jump hurdles and leap through hoops.

This is, in short, an amiable troupe that doesn't pretend to be the greatest show on earth even if Austin Miles, the ring master, resplendent in top hat red coat and black boots proclaims them entertainers for "children of all ages." It's for kids and for some grownups who, like this observer likes seeing kids having fun.

Ben And The Chimps

Star of his own TV series, Gentle Ben The Bear captivates audiences in the brand new "Emmett Kelly, Jr. All Star Circus". Relaxing between jobs at the farm of best pal and trainer Derrick Rossaire near Erie, Pennsylvania, Ben's favorite recreation is swimming in his own tree-lined pond. Rossaire gives Ben the run of the house, although Ben is now banned from the living room, his 500 pounds proving too much for the family sofa.

The bear with a sense of humor, Ben's capricious capers include the day he and Rossaire stood on a highway hitch hiking, amazing passing motorists. One nonchalant fellow in a Volkswagen casually stopped for this truly odd couple and sped them on to town.

Starring in the motion picture "Gentle Giant," Ben played dual roles: his own mother killed by hunters -- and himself as her grown cub. Proving to be a versatile actor, the only bear whose name is a household word also starred in his own TV series. Now performing with the delightful "Emmett Kelly, Jr. All Star Circus," Ben's millions of fans of fans will be happy to know that their favorite is coming to town in person.

Also international TV star favorites, "Daktari" chimps Judy and Thoto are featured in the new "Emmett Kelly, Jr. All Star Circus".

Between engagements the famous monkeys relax and learn around the huge farm of their trainer Derrick Rossaire. Enjoying the rustic relief of the lush countryside in the fall, these two playful cut-ups swing from fruit tree to tree, always returning home on time with armfulls of freshly picked apples. Devouring the fruits of their labor, well-mannered Judy and Thoto are always welcome at the dinner table for hot apple pie.

Loyal and protective of their family favorite Pam Rossaire, the two affection-trained enchanters carefully watch over their friend. If anyone makes a wrong move towards Pam, there will be two angry chimps to reckon with. With such loving rapport it is no wonder that Pam has developed an uncanny sixth sense, enabling her to actually communicate with the chimps.

Bergman's Retreat Into Himself

By Ed Meek

Cries and Whispers

Written and directed by Ingmar Bergman; with Liv Ullman, Ingrid Thulin, and Harriet Anderson.

Ingmar Bergman's "Cries and Whispers" is a passionate artistic experience for artist as well as audience. The film is quite personal and moves in and out of dream sequences, in and out of the conscious and unconscious mind of the director. It (the film) is an expressionistic personal statement if not confession by Bergman about things he has always felt, and the selective use of plush red, white, black and pastels, along with the intensity of Bergman's close-ups, bring out emotive responses from the audience that few directors are capable of evoking not to mention controlling. What Bergman began with was a dream of a lady in white in a red room. He drew associations to that image along with similar impressions as well as impressions from former films (Wild Strawberries, Persona, The Seventh Seal), and the result was Cries and Whispers. Unfortunately the film remains too personal, too obscure and troublesome for the audience because Bergman's impressions never quite reached fruition as a complete work of art, instead they remain visually and aesthetically beautiful, yet diffuse.

Cries and Whispers concerns three sisters and a maid before, during, and after the death of one of the sisters. We are presented with the associations (in thought) of the ladies at this time and these thoughts have their origins in various parts of their lives. The film attempts to share with the audience the experiences of the ladies and to associate these experiences with Bergman's vision of their life--the life of the ladies. The problem is, no coherent expression is achieved, no overall impression materializes, the audience doesn't quite know what to think because Bergman's vision remains obscure. Hence there have been reactions like Canby's--who says WOW but doesn't understand why, and there have been misinterpretations like Sarris' who says the film is about three humorless harpies engaging in marital Grand Guignol.

The three sisters presented by Bergman aren't humorless and the film is not humorless, in fact one of the problems of this film may in fact be the use of humor by Bergman. There is a scene in which the dialogue between two of the sisters ceases and they begin carressing and fondling each other, quickly and passionately, symmetrically as if they are missing a Carol Burnett Soap Opera Skit, and a cello fills the silence moaning conventional sentimentality. And there other comic scenes. A priest delivers a monologue over a corpse, and his speech is filled with anxiety and despair, self-pity, fear and trembling and other existential dribble which turns back on the speaker in its blatant, satiric, self-consciousness. Later, the corpse, wrapped in a white bonnet and nightie, sheds a Barbie-doll tear; and coming to life, she calls her sisters and maid to help her in her transition. There is the same type of undermining, irony which is at work (though here more subtlely) when the eldest sister sits with her legs up like a young girl in her white nightgown on the sheets before bed and for her husband who washes a smile on her face in blood drawn from a self-inflicted vaginal wound. Yes, these are strange scenes, strange also in the sense that they parody themselves, and in so doing, work against themselves. The same split, or oppostition of tone and content, is employed by Nabokov in Lolita, Murdock in Under the Net and Hesse in Magistrar Ludi. But, unlike these novels, the film does not create an overall impression of juxtaposition or bi-association which the audience can experience, that is, there is no coherent overall expression or series of meaningful impressions with which the audience can deal.

Liv Ullman and Ingmar Bergman on the set of Cries and Whispers.

There are strands from former films and personal impressions in shots and sequences which are beautiful, the close-ups of hands and clocks are executed with authority and precision and the recurring use of dissolves to red, the color of passion, anger sex and violence, the primal color of Western Civilization, is fantastic; and the use of sound in the film, the close-up sounds of objects dropping, of the clock, and of the sister dying, is terrifically intense but, these things do not provide enough of a base (metaphorically) to tie together the scenes of the film.

The actresses and actors are an important part of the perplexing vision Bergman had intended to share with us. They are always filling the screen with intense feeling and emotional depth. Anderson, Ullman and company fulfill Bergman's perceptions of the paradoxical relationships between men and women, and women and women. Their facial expressions often contradict what they say and then contort or change into alternate expressions. Seemingly the characters always turn back into themselves, and away from others. The characters, are exploited for conventional orarchetypal patterns of male and female behavior often to the point of sexism. We are presented with what Bergman sees as "the ladies" and, in many scenes they are what is conventionally thought of as "ladies" the white and black gowns with red background accentuates this effect. But actresses like Ullman and Anderson break through these masks into individuality, and there is no doubt, in my mind, that these characters are human and real, as there is no doubt that Bergman is an Artist, but at the same time, it seems that these characters never quite reveal themselves to us. The exception being the maid who, bless her, is not nearly as interesting as the sisters, and Bergman, who as an artist in this his most personal film comes out for fleeting glimpses, but like his characters, ultimately (consciously or unconsciously) retreats back into himself, away from his audience.

Theater

HOUSE OF BLUE LEAVES

Friday, April 20 will be the opening night of the fifth and last of this season's Theatre 14 productions at Smith College, Northampton.

"The House of Blue Leaves," a play by John Guare, is being produced by the Department of Theatre and Speech, and will have a run of four performances at 8 p.m. on April 20, 21, 27, and 28. In addition, there will be a final performance on the Friday of Smith's commencement weekend, May 25, at 9 p.m.

"The House of Blue Leaves" is a play that explores the darker side of human hopes and dreams, and yet is a comedy as well as a tragedy. The central theme of the play is the all-out efforts of its characters to avoid humiliation at all costs, which explains why the work is at once tragic and humorous.

At the heart of Guare's success with "The House of Blue Leaves" is the fact that he manages to convey a personal and sorrowful sense of frustration and ineptitude while still preserving a kind of detachment from the outrageous and amusing antics of these people who try so desperately to make their dreams come true.

Tickets for "The House of Blue Leaves" are available from the Box Office in the Center for the Performing Arts at Smith College weekdays between noon and five p.m., and one hour prior to performances.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY WANDA JUNE

Kurt Vonnegut's play will be performed by a touring company at the Campus Center Auditorium, Tuesday, April 17, at 7 and 10 p.m. Tickets are available for $1.50 in advance at the RSO Office, first level, Campus Center, Monday through Friday, 9 to 5, or at the door for $2.00. The play opened in New York in October, 1970 to the accompaniment of phenomenally enthusiastic reviews. To the surprise of absolutely no one, America's most successful contemporary novelist became, overnight, America's new successful playwright. In the words of the author, "Wanda June" is a simple-minded play about people who enjoy killing." Walter Kerr in the New York Times wrote: "Vonnegut reaches something the theater desperately needs. An imaginative mind. I find the thwack and the quack irresistible." Emery Lewis in the Record said: "Vonnegut has given us one of the wittiest, funniest and most abrasive comedies in many seasons. It must be vigorously applauded for nothing in town describes so accurately the sad comedy of contemporary American life." And Clive Barnes in The Times said the play was "richly and pertinently funny."

Music

THE BOSTON POPS

Ronald Hodges, professor of Music at Mount Holyoke College, will be piano soloist with guest conductor Arthur Fiedler and the Springfield Symphony Orchestra on Sunday at 3 p.m. in Municipal Auditorium.

Hodges will perform Rachmaninoff's familiar Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini, commemorating the 100th anniversary of the composer's birth.

The balance of this Family Pops Concert includes familiar light classical and popular selections for which Arthur Fiedler has become famous. This program marks the maestro's 12th season as guest conductor with the Springfield Symphony.

Good seats are still available and tickets may be reserved by calling 739-4728.

"The Matthaus Passion" of Johann Sebastian Bach will be presented Friday and Sunday at Smith and Amherst Colleges.

Performances, under the direction of Prof. Iva DeeHiatt of Smith College, will be at 7:30 p.m. Friday, in John M. Greene Hall, Smith College, and at 7:30 p.m. Sunday in Buckley Recital Hall, Amherst College Music Building.

Participating as double chorus will be the Smith College Glee Club, conducted by Prof. Hiatt and the Amherst College Glee Club, conducted by Prof. Bruce C. McInnes.

Members of the Amherst-Mount Holyoke Chamber Orchestra (Lewis Spratlan, conductor) and the Smith-Amherst Orchestra (William Wittig, conductor) will form the double chamber orchestra for which Bach scored his work.

Guest soloists will include Richard W. Donohue, tenor, as the Evangelist; Francis Hester, bass-baritone, as Jesus; Melinda Kessler and Gretchen d'Armand, sopranos; Joy Zornig and Jan Curtis, mezzo-sopranos; Jon Humphrey, tenor; David Evitts, baritone; and John Bogart, bass-baritone.

The performances will take place on Friday, at 7:30 p.m. in John M. Greene Hall at Smith College, and on Sunday, at 7:30 p.m. in Buckley Hall at Amherst College.

Both performances will be ticketed. Free tickets for the Amherst performance are available.

AIRPORT (1970)

Moviegoers should beware of films whose promotional posters are bordered by approximately twenty identical squares each filled with a close-up of a veteran Hollywood actor or actress. There is an endless list of incredibly bad films, from Pepe to The Poseidon Adventure, whose posters have been designed insuch a manner, Lost Horizon being the most recent addition to the list. Airport was 1970's contribution. These extravaganzas are usually crammed with innumerable subplots and more simulated suspense and rancid romance than all the combined episodes of television's Peyton Place. In their favor is rampant unintentional humor. Watching veteran actors and actresses plunge below the murky waters of bad acting and hit the rocky bottom of self parody is especially entertaining. With Burt Lancaster, Dean Martin, Helen Hayes (an Oscar) etc. Ross Hunter spent millions on this stratospheric thriller, but when the inevitable bomb explodes on board, didn't take us outside the cabin; Hunter never bothers with exciting special effects, only affected acting. George Seaton directed. Chapin Auditorium, Mt. Holyoke College, Wednesday, 4/18, 7-15

ASHES AND DIAMONDS (1958)

On the eve of peace from the Second World War, two members of the Free Polish Resistance are under orders to kill the new Polish secretary. Director Andrez Wajda felt it would be a marvelous theme to show, during the first night of peace, "the fate of a young man weary of heroism and having had a taste of a better life. Past and future sit at the same table to the sound of tangos and fox trots. The hero must obey the eternal dilemma: to obey orders or think for himself.

In Ashes and Diamonds, the third part of an unplanned trilogy with Pokolenie (q.v.) and Kanal (q.v.), a pattern of gradual disillusionment reveals itself. Its hard hitting bitterness and the restlessness of its central characters, a young man searching for a way out of his confusion, seems as much a reflection of the youth of Poland in the Fifties as of postwar youth. The New York Times wrote of this film: Wajda has shaped the story in strong and striking visual images. His sharply etched black and white action has the pictorial snap and quality of some of the old Soviet pictures of Pudovkin and Einstein. Facial expressions are highlighted, bodily movements are swift and intense and the light that comes in from the outside in the shaky morning is as dense as luminous smoke. Ashes and Diamonds is a hauntingly fascinating film because of its revelation of cinema candor in a Soviet satellite. It is brilliantly conceived and directed by Mr. Wajda, a one man Polish 'new wave'." Thompson 104, Tuesday, 4/17, 7 and 9.

THE BIG SLEEP (1946)

Raymond Chandler, from whose novel this film was adapted, has reported that while the film was in production the scriptwriters (including William Faulkner) implored him to help figure out the complicated plot. He couldn't and it is doubtful that any viewer will be able to patch this thriller together, even after the denoument. The plot, though, seems a slight device for Howard Hawks to build around. The atmosphere is the Night City of a distinctive amoral bent. A location which would turn up, in a more tawdry way, in later detective films. The story concerns a private eye called in to help two rich spoiled sisters. The dialogue is witty, sophisticated, and filled with exciting inneundos which audiences picked up with delight. The rogues gallery of characters is led by Humphrey Bogart as the detective, Lauren Bacall as the nicer of the sisters, Martha Vicker, as her thumb-sucking counterpart, and Dorothy Malone, whose bit part makes for the quickest seduction in film history. Nothing can diminish this film's enchantment, even Hawks's remark: "Neither the author, the writer, nor myself knew who had killed whom." Campus Center Auditorium, Saturday, 4/21, 7:30 and 9:30.

BOMBSHELL (1933)

One of the best satires of Hollywood ever made. Jean Harlow plays a leading sex star who only wants to settle down and have a family. Richard Watts Jr., writing film criticism for the New York Herald Tribune said: "For those of us who are enthusiastic for the increasing talents of the distinguished Miss Harlow Bombshell is chiefly important for the fact that it provides the first full length portrait of this amazing young woman's increasingly impressive acting talent. Campus Center Auditorium, Wednesday, 4/18, 9.

BROTHER SUN, SISTER MOON

Franco Zefferelli's youth operetta about the life and times of St. Francis of Assisi. He escapes the materialistic vacuum of his father's home, sees visions, and builds a commune-like mission for his band of fellow believers in the outskirts of Assisi. The film ends with a visit to the Pope and the sumptiously appointed finale recalls the best of Cecil B. DeMille by way of the worst of Busby Berkeley. A hokey stab at relevancy, beautiful to look at, but shallow and shapeless. Graham Faulkner plays the limp-wristed Francis, his sexless laison with Judi Bowker is meant to represent the purity of the celebite life, but it appears to be a fag-to-fag hag relationship. Alec Guiness plays the Pope in the greatest headdress since Carmen Miranda last blessed the screen with three-foot garlands of fruit piled on her head. With Guiness, its bejeweled. Donovan plays the plodding score. Begins Wednesday, 4/18, Showcase Cinema, West Springfield.

CABARET (1972)

The best American film of last year is this dazzling musical portrait of Berlin immediately prior to the Nazi takeover. It's the best musical since the great M—G—M, musicals of the Fifties and effectively alters the genre since the musical numbers are prisms through which we view the action. They are written by Fred Ebb and John Kander, who improved from the stage production. The direction of Bob Fosse crystallizes the gaudy night life of Christopher Isherwood's "Berlin Stories" from which this film was adapted. Liza Minelli is splendidly full-bodied as Sally Bowles with Michael York, Helmut Griem, and Joel Grey. Best Picture citation by the National Board of Review; eight Oscars, including direction, actress, supporting actor (Grey), film editing, and music scoring. Paris Cinema, Springfield. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

CHARLOTTE'S WEB

The newest cartoon, based upon the stories of E.B.White. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

CHARLY (1969)

A much-read short story, television play, and novel is the basis for this film about a mentally retarded adult whose teacher helps him become a hippie than-genius through a difficult operation and training. He and the teacher have an affair, but the magic wears off and he becomes retarded again. A high minded, sniffle movie; it's art the same way Marty and David and Lisa are: art of the biggest intentions and smallest negligable content. Your tears are manipulated in the crudest way possible; its truth is geared, like a machine. Cliff Robertson won an Oscar, with Claire Bloom. Filmed around Boston. Directed by Ralph Edwards. Gamble Auditorium, Mt. Holyoke College, Saturday, 4/14, 8.

CHILDREN OF PARADISE (1945)

Considered by some as one of the greatest films ever made it is a wonder that it was ever made. Twice the length of any film allowed by the Nazis in occupied France, scriptwriter Jacques Prevert and director Marcel Carne shrewdly avoiding German curtalement of their ambitious effort by making it into two films. Now one, this sumptuous romantic epic concerns thieves and actors in the Paris of Balzac.

Weekend (cont.)

The long, episodic plot has a triangular love affair at its center, but seems almost equally concerned with the illusions between the stage and reality. All the characters are larger-than-life and played with such romantic bursts that if you have a weakness for this sort of thing, the three-hour film will seem irresistable. James Agee said the film was as "close to perfection of its kind," and remains probably the most ambitious French film ever made. Hampden Dining Commons, Southwest, Tuesday, 4/17, 7:30.

CHLOE IN THE AFTERNOON

The final of Eric Rohmer's six moral tales. Rohmer makes very personal films and for many, this has been his most responsive. It has the subtlety and temperment of a classic, but the entire experience it presents is a bit like deciding whether or not you'll take one lump or two in your coffee. A man cannot decide whether to have an affair with a beautiful girl he once knew before he married. The film is so slight that you wonder why anyone with such obvious talent spent the time to develop it. A minority opinion, to be sure. A beautiful young actress named Zouzou plays Chloe. The film elicits responses from audiences such as "Didn't Chloe hold her cigarette sensually?" etc. Jerry Lewis Cinemas, Northampton.

CLASS OF '44

The inevitable sequel to Summer of '42. Directed by Paul Bogart, with Gary Grimes and Jerry Houser. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

THE CONFORMIST (1971)

A dazzling film; an exquisite mosaic of a young man's sexual and political conformity during the rise and fall of Mussolini's Italy. It is visually stunning, beautifully acted, and gloriously mounted, evoking the feel of the Thirties as no other film in recent memory has been able to achieve. Jean-Louis Trintignant is the young man who compelled to conform that he becomes a political assassin. Bernardo Bertolucci directs with a flair and a lushness that resembles the high drama of Italian opera. Its themes of baroque decadence and compulsive normalcy are intricately interlaced in a work that remains one of the rarest experiences in films. Dominique Sanda plays the sensual tiger woman Trintignant falls in love with and Stefania Sandrelli plays his beautiful, coy, empty headed wife. In Italian, subtitled. Student Union Ballroom, Saturday, 4/14, 7:30 and 9:30.

THE FIXER (1968)

John Frankenheimer's respectful but altogether flat and heavy version of Bernard Malumud's award—winning novel. The story tells of persecution in Poland during the early part of the century. Alan Bates plays a Jew who is a victim of Antisematic laws and his performance has a low intensity and feeling that makes it the best thing in the film. Otherwise Frankenheimer works off the Dalton Trumbo script as if it were stating revelations about human cruelty. It's the old Hollywood message film, handsomely photographed on location but burdened with all—too—reverent approach to its material. Frankenheimer made two extraordinary films in the early Sixties, All Fall Down and The Manchurian Candidate, but has since not fulfilled the promise of his early work. Student Union Ballroom, Saturday, 4/21, 7 and 9:30.

THE FLY (1958)

From the crushed head which is found in a workshop vise early in the film to the tiny cries of a man—headed fly at the fadeout, this film stands out as one of the gems of the Fifties horror films. It can be viewed either as a silvery nightmare or as a camp comedy classic, largely depending upon whether Vincent Price strikes you as a truly horrifying personality or as a leering, bumbling fool. Adapted from a short story by Daphne DuMaurier. Student Union Ballroom, Thursday, 4/9, 7 and 10:30.

FOR WHOM THE BELL TOLLS (1943)

Ernest Hemingway's novel about an American living with guerrillas during the Spanish civil war, and sacrificing his life for their cause, was made by Sam Wood into a disappointingly tedious and self-satisfied film in which the whole cast struck unconvincing attitudes, mostly in broken English. Katina Paxinou won an Oscar for her performance; Gary Cooper and Ingrid Berman seemed to wish they were elsewhere. The basic situation, incidentally, was borrowed ten years later by a Sterling Hayden second feature called Fighter Attack. Campus Center Auditorium, Monday, 4/15, 9.

THE HEARTBREAK KID

A refreshingly peculiar comedy about the transiency of love and marriage. Charles Grodin discovers on his honeymoon that he is no longer in love with his wife, Jeanne Berlin, and falls head over heels for beautiful and sensual Cybil Shepherd. As Groudin goes about getting rid of his wife and snaring his beauty, we are provided with many brilliantly acted, hilarious scenes. Director Elaine May uses a simple, detached approach to exploit the comic potential of this unusual situation. The film has a wonderful naturalism; there are many slow dolly shots and almost no background music. Unfortunately Ms. May uses this detached approach in her treatment of the characters as well. The viewer is not allowed to feel anything for the characters, especially poor Jeannie Berlin, who is mocked for her suburban Jewishness, milked for laughs, and disposed of mercilessly. Showcase Cinema, West Springfield.

THE HEIRESS (1949)

William Wyler's adaptation of Henry James's novel Washington Square. The story of an unattractive spinster who finally turns the tables on her money seeking suitor. Olivia De Havilland is superb as the spinster. She won both an Oscar and the New York Film Critics Award as Best Actress of the year. Ralph Richardson is splendid as her cold, heartless father; the National Board of Review voted him Best Actor of the year. The only sour performance is Montgomery Clift's overly mannered suitor. As a matinee idol the moody Clite seemed stiff and unconvincing too many smiles and not enough quile. Gregg Toland's deep focus photography is effective and the film's art direction; a turn-of-the-century New York town house is the setting, has been highly praised. Campus Center Auditorium, Wednesday, 4/18, 7.

IT HAPPENED ONE NIGHT (1935)

Regarded by all those involved in its making as a low-budgeted quickie, this film astounded (and worried) the Hollywood studio heads by becoming a box office sensation and by winning five Academy Awards—Best Picture, Best Director (Frank Capra), Best Screenplay, Best Actress (Claudette Colbert) and Best Actor (Clark Gable). It has been the only film in the forty-five year old history of the Oscars to win all five major awards. It worried the Hollywood establishment because it lacked all the standing component parts a successful film contained in the early Thirties. Claudette Colbert starred in this Columbia made film because her home studio Paramount was punishing her for some minor transgression; it was the best punishment she ever had. It, too, made Gable a super star and he has never been more likeable in a film. The success of this benign, delightful comedy changed the style of that genre for the next decades and continues to be one of the best remembered films of the Thirties.

At top, the two women in question of Francois Truffaut's Two English Girls. Below left, Graham Faulkner of Brother Sun Sister Moon, at right, Michael Cain in Sleuth.

"'THE CONFORMIST' provides a chilling fascination and a film so beautiful in its depiction of an era and so multileveled in its implication that I defy you to look away from the screen for its duration. Bertolucci's subtleties, his poetic passages and memory-stimulated imagery are overwhelming."

J.W. COOP

Praised by most critics yet ignored by audiences, partly due to poor bookings and timing, this drama about an aimless roedeo performer recalls both Five Easy Pieces and Fat City. Written, produced, directed by and starring Cliff Robertson, it is a surprisingly good one man show. Mahar, Friday, 4/13, 7 and 9:30.

KING KONG (1932)

The greatest film monster of them all makes his belated, triumphant and uncut return in this, the original print of the 1933 film. Kong eats a native and makes an obvious play at poor, captive Fay Wray in the footage that has returned from the cutting room floor. Lecture Room One, Merrill Science Center, Amherst College, Sunday, 4/14, 7 and 9:30.

LE MANS (1967)

A racing adventure film, with Steve McQueen. Campus Center Auditorium, Friday, 4/13, 7:30 and 9:30.

LIMELIGHT (1951)

Charles Chaplin said upon release of this film: "With age comes a keener sense of dignity, which prevents us from ridiculing other men." This film is the story of a once great comedian who has lost his touch and has taken to drink. He prevents a young ballerina from committing suicide and gives her confidence in herself. Georges Sadoul has written "This tragedy of Shakespearean grandeur, full of profound wisdom and human warmth, is in part undoubtedly autobiographical (the) film's numerous gags and comic routines are never merely diversions but are an integral part of its theme a theme whose tragic implications for the world in the 20th century." Some have called it Chaplin's greatest film, it is undoubtedly his swan song. Andrew Sarris in a recent Village Voice wrote that the best performance by an actor in any film put into general release last year was unquestionably Chaplin and the best performance by an actress was not Liza Minnelli but the young Claire Bloom who makes her film debut as the young ballerina. Also featured is Buster Keaton as Chaplin's music hall partner. Their scenes together recall the richness of their great silent comedies. Cinama X, Springfield.

LITTLE WOMEN (1933)
When the great performances of Katherine Hepburn are discussed, they usually come down to a handful. The madcap heiress of Bringing Up Baby, the sophisticated heroine of The Philadelphia Story, the career girl in Alice Adams, the tragic mother of the fictional Eugene O'Neill in Long Day's Journey Into Night, and her Jo in George Cukor's splendid adaptation of Louisa May Alcott's classic Nineteenth century novel. The story concerns a nice widow and her even nicer daughters and their pleasant adventures. George Cukor, one of the most sophisticated of American directors and certainly the finest director of actors ever to come out of Hollywood, infuses this cosy tale with charm and humor. It remains to this date his favorite film. With Paul Lukas. Campus Center Auditorium, Monday, 4/15, 7 and 9:30.

THE NAVIGATOR & ONE WEEK
Two classic films by perhaps the greatest screen comedy director of all time. The Navigator is one of Buster Keaton's finest feature films, similar to The General in that both films deal with runaway machines of awesome size and complexity. In The Navigator the runaway machine is an ocean liner with only Buster and a girl on board. Buster's ingenuity in dealing with the situation is both astounding and hilarious. Stonefaced, confident Buster puts together a prefabricated house in One Week. Both films to be accompanied by live music. Hampden Dining Commons, Sunday, 4/15, 7:30.

NOTORIUS (1946)
A beautiful American agent in South America marries the head of a group of German spies in order to watch him, although she loves another American agent. The Americans get the secrets but the wife nearly dies from slow posioning. This spy thriller includes some brilliant stylistic exercises; a traveling shot beginning in a ballroom and ending in a close-up on a key held in a hand; an enormous close-up of a poisoned cup of coffee; close-up of dancers' faces, etc. The two romantic leads are well played by Cary Grant and Ingrid Bergman, the head of the spies is nastily played by Claude Rains. Certainly one of Alfred Hitchcock's best films from the Forties, romantic melodrama at its best. Gamble Auditorium, Mt. Holyoke College, Sunday, 4/14, 7 and 9:30.

THE PHILADELPHIA STORY (1940)
Tracy Lord, a brittle heiress, is divorced from her husband, C.K. Dexter Haven, who still pursues her, and is courted by a gossip columnist, Mike Connor. George Cukor's version of Philip Barry's glossy comedy about manners and morals of the upper class is deft and engaging. Often hailed as one of the most successful films of its type, it is especially memorable. Director George Cukor's sense of timing, pacing, and use of dialogue has rarely been more evident. The chemistry between the three leads make the film irresistable. Katherine Hepburn came to the film following her success with it on the New York stage. It revitalized her sagging career. She won the New York Film Critics Award as Best Actress of the year. Grant, too, coming from his success with the two classic screwball comedies. His Girl Friday and Bringing Up Baby, both directed by Howard Hawks, gives another memorable performance. The true star of the film, though, is James Stewart who, in the film's second lead as a gossip column, steals the film and an Oscar from the hands of the deserving Grant. Mahar Auditorium, Friday, 4/20, 7.

PLAY IT AGAIN, SAM (1972)
Taken from his play, Woody Allen's least successful comedy, but by no means should be dismissed on that account. Allen is the only person in film today who lets us laugh at both his kooky looks and clumsy mannerism. Unlike Jerry Lewis and the Three Stooges his films are peppered with the shrewd witticisms and spicy one-liners, the results are the most successful blending of physical and verbal comedy since the Marx Brothers. What goes wrong here is that Allen's insane brand of comedy is leashed by an all too coherent plot and by Herbert Ross's all too conventional direction Mahar, Friday, 4/13, 7 and 9.

THE POSEIDON ADVENTURE (1972)
A harmless pop epic that aims to please but tends to disappoint. The film faults an incredible roster of second rate stars playing passengers on board a luxury liner which, on its final voyage, becomes capsized in the Mediterranean. The suspense is built on who will escape and how they'll do it. It's the latest in the series of assinine entertainments made popular in recent years, like Airport and Skyjacked. At the start the situations and relationships are contrived; the film picks up once the boat capsizes, but not much. The special effects and the capsize itself would look great on television. On the screen it has the anemic look of a production burdened with a light budget. The insides of the Poseidon are recreated from the Queen Mary and its great if you possess a fetish for the deep insides of luxury liners. The script plays off the worst sentimental responses and pretentions about life. As a hip preacher who attempts to save the day Gene Hackman appears to be a waterlogged Auntie Mame. The whole thing sounds like a wretched musical comedy -- you keep expecting Hakcman to break into a rousing revival number called "Let There Be Light." Shelley Winters sparks the film with a sympathetic caricature of a Jewish grandmother travelling to Israel with her husband, Jack Albertson; but their scenes together are filled with song cues out of Fiddler on the Roof. The remaining ensemble is strikingly mediocre; Ernest Borgnine and Stella Stevens are vulgar prototypes of Wallace Beery and Jean Harlow in Dinner at Eight. The film's best moments are the obese Shelly's underwater rescue attempt, Richard Neame directed, all too methodically. Campus Cinemas, Hadley; Calvin Theater, Northampton.

Jean Harlow, star of Bombshell.

SAVE THE TIGER
John G. Avildson has the mind of a juvenile anarchist. His films Joe, Cry Uncle!, and now this gem, work off of frightening premises as if they were some great philosophical cornerstone. This film concerns itself with the corruption of the great American hero, Willy Loman in his last ditch attempt to make good. Jack Lemmon plays a garment manufacturer named Harry who concotes a grandoise plan to fool both his customers and creditors through blowing up his warehouse and using his insurance money to finance those orders. Harry suffers from a grand social diseased called materialism and his illegal plot presented as an honest cure to his plight. It's a little like shooting your nose off because it's bleeding. Producer screenwriter Steve Shagan believes in the worth of this man and its an altogether satisfying achievement in hollow rhetoric. Jack Lemmon's performance is arch and unsatisfying; it's an ugly comeback role for him. John G. Avildsen directs in a sleek, pompous way as if the film was some sort of primer in achieving the new consciousness. Bunk. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

SLEUTH
One of those filmed plays which shouldn't succeed but does (and brilliantly) thanks to an exciting and ingenious screenplay by Anthony Schaeffer and the awesome acting abilities of Sir Laurence Olivier and Michael Caine. The film works by providing us with traditional formula mystery situations; and then refusing to let these situations play themselves out in a traditional manner. Joseph L. Mankiewicz's direction keeps the film from being too verbal, his camera probes and weaves in and about the English manor house where the unusual set of parlous games take place. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

THE SORROW AND THE PITY (1972)
Marcel Ophul's magnificent documentary. The film explores the psyche of the French citizen on the subject of the German occupation some twenty-five years later. The film explores its subject matter with a piercing intelligence and depth and reveals a difficult historical truth we find hard to accept. Sage Hall, Smith College, Saturday, 4/14, 7:30.

THE SOUND OF MUSIC (1965)
The musical, with Julie Andrews, neatly dressed children, smiling, singing nuns, Nazis, the Alps, and music and lyrics by Rodgers and Hammerstein. Directed by Robert Wise, now in super-wide screen which means the tops of the mountains are probably chopped off. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

SUNDAY, BLOODY, SUNDAY (1971)
John Schlesinger's remarkable drama about the break-up of a three-way affair. The film occurs over a ten day period prior to the film's young hero's departure for New York from London. He must break away from the two love affairs he is carrying on: one between a fortyish doctor, the other with a thirty-ish career woman. The young man, an artist named Bob, is beautifully cast and played by Murray Head. He suggests the fleeting, most intangible nature of youth which is finally simply accepted as a truth by his lovers. Glenda Jackson plays the young woman with ease and sophistication. She proves herself to be the finest dramatic actress on the screen today in this role. Peter Finch's doctor is unquestionably the best performance by an actor in any film in the past three years. It's a beautifully modulated performance, filled with pathos and humor. The script by film critic Penelope Gilliati has an elliptical design and often takes off on some tangents, such as a bah mitzvah, which act as commentary on the main narrative. The script concerns itself with the implausibility of emotional relationships in an urban society, and their paradoxical necessity. Schlesinger's most accomplished film to date. His annoying use of gimmicky devices is subdued and his rapport with actors is superb. Certaivy one of the best films of 1971, if not the best. Jerry Lewis Cinemas, Northampton.

THE SWORD IN THE STONE (1967)
If the Walt Disney cartoon world of the Sixties ilicits in you a warm and idyllic response rather than a complete horror at the sheer pastel perfection of it all, then this cartoon feature based upon the stories of T. H. White is the best of its type. It's a film you'll either love or hate; it's cute and provides two hours worth of total escape. Academy of Music, Northampton.

TOM JONES (1963)
Tony Richardson directed this very commercial, audience pleaser adapted from the classic Henry Fielding picaresque novel. Very slick and quite funny, though its impact on its audience depends so much upon the surprisingly convoluted plot and clever visual gags that a scenic viewing of the film turns it into an almost excruciatingly boring experience. With Albert Finney, who has never looked better in a movie than in this title role, Susannah York, devastatingly lovely, and the wonderful Dame Edith Evans who, not unexpectedly steals the show. An Oscar for best picture. Main Lecture Hall, Hampshire College, Friday, 4/13, 7.

TWO ENGLISH GIRLS (1972)
Francois Traffaut's profoundly touching examiniation of a three way love affair between two sisters and the same man that recalls the world of its director's third feature film Jules and Jim. The comparisons are inevitable since that film also concerned itself with the difficultues of living a trois; but there are noticeable differences between the films. Instead of the zestful, carefree spirit which pervaded the earlier film, Two English Girls is a work of subtle, sophistication and intelligence. The characters are more vividly drawn, the shots more exquisitely composed, and the color photography is slow, smooth, and simply beautiful. One of the best films of last year and another masterpiece from Truffaut. Amherst Cinema.

TWO PEOPLE
What is supposed to be a lyric romantic adventure, more and stylish and exciting than Love Story, sits on the screen like a product with assembly line sensibilities. It's a lumbering, sluggish romantic film directed with no style at all by Robert Wise. Some nice travelogue footage of Morocco. Peter Fonda and Lindsay Wagner, the latest of the Ali McGraw type ingenue, star. Palace Theater, West Springfield.

WOMEN IN LOVE (1970)
Ken Russell's intelligent and lush adaptation of D.H. Lawrence's novel. The film seems pale when compared to the florid and flamboyant style of his later films, The Music Lovers and The Devils, but his handling of the numerous subplots and themes of Lawrence's novel is admirable. The story concerns two sisters and their relationship with two men, one a middle class teacher, the other a wealthy coal mine owner. The film in concerned with the breakdown of class structure and sexual mores in Britain in the second decade of our century. Russell tones the film in colors; the mood to the film is reflected in its different hues. The acting by the principals is fine, especially Glenda Jackson who won an Oscar as the social climbing bitch. Jerry Lewis Cinema, Northampton.

YELLOW SUBMARINE (1968)
This feature length cartoon is a surrealistic voyage through Pepperland with Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band as they try to conquer hate with love. This feature length animated film is blatantly anti-Disney and breathtakingly original. The score is also remarkable and includes many standards, Beatle hits, plus a few songs written by the Beatles, especially for the film and also some lush theme music by George Martin. The Beatles like everyone else have long since abandoned their hope for love as panacea, but a breath of this Haight-Ashbury idealism is quite refreshing in 1973. Mahar, Saturday, 4/21, 6, 8, 10, 12.

Letters To The Editor

Indian Rights

To The Editor:
In Wednesday's Collegian, you wrote an article which reflected on the general mood of the campus ("Sometimes It's A Drag"). Basically students are content with the status quo, you contended, and "really don't give a damn."

You also maintained that members of the (left-of-center) political organizations were the only standard bearers for national political causes. I, myself, have been canvassing campus-wide to obtain signatures in suoport of the Wounded Knee and American Indian cause and have not found that to be the case.

Having taken the campus' pulse (as much as a single person can), I can agree with you that apathy has it's roots here, but do not believe that they are as well sprouted as you say they are. What you may not know is that there is a large minority of individuals who have strong feelings and have something to say, at least on the American Indian cause.

I have received only a small amount of signatures on the Wounded Knee petitions. At least two out of three students and faculty refuse to sign the petition. Why? Besides the apathetic, there are those who did not like the demands of the petition (respect of Indian civil rights and hands-off Indian land as recognized by the U.S. Government in Government-broken treaties). And there were those who claimed that they lacked the facts with which to make a rational decision. Lastly, there were the racists.

This action was the most numerous that I encountered. It was these people who "encouraged" me to publicize my findings on the editorial page with their most gracious remarks:

"The Indians should be thankful for what they have left."

"All those savages want to do is take, take, take." (How do you think the West was won?)

"If they are willing to work for it, they can get anything they want from the Government. Look at the advances those blacks have made."

"The only good Indian is a dead Indian . . . and that goes for blacks too!"

Those possessing the above opinions should open their eyes and expose themselves to available information just as should the indecisive and apathetic. Up until now, pertinent information has been minimal in the Collegian and close to nil in the more widely-read newspapers, so ignorance is not entirely the fault of the student.

It is the purpose of this letter however, to announce that information is available. It will continue to be available for those needing it to help them better decide where they stand in regards to Indian rights.

For better information: Come to the Wounded Knee meetings regularly announced in the Collegian; look for articles usually buried on the fourth or fifth pages of same; and, most importantly, keep tabs on primary resources. C. Bellacourt, National Director of the American Indian Movement (AIM), will be the keynote speaker at the Wounded Knee Rally next Wednesday afternoon in the Campus Center Auditorium. Keep yourself informed and take a stand. PEACE.

O'Brian's Quip

To The Editor:
After much deliberation I have decided not to let the significance of track coach O'Brian's "quip" in the 4/11/73 Collegian sports page pass unnoticed. O'Brian is quoted as saying that his good loss to Northeastern made his athletes feel "much better than if they had done the same against the likes of a New Hampshire." O'Brian in these few words eloquently laid bare the essence of his attitudes about the nature of track and intercollegiate sports in general.

I had the good fortune of running with the boys at the University of New Hampshire while in high school. As a result I know what it is like to work with "the likes of a New Hampshire" TEAM, as opposed to UMass' conglomeration of individuals.

In my opinion the essence of athletic competition should be a growing and sharing experience, the strong sense of comradery providing support for developing young men and women. Long after one's win-loss record has yellowed in the pages of scrap books one's love for sports and sportsmanship should remain steadfast. Indeed, if all one has gained after x years of intercollegiate athletics are medals and ribbons the program has failed.

Question of Guilt

To The Editor:
I am writing in reference to the letter "Spare Change?" (April 12). I think the point that has been made concerning the greediness of students blames the wrong party.

First of all, the Bluewall makes a helluva lot of money. For instance, they buy their kegs for around $17.50 and at $.30 a beer they make about $60.00 a keg. I don't have to take a business course to know that a 240% return on an initial investment is a good deal. I also agree that the $2.55 remuneration the bartenders receive per hour is not adequate. I know for profit maximization marginal revenue equals marginal cost, but have a heart.

Now, let me list some of my own gripes about the Bluewall. How about this? Have you ever wanted to have a few frosties and relax around eleven-thirty or twelve after booking? To your chagrin you find they still have the audacity to demand a cover charge, even though the band is paid for twice over and you will only hear them for a half an hour. Or even when you take this insult and enter only to find on top of this that the beer tastes like shit because they do not clean the beer lines that often enough (a practice required by law).

Miss Cordozo should question the management, not the students concerning monetary greed. To bring this home, I work from three to seven a.m. on every Monday morning (I have a 9:05 on Monday) for my $7.40 a week. I'll be God damned if they are going to get an extra cent of it. I earn my daily Schlitz!

I Like John Wayne

To The Editor:
I also happen to feel that Howard Bloom's April 9th article entitled "Sticker's beat Green" was a splendid work of journalism. I'm not sure whether Alan K. is Wright or wrong, but I do know one thing, no make that two things: I'm not a racist (that is at least I like Indians, hell, I co-authored an article about them at Wounded Knee recently) and I DO like John Wayne. After all, he has a marvelously umblemished record. Just think, can you possibly name one, just one war that John Wayne ever lost?

I think not. And the way I see it you've got to go with a winner.

P.S. I like Howie Spier

This Is The Truth

To The Editor:
This is to inform you that your charges of racism in The John Birch Society are completely false. This also goes with any association between JBS and the KKK.

If you really want the Society's views on prejudice read my editorial column of last March 23 entitled: "On Prejudice". This should explain it clearly enough to you.

I would also like to mention that the John Birch Society is composed of people of all races, colors, creeds (that believe in God), national origins and incomes who are dedicated to educating people about the dangers of communism and to awaken them about the rapid advances communism is making all over the world. The only ends we are after (with honorable means used to get them) are those of less government, more individual responsibility, and with God's help, a better world.

Mr. Spier, next time you go making accusations like that, know what you are talking about! I am a member of the John Birch Society and I have never seen any incidents involving racism within the Society nor in members relations with members of "minority groups". You would have to do one helluva lot of proving before you convince me that the JBS is bigoted. And don't try and associate us with the KKK either, we in the John Birch Society don't want anything to do with them.

So, Mr. Spier, this is the truth, whether or not you like it.

Wanna Make A Bet?

To The Editor:
A short while ago, Tom Hamel wrote a letter to the editor complaining about the biased articles that "coach-husband" Mike Kasavana has been writing about the women's gym team.

I cannot disagree with your opinion, Mr. Hamel, that there has been too much complaining about the officiating at the women's dual meets, and that Mrs. Kasavana has been emphasized a great deal. Mike is as biased as any coach towards the team he works with and as prejudiced as any husband towards his wife. But blined by biased or not, Mike writes what he thinks is true. If you complained about the judging he was not rying to make excuses; in his opinion, there was something definitely wrong. opinion, there was something definitely wrong.

I do disagree with your saying that the officials in the Regional meet "did not think that our girls were that great," or second place is what "almost everybody thinks our girls deserve." When you lose to the current national champions by .15 points, biased or not, you're doing pretty well. In a meet of that size, where the average is taken, several judges would have to be of the opinion that UMass was the better team. If you were at that meet, Mr. Hamel, you would have found it interesting to note the scattered booing that Springfield got when they took the first place trophy, and the much larger ovation that the second place team received when their trophy was presented.

Though I can see how you can draw the conclusion that Mike overcomplains in his articles, I disagree with your method of criticism. I did not like the nickname of "our poor little darlings" that you used for the women's team, nor the way the scandalous secret of Mr. and Mrs. Kasavana was revealed to the world. In short, I think you were insulting. You criticized the editor for accepting such biased journalism. That's silly, if the editor didn't accept biased journalism then your letter would never have been printed.

In your letter you said, "I'm willing to bet that our girls will get the same kind of scores from the country's top officials at the Nationals." In a gymnastics meet it doesn't matter what kind of scores you get so long as the scoring is relative and the winner wins, the runner-up takes second, etc. I do not know what the caliber of competition is like in the West, but I definitely think that UMass is a better team than Springfield College.

Therefore, I will wager a bet that the UMass team, regardless of its placing or its score, beats Springfield at the Nationals. If you have the guts to accept the wager and I lose, I will write a letter to the editor admitting that I was wrong and that I should never have written this first letter. If, however, you lose, you will write a letter to the editor apologizing to Mr. and Mrs. Kasavana, and the entire women's gymnastics team.

Guru Associate To Speak

Charles Lutes, a close associate to the Maharishi Mahesh Yogi and founder of the International Meditation Society, will speak in the main auditorium of Amherst Junior High School, Monday, April 16 at 8:00 p.m.

The lecture by Lutes, a successful businessman, will be free and open to the public.

Lutes will discuss the exciting possibilities that Transcendental Meditation now offers to everyone. "No discipline or change in life style is necessary," says Lutes. "It is so simple, even children can learn."

While thousands were being turned away from his lecture last Thursday in New York, the Maharishi remarked to an elderly friend: "People meditating now are gaining in prestige as well."

The capacity crowds now following him everywhere contrasted sharply with the many empty seats which greeted him only twelve years before.

With the support of scientific research, the Maharishi has demonstrated to a sceptical public that Transcendental Meditation (TM) is a useful and powerful practice of increasing health and stability of body and mind.

TM is essentially a practice of deep rest which allows the body to eliminate accumulated tensions and anxieties in a natural way.

Maharishi Mahesh Yogi

As reported in the Feb. (1972) issue of Scientific American magazine, in The Wall Street Journal, The New York Times, Today's Health, and many others, in meditation a state of rest occurs deeper than the depest phase of sleep. However, while the body in rest renews itself naturally, the mind becomes increasingly alert through contact with deeper, energetic levels of the thinking process.

throughout their activity. They are more energetic, the mind is clearer, ability to concentrate improves; and the body stabilizes, remaining calm amidst the demands of the dav.

Clearly TM is not simply a practice of deep rest, but a preparation for more dynamic activity; "just as the drawing back of an archer's bow," says Maharishi, "prepares the arrow for more powerful flight."

TM is practiced only twenty minutes, twice daily.

Carnegie Professor Guest Of Chem. Dept.

John A. Pople, Carnegie Professor of Chemical Physics at Carnegie-Mellon University, will be a guest of the department of chemistry at UMass from April 23 to May 11. He will deliver a course on "Molecular Orbital Theory," as well as a special lecture entitled "Quantum Mechanics and Chemistry" during this visit.

Dr. Pople was born in Burnham, Somerset, England and received his undergraduate and graduate education at Cambridge University where he was a pupil of Sir John Lennard-Jones. Subsequently he was a Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, lecturer in mathematics at Cambridge, and then superintendent of the Basic Physics Division of the National Physical Laboratory at Teddington. Since 1964, he has been at Carnegie- Mellon University in Pittsburgh, Pa.

A theoretical chemist who has worked on molecular applications of quantum and statistical mechanics, Dr. Pople is the author Dr. Pople is the author of a number of papers on liquid structure, spectroscopy, and molecular or- of organic compounds. He is co-author of texts on high resolution nuclear magnetic resonance and on approximate molecular orbital theory.

His awards include the Smith Prize (Cambridge 1950), the Marlow Medal (Faraday Society 1958), the Irving Langmuir Award (American Chemical Society 1970), and the Harrison Howe Award (American Chemical Society 1971). He is a Fellow of the Royal Society and a Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences.

Star Party At O.H.

The UMass Astronomy Club will sponsor a "star party" tomorrow night from 8 to 12:30. People who own telescopes of any size are invited to bring them along. Refreshments will be served.

If the weather on Saturday isn't suitable for observing, the party will be postponed until Sunday, April 15. This will take place in the field surrounding the Orchard Hill observatory, near the Orchard Hill dorms. The general public is invited.

Asian Studies Program Announced

The Asian Studies Program announced that the Board of Trustees has recently approved new majors in Chinese and Japanese. These majors emphasize the study of language, literature, and culture, and are designed to develop substantial foundations of language facility within humanistic curriculums. The Asian Studies Program now offers four years of modern Chinese (Mandarin) and Japanese -- the latter two years of each language are devoted to the study of various aspects of literature -- and three semesters of classical Chinese, plus many lecture courses (in English) on various aspects of literature, linguistics, and culture.

For more information on these courses as well as the many other UMass and Five-College courses dealing with East, South, and Southeast Asia, please see the ASIAN STUDIES COURSE LIST, and the FIVE-COLLEGE ASIAN STUDIES COURSE LIST (both are available in the Asian Studies Program office).
